And then time glided on sadly, but pleasantly as well. Mine was a busy life, for soon my father took to his bed, ill—a bed he never left again, for he gradually sank and died, leaving my poor mother in very indifferent circumstances.

It was a hard blow for us both, for he had been one of the kindest and truest of men, but while poor mother pined and waited, I had my hopeful days in view, and from time to time letters from dear Jack, all so true and honest and full of trust in the future that I felt as if I could not repine even when greater troubles fell upon me.

For at the end of two years I was standing by the bed-side where lay poor mother, sinking fast. She had no particular ailment, but had literally pined and wasted away. The bird had lost its mate of many years, and when at last she kissed me and said "good-by," it seemed to me to be in a quiet, rest-seeking spirit, and she spoke like one looking hopefully forward to the meeting with him who had gone before.

But she could think of me even then, and almost the last whispered words were:

"Only eleven months, Grace, and then he will be back to fetch you."

Poor mother! she would not have passed so peacefully away if she had known that which I withheld—namely, the news that came to me from our lawyer. For, through the failure of the enterprise in which my father's savings had been invested, and which brought us a little income of £60 a year, I was left penniless—so poor in fact, that the furniture of the cottage in the little town, to which we had moved when we left the farm, had to be sold to defray the funeral expenses.

It was very hard to bear, and for a month I was terribly depressed; but there was that great hopeful time, ever drawing near—the end of the three years, when Jack would come to fetch me to be his wife.

It was now for the first time that I remember feeling particular about my personal appearance, and I studied my glass to see if Jack would find me looking carewom and thin, and my glass told me truly—yes.

But I had to be up and doing, and before another month was over, through the kindness of people whom we had known, I was placed where I could work contentedly for the bread I must earn til Jack should come to fetch me away.

It was at a large West End dressmaker's, and it was hard work to get used to the hurry and excitement of the place, where there were twelve girls living in the house, and as many more came every day.

There were all kinds of petty pieces of tyranny to submit to at first, and I suppose some of the foolish girls were jealous of me and my looks, so much so that I found they nicknamed me "The Beauty." Poor girls! If they had only known how little store I set by my looks they would have behaved at first as they did later on.

The first thing that won them to me was when Mary Sanders was taken ill with a terrible fever. Mme. Grainger was for sending her away at once, on account of her business and the infection, but the doctor who was called in, a young, impetuous, but very clever man, told her that it would be at her peril if she did so, for Mary Sanders' life was in danger. So the poor girl was shut up in her bedroom without a soul to go near her except a hired nurse, and after the first night this woman staid away.

No one dared go near the poor girl then, so I timidly asked leave to nurse her, for I felt no fear of the infection, and it seemed so hard for her to be left there alone.

I obtained leave, and went up-stairs, staying with her till she recovered; and from that day there was always a kind look for me and a kiss from every girl in the place.

What was more, oddly enough, perhaps because I was so quiet and restrained, first one girl and then another came to make me the confidant of her love secrets and ask my advice.

I gave it, such as it was, though heart-sore myself, for Jack's letters to me had suddenly ceased. We had corresponded so regularly; but it had struck me that his last two letters had been formal and constrained; they were full of business matters too, and he had hinted at its being possible that he should not be able to keep time about the three years, in consequence of some contract.

I did not think this when I first read these letters, for then I had kissed and cried over them, but when no reply came to my last, I re-read them, and the coldness seemed apparent.

But I waited and waited, and then news came from the country. Jack's father, a widower, had died suddenly; and I said to myself, with throbbing heart, as I longed to be at his side to try and comfort him in his affliction, "Poor Jack, he will come home now."

But he did not come, neither did I get any reply to my last two letters. Another month and the three years would be up; and, as I sat over some work one spring morning by the open window, with a bunch of violets that one of the girls had brought me in a glass, the soft breeze that came floating over the chimney-pots and sooty roofs wafted to me the scent of the humble little blossoms, and my eyes became full of tears, for in an instant the busy work-room had passed away, and I was down home by the river-side listening to dear Jack, as he asked me to be his wife.

Only a month! only a month! my pulses seemed to beat; and as it happened we were all busy upon a large wedding order, and I was stitching away at the white satin skirt intended for the bride.

I tried so hard to bear it, but I could not; the rush of feelings was too great. Another month and he was to have fetched me to be his wife, and I had not had an answer to my last two fond and loving letters.

As I said, I tried hard to bear it, but I could not, and stifling a sob I hurried out of the workroom to reach my attic, throw myself upon my knees by the bed, and burying my face in my hands I sobbed as if my heart would break.

For a terrible thought would come now, fight against it as I would—"Jack had grown tired of waiting, and has married another."

I fought so hard with the disloyal thought, but it would come, and I was sobbing passionately, when I felt a soft arm steal round my neck, a tender cheek laid to mine, and I found my poor tear-dewed face drawn down upon the bosom of Mary Sanders, who had stolen out of the workroom, and come up to try and comfort me.

"Pray, pray, don't fret, my darling," she whispered. "Madame will be so cross. Those wedding things must be in by to-night, and they want you to help try them on."

I don't know how I got through that day and night, but I believe I did such duties as were expected from me mechanically, or as if I had been in a dream, and at night I lay wakeful and weary, with aching eyes and heart, thinking of that dreadful idea that was trying to force itself upon me.

I waited till the three years had expired, and then, with what anguish of heart no words can tell, I wrote to Jack again—my fourth letter—begging him, imploring him, to answer me, if but to tell me he was weary of his promise and wished to be set free; and then, making a superhuman effort over myself, I waited, waited, month by month, for an answer, though I knew that it must be at least six months before one could come.

I had given up expecting one in the interim, and I was too proud to send to his relatives—distant ones, whom I had never seen, and who had probably never heard of me. The thought had taken root now and grown to a feeling of certainty, but I waited for my answer.

Three months—six months—nine months passed away, and hope was dead within my heart. They said I had grown much older and more careworn. Madame said I worked too hard, and the sharp business woman became quite motherly in her attentions to me. But I would not take any change, for work was like balm to me; it blunted my thoughts; and, knowing that I was daily growing pale and thin, I still waited.

I knew the girls used to whisper together about me and think me strange, but no one knew my secret—not even Madame, who had more than once sought my confidence; and so twelve months passed away—four years since Jack had left me.

It was not to a day, but very nearly to the time when he had parted from me, and it was almost two years since I had heard from him. I was trying hard to grow patient and contented with my lot, for Mme. Grainger had gradually taken to me, and trusted me, making me more and more her right hand, when one glorious spring morning, as I was coming out of the breakfast-room to go up-stairs to work, she called me into her little snuggery, where she sat as a rule and attended to her customers' letters, for she had an extensive clientele, and carried on business in a large private mansion in Welbeck street.

"Grace, my dear," she said, taking me in her arms and kissing me, "it worries me to see you look so ill. Now, what do you say to a fortnight in the country?"

A fortnight in the country! and at her busiest time, with the London season coming on.

I thought of that, and then, as I glanced round at the flowers and inhaled their scents, the bright fields near Templemore Grange floated before my dimming eyes, a feeling of suffocation came upon me, and the room seemed to swing round. I believe that for the first time in my life I should have fainted, so painful were the memories evoked by her words, when a sharp knock and ring at the door echoed through the house, following instantly upon the dull fall of a letter and the sharp click of the letter box.

It was like an electric shock to me, and without a word I darted into the hall, panting with the excitement and my hand at my throat to tear away the stifling sensation.

But it was a letter. I could see it through the glass in the letter-box, and I seized it with trembling hands, inspired, as it were, by some strange power.

"Jack! dear Jack at last!" I gasped as I turned it over and saw it was a strange, blue, official-looking letter, formally directed to me.

Even that did not surprise me. It was from Jack, I knew, and I tore open the blue envelope.

Yes, I knew it! The inner envelope was covered with Australian post-marks, and, ignorant as I might be with its contents, I was raising it to my lips to cover it with passionate kisses when I saw it was open.

Then a mist came over my mental vision for a moment, but only to clear away as, half stupefied, I turned the missive over and over, held it straight for a moment, and then, with a sigh of misery and despair, I stood mute and as if turned to stone.

"Grace, my child! In mercy's name tell me——"

It was Madame, who passed her arm round me and looked horror-stricken at my white face and lips. The next moment I dimly remember she had caught the letter—his letter—my letter—from my hand, and read it aloud: "Mr. John Braywood, Markboro, R. County Melbourne," and then, in her excitement, the great official sentence-like brand upon it, "Dead!"

That was the beginning of my first and only illness, during which Madame tended me like a mother, even to giving up her business afterwards, and retiring to live with me here in this quiet street, where she died, and left me well-to-do, as you see. I have grown old since then, but I am not unhappy, great as was the trial, and it has led me into what I hope has been a useful life. And, besides, why should I sorrow, knowing as I do that which came to me years and years after—that Jack died with my name upon his lips—died true to her he loved? and I am but waiting till we shall meet again.—Geo. Manville Fern in Cassell's Magazine.

Battle-Scarred Presidents.

The Cincinnati Commercial, commenting upon the statement of a contemporary that Gov. Hayes, if elected, would be "the first President who, in battle, has had a limb fractured, or received a bullet-hole," says: "The writer had evidently forgotten the historical fact that President Monroe, when a Lieutenant in the Revolutionary army, was severely wounded by a bullet in the shoulder at the battle of Trenton. President Jackson had two bullet-holes in his person—not received in battle, however, but in private combat. In his duel with Dickinson, in 1806, he was shot in the left side, breaking a rib, and inflicting other injuries, from the effects of which he suffered for the remainder of his life. 'It was Dickinson's bullet which killed Andrew Jackson at last,' says Parton, his biographer. In his affray with the Bentons in the city of Nashville in 1813, he was desperately wounded by a pistol shot. The weapon was loaded with two balls and a large slug. The slug took effect in Jackson's left shoulder, shattering it horribly. One of the balls struck the thick part of his left arm, and buried itself near the bone; the other missed. Before the bleeding could be stopped two mattresses, as Mrs. Jackson used to say, were 'soaked through and through,' and the General was almost reduced to the last gasp. He could not mount his horse without assistance when he started in his campaign against the Creek Indians, and at no time during the war was he able to wear an epaulette upon the injured shoulder on occasions of ceremony, without suffering intense pain. The bullet in the arm was not extracted for twenty years, and until after he was President.

"Of our other military Presidents, Washington, although frequently exposed to great peril, notably at the battle of the Monongahela (Braddock's defeat), where his uniform was perforated with bullets and several horses were killed under him, escaped without wounds. Harrison was never hit. At Tippecanoe he seemed to bear a charmed life, for he was well known to the Indians, and many of the best marksmen sought especially to kill him. Colonel Owen, of his staff, who happened to be mounted on a horse belonging to the General, was killed, under the belief that he was the General himself. Taylor was struck by a ball on the buckle of his sword-belt in the battle of Okechobee, during the the Florida war. It sickened him at the stomach for a moment, but did no further harm. Pierce, who was a Brigadier in the Mexican war, was so seriously injured by the falling of his horse, on the day preceding the battle of Contreras, that he fainted upon the field at the beginning of that action, and was compelled to relinquish his command. The circumstance gave rise to much ungenerous satire in the election campaign of 1852. We remember that some Democratic editor, in describing the battle, spoke of it as a "sharp conflict." The editor of the Louisville Journal admitted that fact, as Pierce fainted at the edge of it. Grant was never wounded. He had a horse killed under him at Belmont.

Worse than Savages.

[Constantinople Cor. New York Tribune.]

A Polish gentleman has arrived here from Bulgaria, who was himself in the Polish insurrection, but has long been in the service of the Turkish Government. He says that all the barbarities of Russia in Poland were as nothing in comparison with what he has seen with his own eyes this month. His own Turkish guard cut down every man, woman and child they met on the road, spite of all he could do. If the Turks would content themselves with simply killing their victims, it would be something; but this is not all; they inflict the most horrible tortures upon these poor defenseless people—burn them alive, cut them in pieces, mutilate them in every way possible. There is no excuse for these barbarities in Bulgaria, such as has been offered in Bosnia and Herzegovina. There is no evidence that even the armed Bulgarian insurgents have committed any similar outrages against the Turks.

A CURIOUS OLD TOWN.

Interesting Historical Localities in an Ancient Place on the Mississippi River.

[St. Louis Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The old French town of St. Louis, which was laid out more than 100 years ago, was eleven squares long and four squares—and precious short ones at that—wide. It extended from what is known now as Biddle street to Poplar, and from the river bank to Fourth street. This was its condition in the earlier days when it was yet a French town and paid its tribute to the French crown. In the year 1807 it was ceded to the United States under the consulate of Napoleon I., and was at that time a growing young city of 13,000 inhabitants. There is a building here which stands at the foot of Christy avenue and in the shadow of Eads' bridge of the nineteenth century, which was built in the year 1715 by Regis Loysel, who came down from Canada in the year 1714 to buy furs. He built it for a warehouse, and built it strong, with thick, stone walls, small windows, and a long sweep of roof. After 161 years of tolerably active service it still stands pretty firm on its pins and invites the public patronage with its sign, "The Live and Let Live Saloon—Lodging, Wine and Liquors, Boarding-house, Tobacco and Cigars, Liquor five and ten cents a drink!" In England they would have fenced in such an historic building, and charged four pence admission to see it; in Boston they would have torn it down to make way for a new street; here they put a low grade gin-mill into it and give everybody a chance, and our republican institutions are thereby glorified.

Down at the foot of Chestnut street stands another monument of the early history of the city. It is the old warehouse of Cyprian Chouteau, and was built in the year 1746, the walls being of stone cemented to the bed-rock which underlies the city. A sidewalk sixteen inches wide runs along the entire length of the building, and Chestnut street at this point is only a little more than twelve feet wide. This building, crowded, as it must be, with historic memories, is now occupied by the "Louisiana Exchange," and offers an inducement to the wayfaring men in the way of "five cent beer and pretzels." When he built this structure, Chouteau had already followed the windings of the Missouri river a distance of 800 miles northwest of here, and had established his fur-trading agencies in what is now Dakota Territory, not far from the region of the Black Hills. Still further down the landing, and opposite where the steamer Grand Republic lies moored, is the building of Sila-Brent, an English trader who came here in 1770 and, like the others, went into the fur trade with the Indians. This building shows the characteristics of English architecture in its broader doors and windows, its higher ceilings, and its old-fashioned high roof, protected with fire walls. More substantial, it is less ornamental than its neighbors, and shows the plain but steady habits of the nationality to which Mr. Brent belonged.

There are half a dozen other old landmarks which are pointed out to the stranger who wants to contrast St. Louis ancient with St. Louis modern, but they do not materially differ from those already spoken of.

When you are standing on the landing in front of Cyprian Chouteau's venerable pile, dedicated to Mammon 130 years ago, and looking across the long lines of steamboats which lie moored at the wharf, you catch an occasional glimpse of the green trees on the opposite side of the river. If your curiosity leads you to step down to the deck of one of the boats you will see an island off to the left, a little beyond midway of the stream. That is Bloody Island, another place that bears historic interest. There one morning in February, 1824, Thomas H. Benton, after pacing on the bank for half an hour, holding a piece of ice on his pulse to steady his hand while he waited for Lucas, his opponent, took his place marked off by the seconds and shot that opponent dead in his tracks. There, too, the famous duel between Spencer Pettis and James Biddle occurred, the most horrible that ever occurred in this country. Pettis, in the year 1837 or '38, was a candidate for Congress. It was about the time that the old United States Bank went under, and, in the course of his canvass, Pettis had charged that Nick Biddle had stolen money belonging to that institution. James Biddle, a brother of Nick, was living here at that time, and for the utterance of that charge he challenged its author. Pettis took no notice of the challenge, though, and after being elected went on to Congress and served out his term. At the end of that time he came back and announced that he would not be a candidate for re-election. Then he published a card in the papers saying that he was no longer the representative of the people, but was now his own master, and this being the case he accepted Biddle's challenge. Being the challenged party he named the place of meeting, the distance, and weapons. The place was Bloody Island, the weapons horse-pistols and the distance three feet. With their seconds they repaired thither one bright morning in May, and standing face to face, and separated by a handkerchief between them to mark the distance, they both fired, each one killing the other instantly.

These and a half-dozen other such stories connected with its history give Bloody Island its name, and show the character of public sentiment that used to prevail here even after St. Louis ceased to owe allegiance to the French crown and become a factor in our American system.

PRIOR to 1817, there had been three Congregational churches built in Lyme, Conn., and they were all struck by lightning and burned down. Then the church now standing in the center was built, and the bill for liquor drank during the work was over $500. At that time every one was taxed to support the gospel, and, if he did not pay, his property was seized and sold at the post.

A FRONTIERSMAN was requested by the Sheriff to come to the jail to identify an inmate who was charged with a serious offense. "I'll go and look at him, but I'm not going to be familiar with him until he apologizes for shooting my brother-in-law last fall," was the naive reply of the guileless child of the flower-bespangled prairies.—*San Antonio (Tex.) SELF-MURDER.

Alarming Increase of the Suicide Mania in the United States.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

Suicide in the United States is reaching a point where we are warranted in competing with France, both in the number of those who shuffle off the mortal coil, and in the unique methods and motives of the operation. The uncouth Indiana farm-hand, whose machine for self-murder has already been described in these columns, has never been rivaled by any madman in France in cool and horrible ingenuity, and the papers during the past week or two have contained narratives of suicide, the motives for which are as strange and unaccountable as ever impelled any Frenchman to jump to the life to come. This mania for suicide is worth the attention of the moralists and the psychologists, not alone for the alarming frequency of its manifestations but for the apparent insufficiency of cause that leads to it in so many cases. There are instances where suicide is not an unnatural crime. A man may be afflicted with a painful and incurable disease. He may have suffered agonies with it for years until life grows to be a burden and death is a happy release, and rather than suffer on without hope he takes his life and ends his misery. A man may be broken down in health, hopelessly ruined in business, persecuted with creditors, deserted by his friends, and see no avenue of escape from his sufferings except by self-murder. A man in an unguarded moment may have committed some dishonorable action, and unable to endure his shame or to bear the pricks and stings of conscience he frees himself from his mental torture in the only possible way. In all these cases, although they show a lack of covrage, there is a sufficient motive. It has operated since the creation of the world and will continue to do so to the end of the world, assuming that cowardly people will live until that time.

There are numerous cases, however, in which no decent cause can be shown, and some for which there is no cause, decent or indecent. In New Jersey, the other day, one little girl attempted to take her life because she had been naughty and felt badly about it, and another because her little companion had died and would be lonesome in Heaven without her. It might be possible for a very maudlin person to extract a grain of sentimentalism out of these juvenile suicides, but the average opinion of sensible people will be that, if the parents of these precocious self-murderers had been more profuse in the use of the birch upon their darlings, they would have had more sense. In Atlanta, Ga., a few days since, Miss Lily Harrison, a school-girl of 15, daughter of the most prominent Methodist clergyman of that city, threw herself into the river rapids and was drowned. The Columbus (Ga.) Sun says that, "On reaching the bank, which is about forty yards, slope to the water, she discovered a Mr. Names, who, standing not far off, she thought, and correctly too, was watching her. She immediately rushed for the river. Mr. Names pursued her. When he was within forty feet of her she had reached the water's edge—she tore her collar loose in front, looked around with a smile as though exulting over a conquest, gave three swings and leaped from the rock." A very melodramatic exit from the world, but no cause is known why the young girl should wish to make any exit at all. In New York city, last Sunday, a young lad of 16, clerk in a banking-house, shot himself, and no cause is known why he did it. Sometimes the motive for suicide verges on the ridiculous, as in the case of Diedrich Braunlieben, 62 years of age, and old enough to have known better. This precious fool cut his venerable throat because his second wife refused to go with him and assist in paying his respects to the grave of his first wife. The only creditable feature of the affair is that he had the good taste to cut his own throat, instead of getting mad with the second Mrs. Braunlieben and cutting hers.

For the suicide of fools and madmen, of grown-up male idiots and adult maudlin women, we may at least invent some excuse, but what excuse will be sufficient to explain this dreadful propensity of children to commit self-murder? What possible cause can there be that the dawning of life should be so clouded over? Young life never has a denouement of tragedy. There is no situation in childhood so desperate and distressing that there is not a strong probability of relief. The sky is not always overloaded in youth. The storm and shine alternate in every young life, however hard the circumstances of its surroundings may be. Despair only springs from the accumulations of years and the buffetings of fate continuing until the victim is no longer able to endure them. The cause of these juvenile suicides is hard to find, because, in a natural, healthy child, the whole course and condition of life tend in an opposite direction.

The Ants of Africa.

When they grow hungry, the long file spreads itself through the forest in a front line, and attacks and devours all it overtakes with a fury that is quite irresistible. The elephant and the gorilla fly before this attack. The black men run for their lives. Every animal that lives in their line of march is chased. They seem to understand and act upon the tactics of Napoleon, and concentrate with great speed their heaviest forces upon the point of attack. In an incredibly short space of time the mouse, or dog, or leopard, or deer, is overwhelmed, killed, eaten, and the bare skeleton only remains. They seem to travel night and day. Many a time have I been awakened out of sleep and obliged to rush out of the hut into the water to save my life, and, after all, suffered intolerable agony from the bites of the advance guard, who had got into my clothes. When they enter a house they clear it of all living things. Cockroaches are devoured in an instant. Rats and mice spring around the room in vain. An overwhelming force of ants will kill a rat in less than a minute, in spite of the most frantic struggles, and in less than another minute its bones are stripped. Every living thing in the house is devoured. They will not touch any vegetable matter. Thus they are, in reality, very useful (as well as being dangerous) to the negroes who have their huts cleared of all abounding vermin—such as immense cockroaches and centipedes—at least several times a year. When on their march the whole insect world flies before them, and I have often had the approach of a bashikouay army heralded to me by this means. Wherever they go they make a clean sweep—even ascending to the tops of the highest trees in pursuit of their prey. Their manner of attack is an immense leap. Instantly their strong pincers are fastened, and they only let go when the piece gives way. At such a time this little animal seems animated by a kind of fury which causes it to disregard entirely its own safety and to seek only the conquest of its prey. The bite is very painful. The negroes relate that criminals were, in former times, exposed to the path of the ants as the most cruel manner of putting them to death.

The Business Outlook.

The woolen trade, like the cotton manufacture, has had a great trade sale, and set a basis for future action. About $800,000 worth of woolen goods were thrown into last hands by this sale, and are now passing under the tailors' shears, whence they ought to reappear in clothiers' prices even lower than those now current. These great sales fill the market for the time being, and the cotton manufacturers, discouraged by the probability of a general omission of dividends on the 1st of July, talk of a concurrent suspension of the production of print cloths, and some other staples, for a month. The Sprague mills have closed, throwing 10,000 operatives out of employment. The iron industry seems to be having more of a revival than almost any other. There continues to be groaning in the pig-iron manufacture, but we notice the manufacturers yielded to the puddlers, recently, on a strike at Pittsburgh, rather than close their works. Trade in some specialties is brisk—particularly in screws, in wire-cloth and wire manufacture—the Washburn works, at Worcester having a business fully up to last year's. About 25,000 tons of iron rails were ordered of American makers in May—one-half of them for Tom Scott's Texas-Pacific road. Meantime, our manufactures are being pushed abroad with considerable activity. American agricultural implements now have their excellent qualities advertised by many of the largest dealers in England. There will be a continued convalescence of business through the current year, and by the time the election is out of the way, and a new administration, with no financial doubts, is inaugurated, we shall be ready to enter on a new epoch of healthy industry.—Springfield Republican.

The Late Gen. Custer.

George A. Custer was born at New Rumley, O., Dec. 5, 1839. He graduated at West Point Military Academy in 1861, and, the civil war having broken out, was appointed Second Lieutenant of cavalry, and was present at the battle of Bull Run, and afterwards was employed in the defense of Washington. From October 1, 1861, to February, 1862, he was absent on sick leave. After recovering, he rejoined the army, and was additional aide-de-camp to Gen. McClellan during the campaign on the peninsula and that in Maryland, being Captain of staff. He served through the entire war and took part in more than 60 engagements in which cavalry were employed. In the volunteer service he reached the rank of Major General. He was mustered out of the volunteer service Feb. 1, 1866. In the regular army he received several promotions, the highest being that of Brevet Major General. His regular rank, however, was that of Lieutenant Colonel. As such in the Seventh Cavalry, he was, in July, 1866, ordered to frontier duty in the Northwest. About 1872 the Indians in this region began to be troublesome, and Custer was engaged in many encounters with them with almost uniform success. In the summer of 1874 he conducted a large military and scientific expedition into a region among the Blue mountains, hitherto wholly unexplored, which was found to be well-watered and fertile, and apparently abounding in mineral wealth. He has published, from time to time, papers in various periodicals, describing his experiences in this region. These, with more or less revision, have been published in a separate volume, "Life on the Plains," New York, 1874.

Health and Longevity.

It would seem from statistics gathered by medical men that invalids are more likely to attain a great age than are the healthy and robust; and that life assurance companies would be wise to accept them as patrons, instead of rejecting them, as is now the custom. In a recent lecture by Dr. R. Southley, it is declared that:

"Health and longevity are not synonymous; neither are health and great muscularity. The most muscular men, great prize-fighters, men who could fell an ox with their fists, have been known to be always ailing, and complaining about themselves. The state of perfect training, regarde dby those who know little of it as a condition of the most perfect health, is rather one of morbid imminence. Longevity, like height, is a race attribute, but it does not signify health. The three oldest people I ever knew—women who reached respectively 89, 98, and 100—were valetudinarians, and had been so nearly all their lives."

HENRY HOLLENBACK, of Owego, got drunk and threw his 5-year-old boy into the Susquehanna river. Another man rescued the boy and left him on the bank unconscious. Then the father took up the child and attempted to knock out his brains against a stump. Thereupon the neighbors concluded that they ought to interfere, and Hollenbach was arrested.

IF life and health is worth anything, take Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier. It will impart vitality and strength, renovate the system and purify your blood. Dr. J. H. McLean's office, 314 Chestnut street, St. Louis, Mo.

THERE are only two gallons of whisky per year manufactured for each inhabitant of the United States, and it is a clear case that somebody's got to go without.

Which Shall I Take?

This is often a serious question with the invalid. He finds the market flooded with proprietary medicines, scores of which are recommended as certain cures for his peculiar ailment. He reads the papers, circulars, and almanacs, and finds each sustained by plausible arguments setting forth its virtues and specific action. The recommendations are as strong for one as for another. The cures claimed to have been wrought by one are as wonderful as those claimed to have been wrought by another. In his perplexity and doubt, the sufferer is sometimes led to reject all. But it should be borne in mind that this condition of things is one that cannot be remedied. In a land where all are free, the good—the truly valuable—must come into competition with the vile and worthless, and must be brought to public notice by the same instrumentality, which is, advertising. In such a case, perhaps the only absolute proof that a remedy is what it claims to be, is to try it. The "test of a pudding is the eating of it." "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good," is the apostolic injunction. There may, however, be stronger presumptive evidence in favor of one remedy than there is in favor of another, and this should be allowed its due weight. A due regard to this may save a vast amount of experimenting and a useless outlay of money. As presumptive evidence in favor of Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, the proprietor desires to say that they are prepared by a new and scientific process by which the virtues of the crude plants and roots are extracted without the use of a particle of alcohol. Not a particle of this destroyer of our race enters into the composition of either his Golden Medical Discovery or Favorite Prescription. This consideration alone ought certainly to rank them high above the vile compounds saturated with alcohol, Jamaica rum, sour beer, or vinegar, which are everywhere offered for sale. Again, they are of uniform strength, and their virtues can never be impaired by age. They are also made from fresh herbs and roots, gathered in their appropriate season, when they are flush with medicinal properties. In support of these claims, the following testimony is offered:

R. V. PIERCE, M. D.: NEWARK, N. J.

DEAR SIR: I have sold a great deal of your excellent remedies, and I prefer to sell them before others, because they give good satisfaction to those who use them. I hear such remarks as "Sage's" Remedy completely cured me; it is a splendid thing;" or, "Pierce's Discovery is just what I wanted; I feel better than I ever did." One of our celebrated singers uses it for strengthening her voice, and says "there is nothing equals it;" and so I might give scores of remarks said about your preparation. A colored woman was using your Discovery, and, after taking three bottles, was completely cured. She, being in the store, said to me, "I don't want no doctors 'round me so long as I can get the Discovery; it beats all your doctors." And so I might go on. I am, most respectfully, yours, ATHA B. CROOKS.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic.—In the atmosphere experienced here during the summer months, the lethargy produced by the heat takes away the desire for wholesome food, and frequent perspirations reduce bodily energy, particularly those suffering from the effects of debilitating diseases. In order to keep a natural, healthful activity of the system, we must resort to artificial means. For this purpose Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is very effectual. A few doses will create an appetite and give fresh vigor to the enervated body. For dyspepsia, it is invaluable. Many eminent physicians have doubted whether dyspepsia can be permanently cured by the drugs which are generally employed for that purpose. The Sea Weed Tonic in its nature is totally different from such drugs. It contains no corrosive minerals or acids; in fact, it assists the regular operations of nature, and supplies her deficiencies. The tonic in its nature so much resembles the gastric juice that it is almost identical with that fluid. The gastric juice is the natural solvent which, in a healthy condition of the body, causes the food to be digested; and when this juice is not excreted in sufficient quantities, indigestion, with all its distressing symptoms, follows. The Sea Weed Tonic performs the duty of the gastric juice when the latter is deficient. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is sold by all Druggists.

The Wonders of Modern Chemistry.

Sarsaparillian and Its Associates.

Changes as Seen and Felt as They Daily Occur after Using a Few Doses of

DR. RADWAY'S

Sarsaparillian Resolvent,

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

1. Good spirits, disappearance of weakness, languor, melancholy; increase and hardness of flesh and muscle, etc.

2. Strength increases, appetite improves, relish for food, no more sour eructations or waterbrash, good digestion, calm and undisturbed sleep, awake fresh and vigorous.

3. Disappearance of spots, blotches, pimples; the skin looks clear and healthy, the urine changed from its turbid and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color; water passes freely from the bladder through the urethra without pain or scalding; little or no sediment; no pain or weakness.

4. Marked diminution of quantity and frequency of involuntary weakening discharges (if afflicted that way), with certainty of permanent cure. Increased strength exhibited in the secreting glands, and functional harmony restored to the several organs.

5. Yellow tinge on the white of the eyes, and the swarthy, saffron appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively and healthy color.

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs or tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucous from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate, (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in diseases that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhea and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphiloid ulcers; in dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers, and in tubercles of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets; in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture, wherein this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hopeless to a new life and new existence, where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

"THE VIBRATOR"

1000 SOLD LAST SEASON WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION

This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE NICHOLS, SHEPARD & CO.
"VIBRATOR."

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz.: our Improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

All Goods Retailed at Wholesale Price

This is the Only Secret of Our Immense Trade.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. The importer has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and wholesale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prune Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these intermediate profits. No middlemen with us. We are having a great run on Prunes. The Finest

PRUNES ONLY 8c A POUND.

They hardly ever sell lower than 12½c. and when you consider that Dried Apples are 12c, we all know a pound of Prunes will go farther and are considered much richer eating.

Custer plunged into the Little Horn fight after a forced march of 125 miles in three days. The night before the battle he had ridden 33 miles, and right on top of that, attacked.

Hon. Lyman Trumbull, the able and distinguished statesman, of Illinois, who so long led the republican majority of the Senate of the United States, declares for Tilden and Hendricks, and officers to take the stump in their support.

The Albany Argus says: "The Democratic National Convention makes a new era in the history of the democratic party. It was thoroughly aggressive in its character. It was composed of fresh representative men; men from the people, who understand the people's wants, who would stop at no compromises."

Chandler, Morton, Cameron and Shepherd do not support men who dictate and are not dictated. They know their man Hayes, and they are familliar with his simple weakness. Should he be elected, the present rascals of the party would hold the reins of Government and keep up the misery, prostration and bankruptcy of the country.

Hayes says he would refuse a second nomination The people in Ohio know what that means; he invariably refuses just before accepting to the cruel disappointment of competitors. He would be, like Grant up to the last moment at the Cincinnati convention, where he thought the lightning might strike, telegraphing that he was in the hands of his friends.

In building houses, people are very apt to sacrifice comfort and convenaince for sake of mere appearance. A little though in the arrangement of rooms and doors would often save the housewife many a weary step; and a few dollars spent in sidewalks and porches yields rich return in saving labor and promoting general happiness.

Our farmers are discouraged. In many localities wheat has already began sprouting, while a large amount of hay has been too badly damaged to amount to anything. Corn is said to turn yellow, and there are many fields which have not had a cultivator in them On the whole, farmers have had a hard time of it for the last four weeks with the almost incessant rain.—[Warsaw Union

The South Bend Register says, that the wheat crop of St. Joseph county was never so abundant. Land which has never yielded more than twenty bushels to the acre, is this year producing from thirty to thirty-five bushels. All available help is procured in this rich harvest; even women and children are mustered in for their share of the work, and are kept busy from early dawn to far into the night.

The postal department have issued a Centennial envelope and stamp. The embossed stamp is in the form of a shield, inclosing a mounted postboy, a train of cars and a telegraph pole with wires as the principal figures. There will be two sizes, the stamp in one being green and the other in vermillion. Their issue will be discontinued at the close of the Centennial exhibition but those extant at that time will continue valid.

According to an Indian report, Gen. Custer killed six Indians; three with his pistol and three with his sabre, before he fell. Some Indians also report that his body was mutilated and his heart cut out, and that one Indian chief Rain-in-the-Face, carried the heart away, held an Indian dance over it. The mutilation part of the story is a lie, probably, as the officers reported Custer's body unmutilated, with the exception of one shot in the head and one in the chest.

Brigham Young is the father of sixty-three children, forty-five of whom are living. More than half of these are females, and, with but two or three exceptions, all are blondes, and none what may be called beautiful. The last child born unto Brigham is a little girl, about six years old, daughter of Amelia Van Cott, Brigham's fourteenth wife. She is a woman of about forty, rather pretty and the next favorite to Amelia Folsom his eighteenth wife. No. 18 is credited with having a high temper, and it is said that she treats Brigham as if she were his mother-in-law instead of his wife.

On Saturday last the Fast Mail Trains was discontinued. The appropriation for that sort of amusement has given out. Fast Mail Trains were a benefit to some people, but the world will manage to get on without them. They demonstrated that railroad trains could be run with considerable rapidity but the accommodation to the business public was hardly enough to justify the wear and tear. When the Post-office Department is prepared to run fast trains from the West to the East as well as from the East to the West we shall welcome the revival of rapid transit in postal affairs. We never did like the unjust discrimination.—[Cincinnati Enquirer.

We have a number of Republican subscribers who may be somewhat offended at the red-hotness of this coming campaign. We do not wish to offend them, but by telling plain homespun truths we expect to convert many of them to the faith that is solid in our Republican institutions, and to a respect for a government not managed by cliques and rings, and thieves made rich by the hard earnings of the honest people. The COURIER works for the people. It labors for the interests of the people. It opposes Hayes because he endorses Grantism. It opposes the Republican party because its leaders are bad men who use the party to enrich themselves. Subscribe for the COURIER and listen to its honest teachings.

Postmaster Gen. Jewell, the Fort Wayne Sentinel says, has been forced out of the Cabinet, and a machine politician named Tyner, of this State appointed in his stead. Mr. Jewell has been suspected and openly charged with managing his department in the interests of the people. It has been asserted in certain quarters that he has broken up some corrupt rings, and rid the department of some fraudulent contractors. We don't know that these accusations have ever been clearly proven; indeed we believe they have not. But the fact that an officer of the Government is suspected of doing his duty, is enough for Grant. He wants nobody around him who is not a "reliable Relican," or who is tinged with Bristowism. It is safe to predict that straw bidders will flourish under Tyner.

Respect Due to Wives.

Do not jest with your wife upon a subject in which there is danger of wounding her feelings. Remember that she treasures every word that you utter. Do not speak of great virtues in another man's wife to remind your own of a fault. Do not approach your wife with personal defects, for if she has sensibility you inflict a wound difficult to heal. Do not treat your wife with inattention in company, it touches her pride, and she will not respect you more or love you better for it. Do not upbraid your wife in the presence of a third party, the sense of your disregard for her feelings will prevent her from acknowledging her fault. Do not entertain your wife by praising the beauty and accomplishments of other women. If you would have a pleasant home and a cheerful wife, pass your evenings under your own roof. Do not be stern or silent in your own house, and remarkable for socibility elsewhere.

Richland County Shouts for Tilden and Hendricks.

Mansfield, Ohio, July 9.—One of the grandest ratification meetings that has ever been held to ratify the nomination for President and Vice-President was held here on the 8th to ratify the nomination for Tilden and Hendricks. Long before the time of meeting, the public square was filled with citizens, who turned out "en masse." One feature of the meeting was the great number of Republicans present, who took great interest and seemed to feel that the time had come for a change in the affairs of the country. Hon. M. D. Harter, who presides in the absence of Hon. B. Burns, who is confined to his home by sickness, supported Hayes for Governor last fall. He is the manager of one of the largest manufacturing establishments in the country, and has come out for Tilden. His influence will be felt. A grand torchlight procession passed through the principal streets, leaving the Republican ratification meeting to the shade. Quite a number of Republicans were on the stand. Speeches were made by Hon. M. D. Harter, John C. Burns, M. May, R B. McRay, James Seward, D. T. Custer, and others. Take all in all, it was one of the best meetings ever held here. The Young Democracy raised a splendid pole in the Third Ward. Richland county is good for 900 for Tilden and Hendricks.

Promises That Won't be Kept.

Speaking of Gov. Hayes' letter of acceptance, Col McClure, the noted Liberal of the Philadelphia Times, takes occasion to observe: "That Hayes would prefer just such a government as he foreshadows in his letter, we do not doubt; but when he comes to administer it, will he hurl the swarm of Cameron placemen from power in Pennsylvania? Will he empty out the Conkling dependents from end to end in the Empire State? Will he ostracize the Morton tribes of reckless officials in Indiana? Will he turn back the hands in the desolate South and destroy the Clayton, Spencer, Bruce, Patterson, Dorsey and Pinchback hosts of plunderers? If his pledge means anything in the line of honesty, it means that he will sweep the whole civil service out of place and end the degenerate power of Grant by calling new officials to every public trust, over the heads of the leaders who have disgraced their service by their favorites and partisan henchmen. This, Mr. Hayes dare not do; and more, he does not mean to do it. Had he given an honest thought to the broad pledge he has made to a nation that is sick at heart with the greedy partisan hacks, forced into place by the men who made Mr. Hayes a Presidential candidate, he would have paused before uttering so shallow a political deceit."

Great Forepaugh Show.

Of this stupendous aggregation, which is to exhibit at Waterloo, Tuesday August 1st, 1876, the Detroit Free Press of May 30th writes:

"The opening performances of Adam Forepaugh's great equestrian aggregation took place on the convenient grounds, corner of Third and Grand River streets, yesterday afternoon. The attendance was large, and the visitors all seemed very much gratified at the exhibition. The menagerie is one of the finest in the country, and comprises some rare animals not hitherto attached to traveling shows. Among these are the horned horse, tapir, nylghau, rhinoceros, aard vark, African eland, sea lion and fierce grizzly bear. The animals are contained in some forty cages. They are all in good condition, and the best specimens of their respective species. This part of Forepaugh's aggregation is a most attractive feature; in number and completeness far ahead of any menagerie that has visited this city in years. It is a source of perennial delight to the youngsters, very instructive withal, and calculated to excite the admiration of every beholder.

The performances of the five trained elephants is simply amazing. These gigantic animals go through such exercises as standing erect on their hind legs, waltzing, walking lame, rolling casks with the fore feet, ringing bells and playing on hand organs, balancing, mounting column-like pedestals and posturing upon that elevation, finally grouping themselves together in the form of a pyramid, in the precise manner represented upon the bills, and doing all with an ease, and docility and amiability of temper charming to behold. These intelligent animals are commanded by Adam Forepaugh, Jr., who scarcely does more than indicate his wishes by gestures, and they at once obediently comply.

"The equestrian and gymnastic features of the arenic performances are uniformly good. Mlle. Armstrong is a daring and graceful rider; Remeo Sebastian, the famous pirouette and somersault rider, is well known in this city as an equestrian who has no superiors in his specialties; William Forepaugh does some wonderfully daring feats of balancing upon the trapeze bar; George Cutler, the Walhalbas, Dunbar and others, perform surprising actions in the way of leaping, tumbling and somersaults; there is a large force of good riders, and Burke, the principal clown, and his associates, Franklin and Bliss, are among the merriest and most original fellows that "cavort round the circle." In short, Forepaugh's circus is first-class in every respect, and affords a most enjoyable method of recreation.

CONSCIENCE AND FUTURE JUDGMENT

I sat alone with my conscience,
In a place where time had ceased,
And we talked of my former living
In the land where the years increased.

And I felt I should have to answer
The questions it put to me,
And to face the answer and question
Throughout an eternity.

The ghosts of forgotten actions
Came floating before my sight;
And things that I thought were dead things,
Were alive with a terrible might.

And the vision of all my past life
Was an awful thing to face,
Alone with my conscience sitting
In that solemnly-silent place.

And I thought of my former tremblings,
Of a judgment day to be;
But sitting alone with my conscience
Seemed judgment enough for me.

And I wondered if there was a future
To this land beyond the grave;
But no one gave me an answer,
And no one came to save.

Then I felt that the future was present,
And the present would never go by,
For it was but the thought of my past life
Grown into eternity.

Then I woke from my timely dreaming,
And the vision passed away,
And I knew the far-away warning
Was a warning of yesterday.

And I pray that I may not forget it,
In this land before the grave,
That I may not cry in the future,
And no one come to save.

So I sit alone with my conscience,
In the place where the years increase,
And I try to remember the future
In the land where time will cease.

And I know of the future judgment,
How dreadful so e'er it be,
That to sit alone with my conscience
Will be judgment enough for me.

THE GALLANT SEVENTH.

A Circumstantial Narrative of its Desperate Fight with the Sioux.

Gen. Custer started on the 22d of June, at 12 o'clock, marched about fifteen miles, and encamped on the Rosebud. On the 23d the trail discovered by Col. Reno was found and followed. It turned off from the Rosebud and led over the divide to the Little Horn. The scouts reported a village on the Little Horn, and Custer pushed out, marching all night. On Sunday morning, June 25, the scouts reported the village only a few miles ahead, on the north bank of the Little Horn, and immense numbers of Indians swarming out of it. One of the scouts, a half-breed Sioux, Michael Boyer, told Custer the village was the largest he had ever seen in the West. Clouds of dust were rising over the Indian town, and masses of horsemen were seen by a dense growth of timber and bushes. The bank of the river opposite the village was abrupt and overhanging the stream, with high, conical hills in the background. In many places the bluff was twelve feet high and almost perpendicular. On the side where the village stood the land was level and stretched down like a beautiful lawn to the timber which ran to the water's edge.

As the troops raised the crest of the hills on the opposite bank a singular sight lay before them. Below was the village, its white tepees stretching for miles along the stream. Riding rapidly over the plain a scout came back and said the Indians were running, and Custer immediately told Col. Reno to go ahead and pitch in and he would support him. Reno was given seven companies, the bulk of the regiment, while Custer reserved five companies for his person. Col. Reno went ahead with three companies, Capt. French, Capt. Waylan and Lieut. McIntosh. The regiment had been traveling along the right bank of the stream, and down its waters, the village was on the left bank of the river, and the river bank was covered out and away for miles with lodges, and on the plain hundreds of horsemen were galloping about apparently in the wildest confusion. Clouds of dust rose over the different bodies of Indians, rendering it impossible to number them. Only now and then, when a few ponies shot out of the cloud, could the Indians be seen, and apparently then going to the rear.

The report soon spread that the Indians were retreating, and Gen. Custer, after ordering Reno over the river above the village, ordered Capt. Keogh, Capt. Yates, Capt. Thomas Custer (a brother of the General), Lieut. Smith and Lieut. Calhoun, with their companies, to keep on down the right bank of the river until they came to a point opposite the village and below it, and then cross over and charge the village on the flank. It was evidently Custer's intention to attack the village at both ends, and have the forces work toward each other. Having ordered the attack above, Custer placed four companies, to be held in reserve and to guard the pack trains, and, turning over the command of the reserve to Capt. Benton to be sent to Reno in case he needed them, Custer with the five companies galloped down the ridge to cut off the Indians. As he dashed forward he raised his hat, and the soldiers cheered lustily. This was the last seen of Custer or his men until they were found dead and horribly mutilated.

We must now recount the movements of Reno. In obedience to Custer's orders he had crossed the river above the village, and was advancing upon it. Little resistance was made to his crossing, and but few Indians showed in his front as he deployed on the plain between the river and the bluff—the valley stretched down to the village, which was about four miles distant, and Reno advanced in column of companies. The valley was a little over a mile wide, and the companies met with no serious resistance in their front for a considerable distance. The first intimation of great danger was the appearance of masses of Indians on the bluffs on the flank of the left company. A heavy fire was opened from the bluff, and at the same time the Indians charged in front. Officers and men behaved with great gallantry, driving back the charging foe. But the fire from the bluffs was so heavy that Reno's men were forced over toward the river. Reno ordered the companies into the timber, and dismounted the battalion. They were formed on the edge of the woods, under a little depression to fight on foot. The Indians charged across the plain and made every effort to dislodge the white men from the timber, but were repulsed time after time. They charged both on ponies and on foot, but were driven back each time with heavy loss. Reno soon discovered that the Indians were working around to his rear, and had entered the timber above him, and between him and the reserve. The order was given to mount and charge through the timber toward the reserve. The Indians had already become so strong that it was found impracticable to dislodge them, while mounted, from behind the bushes and trees, and the command again dismounted and charged on foot. The Indians were every moment getting thicker between the companies on the river bottom and the reserve on the hill.

Col. Reno ordered his men to mount and cut their way through. A wild scramble for life now began. It was every one for himself. Indians on every side rose up and fired at the flying horsemen, and hundreds mounted on swift ponies pursued the soldiers, easily enough coming up with the heavy American horses. It was a hand-to-hand fight, one trooper having often as many as five Indians after him. The troops used their revolvers at short range, emptying an Indian saddle at every shot. At the ford about a mile distant, a strong force of Indians was found holding it. But the troops dashed over them, crossed the river, and began to ascend the high bank opposite. It was a mere Indian trail leading up the face of a bald hill. The Indians rallied and, taking shelter in the bushes about the ford, opened a deadly fire on the soldiers as they forded and ascended the opposite bank.

On account of the narrowness of the ford a great crowd soon collected about the crossing and became jammed there; and into this mass of men and horses the Indians fired at short range. The loss of life here was fearful. Lieut. Hodgson fell while gallantly endeavoring to get his men across the stream. Hodgson had already crossed the ford himself and was ascending the opposite bank when his horse was shot and rolled down the bank with him. Detaching himself from the fallen animal, he grasped the stirrups of a passing soldier to help himself up the bank, and had nearly reached the top when a shot struck him and he fell back, rolling down the bank and into the water. As soon as the soldiers reached the hill overlooking this ford they dismounted and opened fire on the Indians to cover the crossing of their comrades. The reserve, which had been left with the pack train, was now reported coming up and soon occupied the hill above the ford. The Indians, who had crossed the river both above and below the ford, charged the hill, but were repulsed and began to draw off. As soon as the command was collected, Capt. Benton, commanding the reserve, ordered Capt. Weir to push his company along the crest of the hill, on the right bank of the river, and see if he could find Custer, who had gone in that direction with the five companies. Capt. Weir pushed out about a mile, fighting heavily, when the Indians became so strong in his front and on his flanks that he sent word to Capt. Benton that if he advanced any further he feared he would be cut off and surrounded, and Capt. Benton at once ordered him back. He returned with difficulty, but succeeded in bringing off his company with a loss of five men. Col. Reno, seeing large bodies of Indians on the plain, ordered the men to put their animals in the ravines and lie down behind the crest of the little ridge that extended in all directions. The Indians kept up a brisk fire, but it was evident that the masses had gone off somewhere, and Col. Reno looked for a sudden attack in some other quarter. Two hours went by and there was no news from Custer. All wondered where he had gone or what he could be doing. Another hour and then Col. Reno became anxious about Custer and his command. He was about to try and advance up the ridge to look for Custer, but had so many wounded it took a whole company to carry them. While he was debating what was best to be done, and waiting to hear from Custer, he saw large bodies of Indians coming up the valley, and soon a terrible attack began on his position. The men had dug rifle pits as well as they could in the hard ground, and were very imperfectly sheltered. The Indians charged on foot, and by a tremendous effort attempted to rout the soldiers. The fight for a few minutes was desperate in the extreme, and almost hand to hand, some of the Indians, who were evidently unarmed or out of ammunition, throwing stones by hand at the soldiers. Reno's men stood firm, and, after a desperate struggle, the Indians fell back a little. Two or three more efforts were made to carry Reno's position, but without success, and the Indians drew off to hills completely covering them on every side of the command. A large body at one time got into a ravine close by, and Col. Reno ordered Capt. Benton to charge them out of it with his company. The men sprang out of their rifle pits and with a cheer dashed forward, the Indians breaking and running at their approach.

It was now discovered that two or three small hills near by were higher than the one occupied by Reno and commanded it. On these hills the Indians gathered and poured in a galling fire. One of the hills overlooked the corral, and from it the savages shot down scores of fine horses and mules and killed and wounded eleven packers who were with the pack train. The fighting closed at 9 o'clock, when it became too dark to see to shoot. But at dusk the Indians were on all the hills in the ravines, and the command was completely surrounded. The soldiers worked all night to strengthen their position; but the ground was very hard, and they had nothing to dig with with except their butcher knives, hands and tin plates and cups for shovels. At daylight on the morning of the 26th the battle was renewed. The Indians opened with a tremendous fire and deafening warhoop. The hills were black with them, and their number was variously estimated at from 2,000 to 4,000, while Reno's command at that time did not number over 400 men, one-third of whom had to protect the horses and pack animals, and were in a great measure of no use in resisting an Indian assault, and the situation was desperate in the extreme.

In the afternoon the sun became very hot, and the men, who had been without water for thirty-six hours, were almost famished. The horses showed signs of perishing and the wounded begged piteously for water. It was full 200 yards down the hill to the water's edge. Every inch of the ground was commanded by Indian sharpshooters, and a line in the timber on the opposite bank of the narrow river. Col. Reno determined to get water at all hazards, and a number of canteens were gathered. While one company took the camp-kettles and canteens, another charged down the hillside and engaged the attention of the Indians while the kettles were filled. The dash was made and the men went bravely to the river and dipped up the water, while a heavy stream of fire was kept up over their heads. It was a brave deed to carry a camp kettle to the river and fill it; but it was done, and sufficient water for present use was obtained. Five men fell in the charge to get water. At nightfall the Indians drew off, and Col. Reno ordered the river front of the camp to be cleared in order that water for animals might be had. The work was done, and all the animals were watered, and a good supply for next day's use obtained. The wounded were suffering terribly, Dr. De Wolf having been killed early in the action, leaving only one surgeon, Dr. Porter, to attend to the wounded, over twenty of whom were in bad condition, and but few supplies of any kind on hand to relieve their sufferings. Every one wondered what had become of Custer, and many thought he had been cut off and gone down to the Big Horn to join Gen. Gibbon's column, which was expected to be at the mouth of the Little Horn, only twenty miles distant, on the 26th.

On the morning of the 26th the Indians renewed the attack fiercely. They seemed to regard it only as a question of time, but were unwilling to wait until the men ran out of supplies or died for want of water. For miles back the country was full of Indians to cut off any who attempted to escape, and not even a courier could be got through their lines. The fighting continued on the 26th from 6 o'clock till noon, when the Indians began to leave, and about 2 o'clock a great commotion was observed in the villages. Lodges were pulled down, and Indians in crowds of hundreds hurried out of the valley and wild hills. Until dark the stampede continued, but was conducted in so orderly a manner as to lead Col. Reno to believe they were only removing their villages to get grass for their immense herds of animals. At nightfall Col. Reno's front was entirely free from Indians, and the command passed a quiet night. On the morning of the 27th not an Indian was to be seen. This hasty departure was, of course, due to their knowledge of Gibbon's advance with infantry.

Many of the men found dead on Custer's field were horribly mutilated, and most had their skulls smashed by stone mallets. This was the work of the squaws, who swarmed to the battle field, robbing and mutilating the bodies of the dead, and killing the dying and wounded.

There were in Custer's regiment, when he went into battle, 585 men and twenty-six officers. Of these forty men were killed with Reno, and fifty-one wounded. With Custer were about 240 men in the battle, and 210 bodies were found and buried. It is believed not a single man or officer who was with Custer escaped.—New York Herald.

SPANNING THE MISSISSIPPI.—It was an easy matter to throw a bridge over the Upper Mississippi, but below the point where the Missouri empties its turbid waters into that river, and it really becomes the Old Father of Waters, the task was one of great difficulty. Engineering skill was equal to the emergency, and the great bridge at St. Louis is the result. but there was solid bottom for the heavy granite piers, which is not found so easily below the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi. The lower branch of Congress has just passed a bill authorizing the building of a bridge over the great river at Memphis. It is to be an unbroken or continuous span of about 400 feet in the clear from pier to pier, over the main channel, and will be, when finished, a triumph of skill. It is suggested that the culminating bridge will be an iron or steel arch over the "estuary" at New Orleans. "Estuary" indeed! The Mississippi is a clear mile wide at that point, very deep, rapid, and has an alluvial bottom. Modern engineering has conquered many difficulties, and when it spans the mile of torrent between the Crescent City and Algiers it will be the ninth wonder of the world.

An Awful Plunge.

The Anderson (S. C.) Intelligencer thus describes an accident on the railroad running through that city: "The brakes were put on the engine and car, and just as the awful plunge was made were whistled off, according to the statement of Henry Thompson, the only one who survived to tell the story of this terrible accident. The train was only fairly cleared from the embankments when the trestle gave way, and the fearful leap was made which ended the lives of faithful and courageous men, who were devoted to their calling. The trestle was eighty-one feet high, measuring from the surface of the stream at low-water mark to the top of the railroad track, and into this awful chasm the fatal plunge was taken! The tender went down foremost, and the engine turned a complete somersault in making the descent, while the baggage car was wrecked upon the falling timbers and hurled with immense force among the debris.

Statistics of Two Cities.

A comparison between Chicago and St. Louis directories shows that in the matter of employments and professions the city by the lake has a great advantage over the city on the river. Some of the items are curious. St. Louis, for instance, has 264 banks and bankers to Chicago's 76, though the latter do far more business, and 123 wholesale boot and shoe stores to Chicago's 41. There are in St. Louis 527 brewers, Chicago having only 23; 265 wholesale tobacconists to Chicago's 50, and 324 wholesale clothiers to Chicago's 33. On the other hand, Chicago has 324 barbers to St. Louis's 49, and other showings are: Boarding houses, 424 to 149; retail boot and shoe stores, 715 to 68; carpenters, 272 to 53; retail tobacconists, 472 to 28; commission merchants, 633 to 66; milliners, 604 to 50; druggists, 231 to 49; elevators, 19 to 3; grocers, 1,425 to 1,070; lawyers, 781 to 493; doctors, 725 to 461, and saloons, 2,501 to 1,135. Chicago claims this year a population of 536,673, and only allows St. Louis 362,692.—New York World.

EUROPE.

The Possibilities of a General War Discussed.

[From the New York Times.]

The great importance of the war on the Danube to the world must depend on how far the European Governments are drawn into it. The insurgent provinces might hold the Turkish army at bay for years, or Servia might succeed in establishing a considerable Sclavonic state, which should be under the nominal suzerainty of Turkey, and yet the peace of Europe be not endangered. But the day on which an Austrian corps crosses the Danube, or a Russian army enters the Principalities, or an English fleet supports the attacking columns of the Porte, then begin complications and dangers to Europe, and disturbances to the peace of the world whose end no man can foresee. It is the possibility of such interference which makes the exchanges of France, England, and Germany so sensitive.

How far is there danger of such an intervention, and how great is the probability of a serious disturbance of the peace of the world? The threatening power is unquestionably Russia. Her people, though belonging to the northern branch of the Sclavonic race, are in the deepest sympathy with the trials and sufferings of their brethren under the rule of the Ottomans. The Turk is their historical enemy also, and equally hated. Every instance of Mussulman bigotry and cruelty to the rayah, every insult to the Greek Church, every tale of oppression and suffering among the long-injured Sclavonians, passes from mouth to mouth among the Russian peasantry, and the masses burn to avenge these wrongs, and to fulfill the Russian destiny, which is to drive the Mohammedans from Europe. These feelings and these traditions are much stronger with a half-civilized peasantry like the Muscovite than in more artificial communities. In the political and governing class there is also a great desire to wipe away the disgrace of the Crimean campaign, and an ambition to advance the Russian eagles toward the Dardanelles.

The glorious prize of Constantinople still hangs glittering before the ambitious members of the ruling house and before the imagination of the military leaders. These are some of the motives and forces pressing to an inference. On the other hand, are even more powerful influences constraining to peace. Russia, since emancipation and the Crimean war, has become a conservative government. Her own internal affairs are much more difficult and dangerous since the freedom of the serfs than before. She has entered on the commercial and banking era of her progress, and money-making tends to peace. She has learned the power of the civilized states of Europe, and has not that confidence in her military genius or that ambition which Napoleon's wars encouraged or implanted. The Czar himself is anxious for peace, and, though the Young Russia party are eager for war, his influence must be controlling. Moreover, all the military movements of Russia must be governed absolutely by those of Germany; and there is every reason to believe that, however much Bismarck may seek to ally the Czar with the German Kaiser, his interests and purposes are all on the side of peace. Interference by Russia means inevitably war with Austria, and perhaps with England, which might render the chances of winning Constantinople more remote than ever, and even leave Turkey still more strongly intrenched in Europe than before. These motives must outweigh with the Russian Cabinet any possible present advantages from assisting the insurgents or allying with Servia.

Austria is even more bound to a condition of non-interference. She is struggling with debt, weighed down by taxes and an irredeemable currency, and her councils divided by the most serious differences between the two parts of the "Dual Empire." Her Sclavonic subjects number some four millions, and these are already assisting Bosnians and Servians by the most liberal aid of means and men. A war in alliance with Turkey would be in the highest degree unpopular in Sclavonic Hungary, and would defeat the great policy of the Vienna Cabinet—to array the Croat and Serb against the Magyar, and thus govern both.

The Austrian Empire is clearly in no condition for war. In England, certainly, no war would be more against the popular liberal feeling than one to support Turkish cruelty and oppression over the insurgent provinces. Nothing but the most urgent necessity could possibly bring Great Britain into the strife on the Danube, and that on the side of the Mussulman against the Christian. We hold, then, that all these forces will keep back the great European powers, and that the effort of all will be to "localize" the struggle.

The Czar's Centennial Congratulations.

The following congratulatory letter from the Emperor of Russia reached this country too late to be presented to the President by the Russian Minister on the 4th of July, and has since been presented:

MR. PRESIDENT: At a moment when the people of the United States celebrate the centennial period of their national existence, I desire to express to you the sentiments with which I take part in this celebration. The people of the United States may contemplate with pride the immense progress which their energy has achieved within the period of a century. I especially rejoice that during this centennial period the friendly relations of our respective countries have never suffered interruption, but, on the contrary, have made themselves manifest by proofs of mutual good will. I therefore cordially congratulate the American people, in the person of their President, and I pray that the friendship of the two countries may increase with their prosperity. I embrace this occasion to offer you at the same time the assurance of my sincere esteem and of my high consideration.

(Signed) ALEXANDER.

Ems, June 5, 1876.
To His Excellency, Gen. Grant.

No Insult at All.

From the official advices received at the State Department, at Washington, in relation to the reported insult to the American flag at San Domingo, it appears the ex-Minister of War, Villenueva, formerly of Dominica, a fugitive from justice, took refuge on board the steamer Tybee, lying in the port of San Domingo. The authorities demanded his surrender, but the Captain of the Tybee refused to comply with the demand, when they went aboard and took him off. No insult was offered to the American flag, United States Consul, or Captain of the Tybee, and there was no violation of international law or treaty of stipulation. The Tybee carries the Dominican mails under a subsidy from the Dominican Government.

AN AWFUL TRAGEDY.

Three German Brothers of Newark, N. J., Scatter Terror and Death—Their Cruel Butchery of Four Inoffensive Fellow-Beings—Terrible and Swift Retribution.

One of the most terrible and exciting tragedies of modern times was enacted in the city of Newark, N. J., the other day, the following particulars of which we glean from the local papers:

The first act was the shooting dead of Officer Benjamin Elsden, of the police force, in an upper room at No. 98 Jackson street by three brothers named Thielhorn, upon whom he attempted to serve a warrant; the shooting fatally of Officer Dickerson, whom Elsden had taken to assist him; and seriously wounding a person named James Cahill of No. 101 Jackson street. The second act was the deliberate murder of Charles Fischer and John Albers at the tannery of F. W. Dawson & Co., on River street. The third act was the chasing of the assassins into the Passaic river by the infuriated employes of the factory, and their drowning, after being pelted with stones and other missiles by the enraged crowd upon the banks.

The full history of this terrible affair, whereby five lives were lost inside of half an hour, one man wounded so that he soon died, and two others fatally shot, dates back to Wednesday afternoon. Charles W. Meyer, a fireman in T. W. Dawson & Co.'s factory on River street, residing at 311 Ferry street, appeared before Justice Jessup, of the First Precinct Court, and made affidavit to the effect that, on the 21st of June, Albert, Charles, and Actiff Thielhorn, of No. 101 Jackson street, stopped him on Ferry street and demanded money, and threatened to shoot him. Revenge for this complaint, as well as for the incarceration of one of the Thielhorns in the State prison for atrocious assault and battery on Meyer, prompted the horrible tragedy.

At 1 o'clock in the afternoon, Officer Benjamin Elsden went to arrest the Thielhorns. There is no person living to tell the whole story of this murder. Elsden was seen going up to the second floor by Mrs. Varderhoof, who occupies the first floor as a tenant. Mrs. Varderhoof says that she heard some conversation between the officer and the Thielhorns, they being noisy and violent, as was their habit. She understood that the officer was serving a warrant. Officer Elsden then came down stairs and requested her to call in Officer Dickerson, which she did, and the two policemen went up stairs. Then she heard shots fired, and the colored man ran down stairs, and passed out at the door. He appeared to be hurt and fell. She noticed that the other officer did not come down. One of the Germans ran down stairs, and, fearing that he would shoot her, Mrs. Varderhoof fled to the back door. The German passed through the front room to the back door and thence into the alley. Presently the woman heard a shot fired, and learned that John Cahill, who lives next door, had been shot.

After the Thielhorns had killed Elsden, they ran to Dawson's factory, about an eighth of a mile distant. They first entered the first floor and looked for Meyer, evidently intending to wreak their vengeance against him. Not finding him there, they went up to the second floor and shot an old man named Charles Fischer, killing him almost instantly, one of the balls entering his heart. John Albers, a son-in-law of Meyer, then came in view, and the assassins fired at him, lodging four balls in his breast and abdomen. Albers lingered until a late hour this evening.

By this time the men in the factory, some 80 in number, were thoroughly aroused, and with their large currying-knives in hand, they turned upon the assassins and chased them out of the place and down the canal. One of the assassins, when in the act of firing, was struck on the wrist by a currying-knife in the hands of a workman, and the hand was nearly severed from the arm. Dawson's factory is situated between the canal and river, and, with the angry crowds behind them, there was little chance for them to escape.

The scene was like that of a prisoner running the gantlet among a tribe of maddened Indians. Stones and other missiles went hurtling through the air, and the wretches, steeped in blood and crime, saw their end drawing near. Still they had a distance of about 600 yards before them, and they made the most of the opportunity. About a quarter of a mile from Dawson's factory are the Balbach smelting works. The wall of the coal-yard extends close to the edge of the river. When the murderers reached this, retreat in that direction was cut off, and they sprang into the river. Jersey justice proved herself swifter than is her wont—retribution came close upon the heels of the awful crimes that had just been committed. A shower of stones from the angry crowd completed the tragedy. Soon the waters closed over the forms of the three Thielhorns, and they sank out of sight. A number of policemen had gathered at the scene, but it would have been impossible to have stopped that excited crowd from cheating the law of its victims. It is doubtful if it can be proved that any single individual was concerned in the drowning of the murderers. Gradually the crowd dispersed, except a few who remained to watch the work of dragging for the bodies of the Thielhorns.

When to Eat Fruit.

The question is often asked, at what time in the day fruit should be eaten. In tropical countries, where fruit is the chief article of food, the rule appears to be that the earlier in the day it is taken the better, and the later the worse. In hot weather many wise people will eat none after noon, alleging that the digestion then declines in power with the decline of the day, and the fruit, instead of digesting, decomposes, owing to the presence of the saccharine matter. The objection to fruit and certain kinds of vegetables late in the day, be the explanation what it may be, is certainly justified by an ample experience, though some persons can eat fruit at all hours without feeling any inconvenience.

BROKE, BROKE, BROKE.

Broke, broke, broke,
I have squandered the uttermost sou,
And have failed in my efforts to utter
One trivial, last I. O. U.

O well for the infant in arms,
That for ducats he need not fret;
O well for the placid corpse
That he's settled his final debt.

And dun after dun comes in,
Each bringing his little account;
But O for the touch of a five-dollar bill,
—Or a check for a large amount!

Broke, broke, broke,
My course as a student is run,
I'll away to my childhood's home and act
The role of the Prodigal Son.

Tomb of the Russian Emperors.

The royal mausoleum of Russia is 210 feet long, 98 wide, and 58 high. The tombs are all alike—a plain block of marble six feet long, inclosed by a gilded railing, and bearing an inscription on a sunken golden plate. Over one hangs a bunch of keys taken from the fortresses by the soldier beneath, over another droops battle flags, while above a third, and sparkling brightly in the glow of the never-extinguished lamp, is a closely-studded diamond betrothal ring.

SECRETS OF THE LATEST FASHIONS.

Women's Clothes Made to Fit Closer than Men's.

[From Scribner's Monthly for August.]

A Parisian lady is not said to be dressed nowadays, nor does she even order a dress to be made for her. She asks her dressmaker to mold a dress upon her, and, when this is done, she is called a moule.

To be molded you must begin by adapting every article of your underclothing to the shape and size prescribed by fashion. Therein lies the only secret of perfection in dress which the Parisienne possesses over other women. Next to the Parisienne it is the American woman who is considered to be "the best dressed." She has one fault, however—she is not always juponne according to the requirements of her toilet.

As a rule, each dress should have its separate set of skirts, to be worn exclusively with it, and this should be supplied by the dressmaker herself, as it should always be almost of the same length and width of the skirt and of the dress, and always of the same shape. Now two underskirts, at the utmost, are worn. The one which accompanies the dress, and which is of white muslin, is trimmed with lace insertions and edgings. No flounces are worn on underskirts. They are too bulky for the present style of dress.

The skirt to be worn under this muslin skirt is of white foulard, which material clings better than any other to the figure. And the skirt (which is gored, so as not to form a single plait) is stitched to the edge of the corset, in order to leave the figure perfectly untrammeled by band or belt, however thin. The skirt is also trimmed with lace insertion and edging. The corset is very long—a la Jeanne D'Arc. As a guide, it should be of the length of the dress cuirasse, which cuirasse, by-the-by, is now only simulated by trimming on the dress. This, again, is to avoid giving extra size to the figure.

Some dispense with the second skirt of white silk; they wear an undergarment of white silk under the corset, which garment they trim with lace, as if it were a skirt. It is made as long as an ordinary skirt, and it takes the place of one. In reality, therefore, no skirts are worn by the most strict.

To recapitulate, a fashionable lady's toilet now consists of a white silk bodice inlaid with Valenciennes, which white silk bodice is continued into a skirt, which is also richly trimmed with lace insertions and edging. This garment answers two purposes, and is called by two names. Then comes the long cuirasse corset of white or pink satin, which improves the entire figure. An extra white foulard skirt may be stitched to the edge of the corset, but this is not necessary. It should, however, be worn under costumes not provided with a special underskirt of their own. The dress itself, of whatever material it may be, is of the Princess shape—that is, in one piece from neck to hem of skirt.

The trimming on the dress simulates cuirasse and even tunic. But separate cuirasses or tunics are quite laid aside, as being too bulky, and hiding the outlines of the figure too much. It thus follows that nothing is worn under a dress body excepting the under corset. Bad, indeed, must be the figure that does not look molded under this system of underclothing. You may wear a cotton dress of $5, if you will, but under this must be worn the finest foulards and the richest lace.

Nor is it the dressmaker who can make the figure. This depends entirely on the corset manufacturer. There is even talk of having dress cuirasses made by corset makers, and the skirts would then be fastened to the corset, which would at the same time form the body of the dress.

A Remarkable Race.

The most remarkable race in nautical annals has just ended in a dead heat. The contestants were two American vessels, the Southern Cross, Capt. Ballard, and the J. B. Brown, Capt. Kezer, and the course was from San Francisco to Liverpool. At 6 o'clock on the morning of the last day of the year they were towed out together and discharged their pilots at the same moment. They passed the Faralone Islands together, met next day and parted company at night to meet again near the equator. Near Pitcairn Island the rival clippers again came together, parting to encounter each other south of the line on the equator on the Atlantic side, where, during several days of light weather, they were in company, crossing the equator literally at the same moment, bearing due east and west, a circumstance unparalleled in Capt. Ballard's twenty-six years of East Indian trade. Another parting followed, succeeded by a rencontre in the northeast trades, where the ships were in company for a week. Off Holyhead they met for the last time on the 26th of May, got tugs together, raced up the Mersey side by side, and would have entered the docks together had the gates been wide enough, but as they were not, the J. B. Brown gave way and allowed the Southern Cross to reach her berth a length in advance, after a race of 147 days, extending over many thousand miles of water.

A Walking Arithmetic.

A great deal has been said and written about the great mathematical prodigy, "Reub" Fields, who lives at Fayetteville, in this county, and the more that is known of him the greater wonder he becomes. He does not possess the simplest rudiments of a book education—does not know a letter or figure by sight—and yet he can solve the most intricate problem in an instant, or can perform a calculation in less than a minute that would require the work of an hour by the ordinary modes. For instance: We gave him the day of the month and year of our birth, and he told, in less than half a minute, our age in seconds, minutes, days, and years. Give him the day of the month and the year of any event, however remote, and he will instantly give the day of the week.

We spent two hours with him last Saturday, and, notwithstanding we have often talked with him and seen him display his wonderful gifts, yet we always find something new in him.

We placed a column of figures on a paper, equal in length to the columns of an ordinary-sized ledger, and called them off to him in rapid succession, and when the last number was called he gave the sum without a moment's hesitation. He did not see the paper, and would not have known a character on it if he had. One hour later he repeated those numbers in the exact order in which we called them to him. We then began at the bottom, and would call two or three numbers correctly, and then one incorrectly, and he would correct us by giving the proper number.

More mysterious than this to us is the fact of his ability to give correctly the time of the day or night, whenever called upon, without any reference whatever to a time-piece.

In this place the time-pieces are all regulated by railroad, or St. Louis time. If you ask "Reub" the time, he will say "I am 15 1-4 minutes past 1; if you have railroad time you have so and so," giving the exact difference between sun time and railroad time.

Another remarkable fact is, he gives the exact time of his locality. If he is in Washington city, he gives Washington city time; if in San Francisco, the time there. He can not possibly do these things by any method of calculating the passing time, for he will give the time as accurately while waking from sleep at night as if it were daylight and the sun shining.

There seems to be nothing too great in numbers for his mind to grasp, and yet nothing too small. He can tell what the interest on 1 cent would be for three seconds at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, as readily and as easily as he could tell the interest on one dollar for one year at the same rate per cent.

He is, indeed, the wonder of wonders.

She Knew Her Rights.

The passengers in a sleeping-coach in Delaware were just dozing off when something howled out:

"Ow—wow—wow!"

"Great dragons, there's a young one aboard!" growled a fat man from his upper berth. "I'll bet a hundred dollars none of us can get a wink of sleep to-night."

"Wow—wow!" whined the child.

"There he goes again!" growled the fat man. "I never travel but what I run across some one's offspring."

"Who's that talking?" called the mother of the child in a loud voice.

"Me!" answered the fat man. "Why didn't you either leave that child at home or stay at home yourself?"

"Are you talking to me?" demanded the woman.

"Yes, ma'am, I am! I say it is a shame to bring a sick child in a sleeping-car to disturb twenty or thirty people."

"Are you a father?" she asked.

"No, I haint."

"Nor a mother?" she continued.

"No, ma'am."

"Well, sir," she said, as she poked her head out between the curtains, "when you've been the mother of eleven children, moved forty-eight times, lived in nine different States, and worn one corset right along for seventeen years, you'll begin to think you know your business. I think I know mine; and if this baby wants to howl he's going to do it, if I have to come over there and kick a ton and a half of conceit out of you."

Would Pay His Share at Once.

Yesterday a lady entered a grocery store on Broad street, where she found the proprietor fanning himself with his hat, and looking somewhat overcome with the heat.

"Why, Mr. ——, you look worried," says the lady, elevating her eye-glasses so as to take a closer look.

"Worried, the devil, these infernal careless clerks of mine are calculated to worry any man."

"Why, what's the matter?" asked the lady, "any of your clerks absconded, or have they made a mistake and given sixteen ounces for a pound?"

"No, neither, madam, but worse than that. While putting a barrel of molasses in the cellar, through their carelessness they let it drop, and out came the head, and lost all of the molasses. But," he added, "some person will have to pay for it."

Later in the afternoon a 6-year-old son of the lady came into the store, and said:

"Pap wants to know what his share of that barrel of molasses is."

"Your father don't owe me anything for molasses," answered the merchant.

"Well, dad said that your book customers would have to pay for that barrel that busted, and he wants to know what his share is, and he will send it over.—Elizabeth (N. J.) Journal

Possessed of the Spirit of Washington.

A Philadelphia dispatch says: The session of the Universal Peace Society at Carpenter's Hall this morning came to a summary and very peculiar termination. About noon, Dr. Charles Pinkham, of California, began to address the meeting. His manner was excited, and his remarks were wild and disconnected. It soon became manifest that he was insane, and calls to order were heard from all points. President Love insisted that the speaker be allowed to proceed, and Dr. Pinkham went on, becoming more and more excited and violent, until at length he jumped upon a chair, brandishing a sword in a furious manner. At this point, several of the members went out after the police, and several officers came in to remove the disturber, but President Love insisted that he should not be interfered with, and the principle of non-resistance be constantly adhered to, and there was a consequent clearing of the hall. Pinkham's wife remained sitting in her place, and said that her husband was charged with a message from heaven to deliver there, and he must deliver it no matter what happened. A large crowd from the outside gathered, and there was great excitment. At length Pinkham became quiet, and said, in explanation, that he had been possessed of the immortal spirit of Washington, but had at last succeeded in "shaking the spirit." The spirit, he explained, had attempted, through him, to pronounce a new declaration.

The Wrong Bull.

The peace men confound the Sitting Bull of the North, the leader of the wild tribe, with the Sitting Bull of the Ogallalas, who was here in the council last summer, and whom the President presented with a rifle on account of his great service to the whites. The latter Sitting Bull is the one who arose in the council at the Red Cloud agency, at the time when the lives of the Congressional Commissioners seemed in danger, and, drawing the rifle which the President gave him, said, "There must be no trouble here. These white men must not be hurt. The first Indian that draws on a white man I shall kill myself." This had the effect to quiet the angry savages. But the Sitting Bull of the North, against whom the present military operations are directed, has never been a participant in any treaty, and has never manifested anything but the most terrible ferocity toward the whites.

Origin of Pumice Stone.

The Rev. William W. Gill, employed for twenty-two years as a missionary in the Hervey group, a small cluster of islands in the South Pacific, relates a legend current there on the origin of pumice stone. The sky is built of solid blue stone, and at one time almost touched the earth, so that men had but the space of a few feet to live in. Pitying their cramped condition, the divine hero, Ru, pushed the sky up a few feet. Some time afterward he was offended by his son Maui, and flung him into the air. When the boy came down he threw the old man and sky so high that the blue could never get back to its former place. The father's head stuck among the stars, and he died. His bones, of vast proportions, tumbled down from time to time, and were shivered into fragments. To this day what are known as the bones of Ru are found all over the island of Mangaia.

AT our request Cragin & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., have promised to send any of our readers gratis (on receipt of fifteen cents to pay postage) a sample of Dobbins' Electric Soap to try. Send at once.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is no patent medicine humbug, got up to dupe the ignorant and credulous, nor is it represented as being "composed of rare and precious substances brought from the four corners of the earth, carried seven times across the great desert of Sahara on the backs of fourteen camels, and brought across the Atlantic ocean on two ships." It is a simple, mild, soothing remedy, a perfect specific for CATARRH and "COLD IN THE HEAD;" also for Offensive Breath, Loss or Impairment of the Sense of Smell, Taste, or Hearing, Watery or Weak Eyes, Pain or Pressure in the Head, when caused, as they all not unfrequently are, by the violence of Catarrh.

THE Esterly reaper, of Whitewater, Wis., with reel and one arm-rake working in a quarter-circle, is the only machine that lays the bundle perfectly even. Equal to any in all other respects, it excels all other reapers in this. ESTERLY & SON'S HARVESTERS dispense with all this machinery, and a revolving and vibrating rake strikes the butts of the cut grain and carries it up and on to a transverse table where it is pushed by a reversible rake to the binders. If the grain is light two bundles need make but one. Both rakes are driven by a small spur wheel on the main axle of the driving wheel, working on a spur gear, in connection with a cam, rack, and pinion. The whole machine is simple, operates perfectly, and commends itself to all visitors.

WILHOFT'S FEVER AND AGUE TONIC.—This medicine is used by construction companies for the benefit of their employes, when engaged in malarial districts. The highest testimonials have been given by contractors and by the Presidents of some of the leading railroads in the South and West. When men are congregated in large numbers in the neighborhood of swamps and rivers, Wilhoft's Tonic will prove a valuable addition to the stock of medicines, and will amply reward the company in the saving of time, labor and money. We recommend it to all. G. R. FINLAY & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.
FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

PIMPLES on the face, rough skin, chapped hands, saltrheum, and all cutaneous affections cured, the skin made soft and smooth, by the use of Juniper Tar Soap. That made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, is the only kind that can be relied on, as there are many imitations, made from common tar, which are worthless.

REVOLVERS.—The Western Gun Works have consented to extend the time to which their premium certificates expires, to Aug. 15th. So hunt up your old papers of the middle of June and cut out the certificate and send in with $3 and get a revolver and premium box of long-range-target cartridges, attaching this notice to order.

A FACT worth remembering—Five cents' worth of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders, given to a horse twice a week, will save double that amount in grain, and the horse will be fatter, sleeker, and every way worth more money than though he did not have them.

MARRIED ladies, under all circumstances, will find Parson's Purgative Pills safe, and, in small doses, a mild cathartic. They cause no griping pains or cramp.

USE Home Stomach Bitters for all disorders of Stomach and Liver, prepared by Home Bitters Co., St. Louis. For sale everywhere.

IF you earnestly desire to be cured of Ague, take Shallenberger's Pills, and be well.

TETTER, saltrheum, scald head, etc., will certainly yield to the great alterative effects of the Vegetine.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic.—In the atmosphere experienced here during the summer months, the lethargy produced by the heat takes away the desire for wholesome food, and frequent perspirations reduce bodily energy, particularly those suffering from the effects of debilitating diseases. In order to keep a natural, healthful activity of the system, we must resort to artificial means. For this purpose Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is very effectual. A few doses will create an appetite and give fresh vigor to the enervated body. For dyspepsia, it is invaluable. Many eminent physicians have doubted whether dyspepsia can be permanently cured by the drugs which are generally employed for that purpose. The Sea Weed Tonic in its nature is totally different from such drugs. It contains no corrosive minerals or acids; in fact, it assists the regular operations of nature, and supplies her deficiencies. The tonic in its nature so much resembles the gastric juice that it is almost identical with that fluid. The gastric juice is the natural solvent which, in a healthy condition of the body, causes the food to be digested; and when this juice is not excreted in sufficient quantities, indigestion, with all its distressing symptoms, follows. The Sea Weed Tonic performs the duty of the gastric juice when the latter is deficient. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is sold by all Druggists.

Public Report
—OF A—
POLICEMAN.

I have not enjoyed good health for several years past, yet have not allowed it to interfere with my labor. Every one belonging to the laboring class knows the inconvenience of being obliged to labor when the body, from debility, almost refuses to perform its daily task. I never was a believer in dosing with medicines; but, having heard the VEGETINE spoken of so highly, was determined to try it, and shall never regret that determination. As a tonic (which every one needs at some time) it surpasses anything I ever heard of. It invigorates the whole system; it is a great cleanser and purifier of the blood. There are many of my acquaintances who have taken it, and all unite in praise of its satisfactory effect.

Especially among the aged class of people, it imparts to them the one thing most needful in old age—nights of calm, sweet repose, thereby strengthening the mind as well as the body. One aged lady, who has been suffering through life from Scrofula, and has become blind from its effects, having tried many remedies with no favorable result, was induced by friends to try the VEGETINE. After taking a few bottles she obtained such great relief that she expressed a wish for her sight, that she might be able to look upon the man who had sent her such a blessing.

Yours respectfully,
O. H. P. HODGE, Police Officer, Station 6.
BOSTON, Mass., May 9, 1871.

HEARTFELT PRAYER

ST. PAUL, Aug. 28, 1864.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:
Dear Sir—I should be wanting in gratitude, if I failed to acknowledge what the VEGETINE has done for me. I was attacked about eleven months since with Bronchitis, which settled into Consumption. I had night sweats and fever chills; was distressed for breath, and frequently spit blood; was emaciated, very weak, and so low that my friends thought my case hopeless.
I was advised to make a trial of the VEGETINE, which, under the providence of God, has cured me. That He may bless the use of your medicine to others, as He has to me, and that His divine grace may attend you, is the heartfelt prayer of your admiring, humble servant. BENJAMIN PETTINGILL.
P. S.—Mine is but one among the many cures your medicine has effected in this place. B. P.

Recommend it Heartily.

SOUTH BOSTON, Feb. 7, 1870.

MR. STEVENS:
Dear Sir—I have taken several bottles of your VEGETINE, and am convinced it is a valuable remedy for Dyspepsia, Kidney Complaint, and General Debility of the system.
I can heartily recommend it to all suffering from the above complaints.
Yours respectfully,
MRS. MONROE PARKER,

The Skin,
WITH ITS MILLIONS OF PORES,

Is the great purifier of the body. Draw the inflammation and soreness from the Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Spleen, Bowels, Bladder, Heart and Muscles through the skin with Collins' Voltaic Plasters, and health and happiness are yours. They are the greatest medical discovery of the century, and utterly surpass all other plasters. Collins' Voltaic Plasters consist of silver and zinc plates, carefully attached together, and imbedded in a Medicated Porous Plaster. (See cut.) A narrow strip of cloth, which is not to be removed, is placed over the plates. When the plaster is placed upon the affected part, which can be done as quickly and conveniently as with the ordinary porous plaster—that is by mere pressure of the hand—the natural warmth and moisture of the skin causes the plates to throw out a current of electricity so gentle that it is scarcely possible to feel it otherwise than by the soothing and grateful warmth produced, yet so penetrating as to stop almost immediately the most excruciating pain, remove soreness, lameness, and draw inflammation from the lungs, liver, kidneys, spleen, bowels, bladder, heart and muscles. A single COLLINS' VOLTAIC PLASTER, for local pains, lameness, soreness, weakness, numbness, and inflammation of the lungs, liver, kidneys, spleen, bowels, bladder, heart and muscles, is equal to an army of doctors and acres of plants and shrubs. It instantly banishes pain and soreness, gives life and vigor to the weakened and paralyzed muscles and limbs, and is so grateful and soothing that once used in the above ailments every other external application, such as salves, ointments, lotions, and liniments, will at once be discarded. Even in paralysis, epilepsy or fits, and nervous muscular affections, this plaster, by rallying the nervous forces, has effected cures when every other known remedy has failed.

"VIBRATOR"
BATTLE CREEK MICH

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.
FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.
AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.
IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.
ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.
FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.
FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.
TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz: our improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.
IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 24, 1876.

DEAR COURIER—While I write the sweat is oozing from every pore, and the thermometer dances up to the tune of 96, even in this building of marble. Last Saturday the excessive heat completely demoralized me, and would have remained so over the Sabbath, but that a fortunate occurence came to my relief. A party of gentlemen from New York, who were here on a visit, and not being accustomed to so much calorie, they determined on a trip down the Potomac to the ocean, and I was kindly invited to join them. I accepted with my usual modesty, and at eight o'clock that evening, I was on the bow-sprit of the steam Yacht "Gazelle," enjoying a splen did breeze from the rapid motion of the vessel. There were twenty-five of us on board, a clever, gentlemanly set, full of life, animation and ice water. Our boat was making fifteen miles an hour, when we came up to a revenue cutler. We passed her easily, and were priding ourselves on having the fastest boat on the river, when I looked back and saw that cutler gaining on us. The captain was urged to put on steam, but it was no use. The said r. c. passed us, and never said a word. We drowned our chagrin in a glass of lemonade, and went below where a most sumptuous lunch was spread, the bill for which I afterwards learned amounted to $350. After enjoying a cigar on deck, after lunch, we bunked down for the night, and were awakened for breakfast at Pliny Point. Here was salt water, and a bath in the surf was proposed. Every convenience is offered at this point for a sea bath. Long rows of little white cottages stand a few yards back from the shore, where the fashienable do congregate for their summer amusement. I often wondered how people prepared for a sea bath, and I soon found out. Its very easy, and quite enjoyable. In the first place you don't take off all your clothes, unless you put on others Regular bathing suit can be had, for fifty-cents a pop, both for male or female I took a male one, though I did not see much difference between. Nature's distinction seems to be ignored in the preparation of these garments. There were quite a number of young ladies present, and as we got there in time for the usual morning bath, we saw all the fun. Many mamas are there with their precious darlings, apparently anxious for the safety of their daughters but I thought more particularly anxious to get rid of them—by marriage. As our boat closed in to the landing I heard shouts of laughter, and saw numerous splashes in the water, and Sunday morning at that, too. I thought of the story in the Sunday School book about going in swimming on the Sabbath day when a funny newspaper man came along and says, "Tom, lets go ducking.' We got suits, and repaired to the Cottage by the sea, and prepared ourselves to be seen. A bathing suit is a very simple arrangement. When I looked at mine I thought some Irishman had come along, and not having any money, had pawned the only suit he had for a square meal. It was a red shirt and a white pair of drawers. I was disappointed, as my practical imagination had figured out something more beautiful than this. The ladies have blue ones, some ordinary made, and some decorated with ribbons and braid, especially around the chest. I put on the red and white, but I got an idea they did not fit me, and I felt uncomfortable. In fact I thought there wasn't enough of them. You can have some idea of how one feels when they think they are not entirely covered. But once you are in the water, the less you have on the better. Its a splendid place to see the female form divine. When the cloth becomes saturated they hug you so closely that you think that some one has their arm around you, and you feel good or bad, whatever you may be the most used to. I enjoyed it and I think from the little screams which escaped from the girls quite often, they enjoyed it also. Some specimens of humanity can get to and from the water much sooner than others because they are not troubled much with flesh. This class don't bathe much in public. But just as soon as a girl is round and full and fleshy, she thinks it perfectly splendid to take a bath in the surging billows as often as possible But female art is not entirely lost, even in bathing. Bathing and padding are not inseparable.

For the first time I took a plunge in salt sea water. I know it was salty, for on the first plunge I got a mouthful. To enjoy it nicely one must go out some distance from shore where you are free from what they call "under-tow" that means that the water comes in on the top and returns below. When the breakers are about two or three feet high, in is a pleasant sensation to be rocked up and down, by the volition of the waves. It is much more pleasurable to bathe in company with the ladies than without them. They are the life of the scene, and there is always something happening of an amusing character. There is nothing immodest or unladylike in the indulgence, though its awful shocking at first. Some stay in much longer than they want to merely from their dread in being seen when they go out, but it don't take long to wear off that feeling. A salt water bath exhilerates much more than fresh water and you can stay in much longer, and feel less injurious effects.

After breakfast we started again down the river, passing Point Lookout, where the Potomac and Chesapeake bay join waters. A few hours of delightful riding, and we came in sight of Fortress Monroe and the ocean. The fort is built on a point almost treeless, and it would not be a very agreeable place to live in, were it not for the sea breeze. We returned by Monday morning thankful that we had escaped for one day the heat of a terribly warm city.

Mr. Waterson, the editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, who doubtless knows Mr. Hayes personally, in a recent number of his interesting paper, prints a word picture of that gentleman which we presume is entirely accurate. The Louisville editor describes the republican candidate for the presidency as a pompous little fellow, who wears a shining cravat, spotless kid gloves, a neat fitting coat, patent-leather boots, a hat of the latest fashion and a cane such as is generally carried by young swells, from whose faces the down has not yet disappeared. If, Mr. Watterson says, he would part his hair in the middle, he would be a perfect "dandy." We have all along heard and know that Mr. Hayes was a very weak man, with no will of his own, who is guided and controlled entirely by the circumstances and a stronger man who chance to surround him; but we never suspected that he was a "fob." It is strange that the Republican party should have selected a perfumed dandy as their standard-bearer in the coming campaign In the past they have selected their leaders from among the rough, rude brawny men of the country; men who hardly ever saw kid gloves, much less wore them; men who were distinguished more for what was inside than outside their heads, and who never paid the slightest attention to the cut of their coats.

Such men were Lincoln and Hannibal Hamlin. Mr. Lincoln in all probability never bought a pair of kid gloves in his life until he went to Washington, and he rarely wore them there. He never bothered himself about the style and never looked at a fashion plate. There was nothing of a fob or a dandy about him. He was plain honest "Old Abe" from the first to the last. There is a tradition in Washington that his associates on the ticket wore the same coat for seventeen years. Mr. Johnson was exceedingly plain. He always dressed in black, summer and winter, and although he was an excellent tailor he never attempted to lead the fashions, but, on the contrary, was painfully behind the times. And so of General Grant. General Grant, in the matter of dress, is as plain and simple as Mr. Johnson or Lincoln. Henry Wilson always wore the old-fashioned high satin stock, surmounted by a large, snowy shirt collar, which half covered his ears.

I think Congress will adjourn about the first of August, and I will be heartily glad of it. I perfer living in the enterprising little city of Auburn, to this.

TOM.

At last the testimony is all in, in the Belknap case, and argument has commenced. The defense seem disposed to still make the main fight on the question of jurisdiction, and wisely, too, as it is difficult to see how a convention could be avoided by the Senate upon the direct issue of guilt or innocence according to the testimony.

The government will go on for ten days longer, congress having extended the time of the temporary appropriation bills till the 21st. In the meantime, the Senate is coming to its senses. The sundry civil appropriation bill, upon which has been one of the sharpest contests was passed Monday, the Senate yielding some five millions and the House less than one million.

FOREPAUGH'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL SHOW.

Beyond Precedent and Belief in ACTUAL MAGNITUDE.

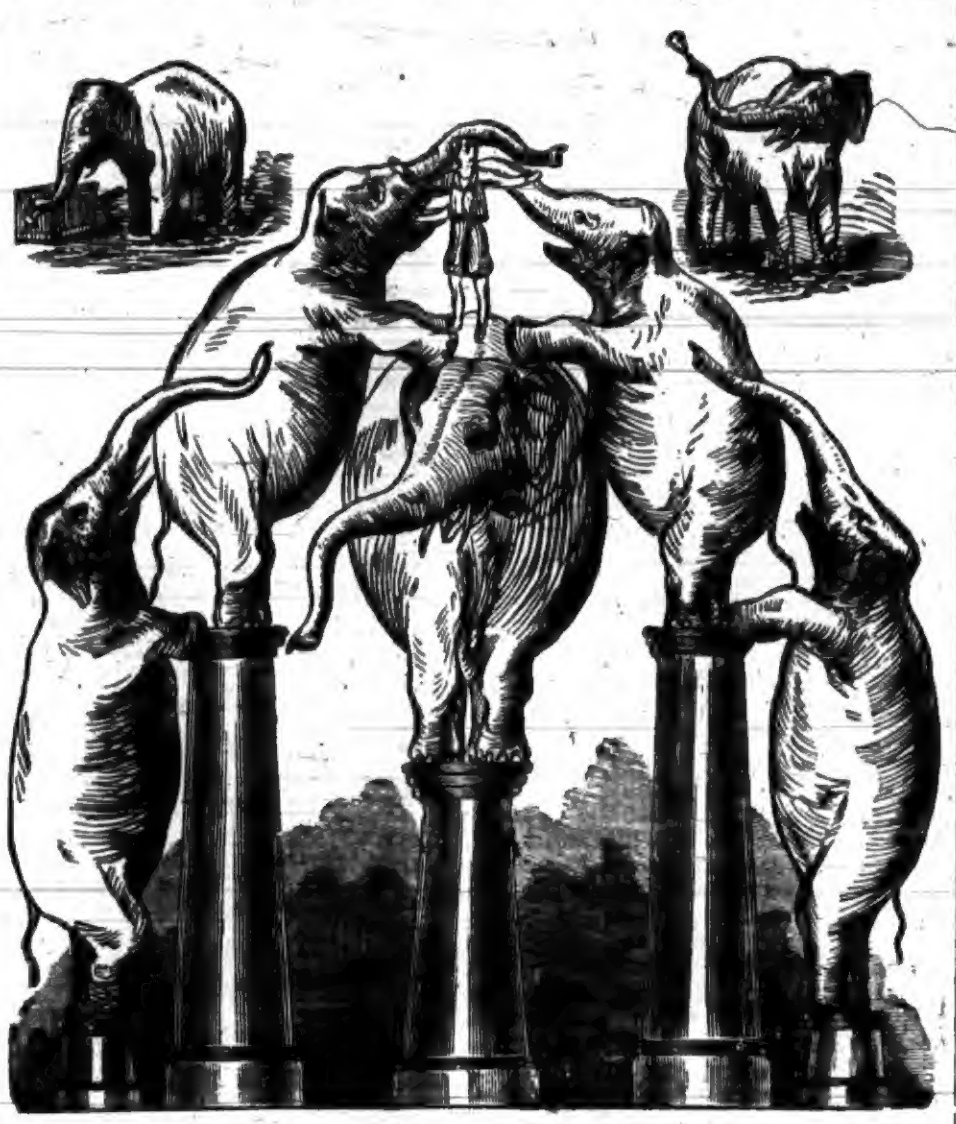
The Press, Public, and all Intelligent Showmen pronounce it

WITHOUT A SINGLE PARALLEL.

Will exhibit at Ligonier, Saturday, July 29th, Kendallville, Monday, July 31st, Waterloo, Tuesday, August 1st,

ADAM FOREPAUGHS



Three enormous menageries, triple museum and classic moral double circus, under eight center pole tents, on its tenth triumphal annual tour.

Greatly enlarged and augmented, and bejeweled with dazzling splendor, as an especially appropriate offering for the centennial year. The monster aggregation is positively three times the largest show on earth, representing more money, furnishing more instructive and useful amusement, and combining more moral tendencies, genuine merit, solid weight and elevated character than all other establishments of a similar nature in the country. Fifty odd statue-ornamented cages of wild beasts, exotic birds, monsters of the deep, and crawling reptiles. A museum of all that is unaccountable and wonderful in the curious world. A CIRCUS CLASSIC, MORAL AND REFINED, and centralizing and monopolizing the leading Talent of the Equestrian and Arenic Realm, making Forepaugh's Colossal Aggregation, beyond question, without a prototype, and the standard exhibition of the universe.

Among the special features will be found a herd of performing elephants educated to execute amazing evolutions unequaled, a TWO HORNED BLACK RHINOCEROUS. Only Horse and Cow Antelope on exhibition in the world, whose rarity makes them strangers to natural Historians, SEA LIONS from the northern seas, snow-white Polar Bears, towering Giraffe, giant Ostrich, 15 African and Asiatic Lions, litter of lion babies, AFRICFN ELAND. Sea Cow, Horned Horse, Royal Bengal Tigers, and over 50 dens and cages containing every known Wild Beast, Bird and Reptile in captivity on the broad face of the globe, aggregating more rare animals, novelties, incredulous wonders, men, women, childern, and horses than any three shows on either continent.

The museum, endless in its variety, is an epitome of the world, all its elements, art and science and a marvelous compendium of all that man's inginuity can suggest, comprising life-like representations in marble and wax, moving Mechanical Figures, Fountains of real Sparkling Water, Automatic Representations, realistic Tableaux and countless objects of unceasing wonder.

THE ARENIC DEPARTMENT!

is distinct and seperate from the Grand Zoological display and presents the very first constellation of Equestrian, Gymnastic and Acrobatic Talent in the profession. The Golden Emblazoned Street Pageant will occur daily between the hour of nine and ten o'clock, A. M., and is a literal refix of Oriental grandeur. The Triumphal Car containing Prof. Tonny Frank's Metropolitan Cornet Band, is drawn by 20 Arabian horses and followed by an innumerable array of Golden Palace, cages and dens elegantly adorned with deftly carved statutes of illustrated historical personages—an octave of beautiful chime bells playing popular airs and anthems—automation representation of gymnasts, Leapers, etc., on the moving dens—Elephants robed in velvet—Camels appropriately caparisoned, droves of ponies, flashily plumed horses, the flags of all nations and 200 Centennial Statutes molded in gold.

Remember the Great Forepaugh Show never divides. That it is three times the largest on earth. That it moves along the public roads and highways of the land, by the threshold of the farmers and toiling people who can behold its stupendous magnitude. That even three or four railroads cannot furnish adequate transportation to carry it from stand to stand. Recolect one ticket for fifty cents admits to Menagerie, Museum, and circus. Children udner nine years, twenty-five cents. Reserved seats for ladies and children during entrance hours. Two exhibitions daily. Doors open at 1 and 7 P. M., commencing 1 hour after—rain or shine.

The Indianapolis State Fair will commence Sep. 25th and continue until Oct. 18th, 1876.

Mr Williamson has sold out to R. McDugal and will conduct a grocery store at Corunna.

Mr. De Souza and H. Funk have formed a partnership in the grocery and harness trade.

Auburn beer is fetching John Hebel "out." The effects of the centennial is almost "spield."

We want all those who owe the Courier for 1875 to come and settle. "Enuf is enuf."

Those little pests, the house flies, are more numerous than they have been for several years past.

The Central House, our most popular hotel, has a satchel for sale. You needn't run to get it.

Ensley's new block has reached the second story. It will make a fine appearance when completed.

Oats are "turning" and some of the fields are ready for the sickle. The crop is unusually heavy.

Steuben county will have a Fair October 3d, 4th, and 5th, either at Angola or Pleasant Lake.

The late hot weather has been splendid for corn and the crop in this county never looked better.

We have fourteen tramp printers an hour. They report the Centennial to be worked down to a fine point.

On one or two streets in this growing city the children have a spring-board out of the side walk planks,

The Steuben "Republican" comes out with a new head, new press and so on. Good luck to the gentlemen.

New cabbage is in the market. The next thing will be "saurcraut." "Vel, dots bully, und minty fine."

The Saginaw time card will be corrected next week. It was received too late for publication this week.

A man in South Bend claims to have found a piece of the meteor seen here and elsewhere, in his dooryard.

We expect the proprietor home the latter part of the week. He will be here the first of August, sure.

The Toledo excursion was largely patronized by our citizens. They report an enjoyable time.

We notice that James Potter has a new sign in front of his shoe store. Bill Latson is employed at this shop.

The Ligonier "Banner" says that fully one-half of the hay crop of Noble county has been ruined by the wet weather.

C. D. Hare, Esq., who has been traveling for an eastern house, has been visiting friends in the city for several days.

There was but very little "down" wheat in the country this year. It stood up well and was generally even on the ground.

Can't some one be induced to shoot, poison, choke to death, drown or lose about 100 dogs in the vicinity where we sleep nights?

Some new wheat has found its way to market and to the mills. It is of good quality and generally yields better than anticipated.

The Fort Wayne "Gazette" has again changed hands. Messrs. Keil Brothers, of Fort Wayne, are the new proprietors.

The town pumps are doing a good business this summer. People wonder now how the town used to get along without public wells.

The Sunday train on the Saginaw Road was better patronized last Sabbath than the one before. It will soon grow popular.

Mr. Weamer, how much did you get for publishing that column last week? If you aint got no bread in the house, do as Bill Britton says, eat pie.

W. D. Rickel, Esq., has returned to our city, after a long stay in Iowa. He reports business good there—what there is of it.

David Morris, one of the most accommodating and best liked saloon clerks in the city, is now at J. E. Beugnot's popular establishment.

It is said that if a bottle of Pennyroyal is left uncorked in a room at night, not a mosquito will be found there in the morning. Try it.

We will venture to say there is not another town in the State, that the citizens attend church more regularly than they do at Auburn—even the printers attend.

Ice Cream Social.—Mrs. H. C. Bell will entertain the Presbyterian Social next Friday evening, August 28th, at 7 o'clock. A cordial invitation to all.

Mrs. R. Elson, Secy.

The notice in regard to brick contractors in week before last Courier, had no reference whatever to the Ensley Block. Weamer's saying, so, don't make it so.

We hear that a number of our citizens will attend the circus at Waterloo next Tuesday. The performance of the elephants is well worth the price of admission.

Abright and Eaton are putting the finishing touch on the front of their store rooms. The "ladder fell down with the paint can" Monday, and made a little extra work.

The Auburn Silver Cornet Band played for the Toledo excursion last Tuesday. Our band don't take no back seat for any of them, but the "Reps. ought to raise a trifle more."

Two organ men had a race last Monday. One team lost the road and—so did the other. Pull down your vest, young man, and play "Sweet Home."

Wiseman, of the Angola "Herald," says that the "Republican" had two locals and a show ad. in last week. Now, be Wise(man) young fellow, and don't 'shuffle" too fast on Bro. Weamer.

Call of Central Committee.

The members of Democratic Central Commitee of DeKalb county are requested to meet at my office at 10 o'clock A. M. on Saturday the 29th instant. A full attendance together with the several candidates is earnestly recommended.

W. H. Dills, Chairman.

WANTED.

Mr. N. B. Naber wants to buy black walnut timber in any quantity. Those having it to sell can get good prices by calling on the above gentleman.

A gentleman remarked the other day that "the Courier was the best reading the people could have, except the Bible The latter instructs us the way of the life to come, the Courier in the best way for this life.

It is very discouraging to have a man look as if he couldn't make up his mind whether to pity or whip you when you merely ask him if he can do anything for that little bill. It will not be that way on the other side of Jordan.

We would kindly remind a number of our subscribers that they must put the Courier accounts in the list of those they are going to pay "after harvest," or our patience will be wholly exhausted.

If the dozen or more lusty porkers who continue to violate the town ordinance with impunity, don't change their ways ere long, they will wake up some morning and find themselves deprived of liberty and the pursuit of happiness vouchsafed to all good, law-abiding swine.

Pleasant Lake.

A large party from the Junction and this place will visit Pleasant Lake on next Sunday. All the boys that can get a 'gal" are respectfully invited to attend. Everything will be arranged to make it a pleasant affair and those who attend will never regret it.

One of our scientific men has advanced this theory in regard to the late meteor: He said 'twas Hayes flying before Tilden's successful race, and when on nearing the milky way, as Tilden brushed ahead, Hayes "busted" and hung for about thirty minutes and then sank to obscurity and decay or went down "wid the fallen stars." Possibly such may prove the case.

A farmer living near town informs us that the hogs in this vicinity have a disease that he thinks is hog cholera. He says several have died and more have it. The disease commences with a cough, the hogs seem to get violently sick and in a short time die apparently in great misery. This disease is a bad thing among hogs, and it is to be hoped our informant may be mistaken about its being the hog cholera.

If there is any man in this country who can manipulate willing officials, it is Chandler, the friend of Grantism. His army of 90,000 will be ready for active service shortly. All of their noise and fuss with hewgags and bassoons will not help Mr. Hayes this year. His election would perpetuate corruption. The people do not want him.

A fellow was sitting on Fluke's corner, last night, pretty well slewed, and at once he started a song that he'd learned in his childhood days. He meant to sing "Ring the Bells for Sarah," but got it mixed and brawled out, "ring my neck for Sarah." Just as he got half through the chorus, the old man came along with a cane and immediately the young fellow changed his tune into, "Home, Sweet Home."

It gives us great pleasure to announce that Brick Pomeroy has finally concluded, after much thought and careful study, to oppose Tilden and Hendricks. Until further notice, he will support Peter Cooper, the green-back candidate. Pomeroy's support is sure death to any party. Those Democrats who join in the general chorus of shouting the praises of Pomeroy, as the purest Democrat the sun e'er shone upon, can be bought very cheaply just now.

A small piece of that meteor that was frisking around over LaPorte a week or so ago, fell in South Bend and was picked up and sent to the Notre Dame museum. A German lady saw it strike the ground, and it frightened her because she thought it was a visitor from the infernal regions. The most singular thing of the affair is the fact that any person living in South Bend should be frightened at a prospect of a transfer of the infernal regions to that city. The comparatively happy residents of the l. r. would naturally be expected to warmly protest against such a change.—LaPorte Argus.

The advertisement of Dr. A. De Lafayette Angell, the great rupture or hernia doctor, will be found in to-day's Courier. Dr. Angell enjoys a wide reputation as a skilled physician, particularly in the treatment of rupture or herina. His superior skill in the treatment of the above particular malady, has caused him to make a specialty of this particular disease, and he cordially invites all those afflicted to call and see him at the Swineford House, Wednesday and Thursday, July 26th and 27th. Consultation always free.

Mad Dog Near the City.

On the 22d inst a gentleman by the name of Asa Johns, living about six miles east of town, chased a mad dog until night, overtook him when the dog was lost in the darkness. This is a great warning to our people generally to be on the look out. We have a number of curs in the city that are not worth the powder to "blow 'em up," which ought to be knocked in the head. Let us have an ordinance to muzzle them. It is always best to go slow and learn to peddle.

THE EXCURSION TO PLEASANT LAKE.

A Successful Trip.

The excursion to Pleasant Lake last Tuesday was a grand affair. Several coaches were filled with passengers between Fort Wayne and Waterloo. The arrangement was gotten up for the benefit of the Catholic church of this place, and we are glad to know that our people generally took hold of the matter. Had it not been on the day of the Toledo excursion, the crowd would have been one-third larger.

Foot Race.

The foot race at Reading, Michigan, last Thursday, between Adsetts and Scott, was a put up job, so says the boys. Several of our sports took "paddles" in the race and after it was over they had "hard paddling to get home." About $200 changed hands. For further information, see Dave, Howard, Peterson or Tommy. "A word to the wise and so forth."

Religious Notes.

—A new church is being built in the North part of the county. We learn it is a German Reform.

—Rev. Johnson is expected home this week, and will fill the pulpit next Sunday at the Presbyterian church.

—Rev. Rice, of Corunna, preached at the Presbyterian church last Sabbath. The sermon was highly appreciated by the people present.

—Last Sunday was a pleasant day, the sun shining but very little and cool, but not chilly. The churches were all well attended. If the different denominations will furnish notes for our paper, we will keep up a religious column.

Deaths.

—Mr. William Davis, father of our popular hardware merchant of this city, died at Indianapolis on Saturday evening last. The remains were brought to this place for burial on Tuesday. Mr. Davis has many warm friends in this city and at Wabash, this State, who will feel sorrowful over the above facts.

—Mr. W. L. Penfield lost his only child, about three months old, last Monday morning. We did not learn the nature of the disease.

Corunna Items.

—Jim Finch is on the horse trade.

—Several stores have been broken into lately. Nothing of any great importance was taken.

—A new grocery has been established there.

—The barber shop is ousgespiled. There ought to be a good sale for razors.

Mrs. T. B. Hall, at Corunna, received a beautiful present last week in the shape of an eight pound boy. During the night it carries the tune of Tommy, dear Tommy—get up.

—We met Dr. Merser and had quite a conversation with him. As a Republican candidate for Senator, in our opinion, and if nominated and elected, will be a man in the right place. But Demoeracy is bound to win.

NOTICE.

Proposals will be received at the Auditor's office until the 5th day of August, 1876, for furnishing 175 cords of Sugar, Beech or Hickory wood; to be thirty (30) inches in length, cut square at both ends, all to be sound body wood and not less than three or more than eight inches in diameter, to be closely piled six feet high on longitudinal sticks of sufficient size to keep the wood off the ground. Said wood to be delivered and piled inside the Court yard (where directed by the Auditor) on or before the 20th day of October, 1876. No bids will be received for less than 20 cords.

By order of the Board of Commissioners.

Auburn, Ind., July 25th, 1876.

ISAAC HAGUE,
Auditor.

Bro. Weamer's paper puts us in mind of a story we heard when we used to play marbles and sich: A boot-black wanted to become pious and was told he should attend Sunday School and church and the preacher would tell him how he could get his desire. The next Sunday the little fellow went, and took a seat in the bible class. Every eye in the house was upon him and each one wondering in their mind what he was doing there, so young, so ragged and so dirty. The small bell was rang by the Superintendent and the school called to order. The preacher, after stating the lesson, turned to the little boy and asked: "Don't you want to go back with them other little boys?" "No, Sir, they told me you could tell me the way to heaven, and that when you wrote your sermon for Sunday, you never wrote a lie." The minister stood for a moment, looked at the old gray heads seated in his class and said: "And my little son, you would like to go to heaven, would you?" "Yes, sir, I would," said the boy, and looking the minister straight in the face, he asked, "when are you going, sir? There was profound silence in that class. And, Bro. Weamer, some day, one will ask you a similar question and you will be as badly stuck as the minister if you don't inquire into the facts of some of your articles before publishing them.

Billy Zacher stepped on a broken tumbler last night. Right away quick he waltzed on one foot to the tone of "oh, where, oh, where was he?"

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from active practice having had placed in his hands by and East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering he will send free of charge to all who desire it this receipt with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp naming this paper.

Think for yourself.

Thousands lead miserable lives, suffering from dyspepsia and disordered stomachs and liver, producing billiousness, heartburn, costiveness, weakness, irregular appetite, low spirits, raising food after eating, and often ending in fatal attack of fever. They know they are sick, yet get little sympathy. The unfailing remedy, which is yearly restoring thousands, is Dr. Costa's Radical cure. Sold by F. E. Davenport, the Druggist, Cor. Main and Nineth streets. A 25c bottle will convince you of its merits. Don't delay another hour after reading this, but go and get a bottle, and your relief is as certain as live. Will you do it, or will you continue to suffer? Think for yourself!

Professor Parker's Pleasant Warm Syrup is perfectly safe and extremely palatable. No physic required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

An Ordinance to Build Sidewalks.

Whereas public convenience requires that sidewalks be built and maintained, said sidewalks located in the incorporated town of Auburn, DeKalb County, Indiana.

Sec. 1. Therefore be it ordained by the Board of Trustees of said incorporated town of Auburn that sidewalks be constructed and located as follows, on the east end of lots and parts of lots boardering on and lying on the west side of Jackson street: Commencing at the north-east corner of lot number 1, and continuing on the east end of lots number 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, [illegible] 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, and 40, all situated in the western addition to the said town of Auburn, in said County and State. Said sidewalks to be built as follows, not less than six [6] feet in width, on a grade with the street, and to be made of good sound oak or pine timber. If made of oak timber the plank is to be not less than one and one fourth inches in thickness nor more than eight [8] inch wide, placed upon three (3) sleepers, running lengthways of the walk, of not less than three [3] by five [5] inches in dimentions. If laid out of pine lumber, to be of sound lumber, not less than one and a half [1½] inches thick, nor more than twelve [12] inches wide, placed upon sleepers runnining crossways of said walk, at intervals of not more than three [3] feet, said sleepers to be not less that three [3] by five (5) inches in demensions, of good sound oak lumber.

Sec. 2. Whereas an emergency exists, this ordinance shall take effect immediately after its publication in the Auburn Courier, a newspaper published in said town of Auburn, DeKalb Co., Indiana.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE cottage of George M. Pullman, of Long Branch, was robbed the other day of diamonds and jewelry valued at $2,500....Another successful experiment in the sale of heavy lots of dry goods at auction was made in New York last week. The sale was the largest of the kind ever held in America, comprising 13,000 packages valued at from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000. The goods were sold for cash, and realized about 25 per cent. below prevailing rates.... The three events of the inter-collegiate regatta came off at Saratoga, N. Y., on the 19th of July, and the trophies all go to Ithaca to keep company with the flags won by Cornell last year. The University race was the most closely contested, Harvard coming in a length and a half behind, Columbia was third, Union fourth, and Wesleyan and Princeton far in the rear. The single-scull race was won easily by Francis, of Cornell (a son of John M. Francis, of the Troy Times), Danforth, of Harvard, alone proving a respectable antagonist. The Freshman race was a walk-away for Cornell; the Harvard crew failing to make as good time as they had in private.

By the capsizing of the yacht Mohawk, in New York bay, a few days ago, William T. Garner, a well-known manufacturer and yachtsman, his wife, his brother-in-law, Frost Thorne, Miss Adele Hunter, a young lady well known in New York society, and a cabin-boy lost their lives. There were several other persons on the yacht in addition to the crew at the time of the disaster, but they were rescued with the exception of one or two of the crew....A terrible tragedy is reported from Pemberton, Pa. Sheppard P. Wiley, a wealthy wool merchant of that place, murdered his young wife, of whom he had been jealous, by braining her with a hatchet, and then committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor.

THE WEST.

A LETTER has been received at Fort Lincoln, D. T., from Col. Poland, commanding the Sixth Infantry, reviving the rumor that Sitting Bull was killed in the battle of June 25, when Custer and his command were slaughtered. The story was brought by a small party of the hostile Sioux, who reported that 300 soldiers and 200 Indians were killed, among them Sitting Bull and other chiefs.... It is believed that Sitting Bull's band must have obtained $15,000 or $20,000 in money and jewelry from Custer and his men, as the command had just been paid off, and had had no chance to spend it. This money will enable Sitting Bull to buy as much ammunition as he may need for summer. White traders along the Montana and Pembina line are well supplied and always ready to sell ammunition to hostile Indians, if they have money to pay for it.

THE rumors that have been afloat, to the effect that Gen. Crook had met the fate of Custer and his men, prove to have been without foundation. At last accounts Crook was still safe, though confronted by a large, savage force. He was awaiting reinforcements, which have probably reached by this time.... Advices have reached Omaha to the effect that the Indians are moving on Medicine Bow, a station on the Union Pacific almost due south of Fort Fetterman, it is supposed, for the purpose of capturing or destroying the supplies which have been stored there recently in great quantities by the Government, there being 60,000 rounds of ammunition there, among other things. A very small force of Indians could seize and destroy these stores, as Medicine Bow is a small station, and the country round about is sparsely settled. Their destruction at this time would seriously impede military operations against the Indians. ....A Cheyenne dispatch says that, in consequence of a report that 800 Cheyennes where about to leave Red Cloud Agency for the north, Gen. Merritt has delayed the proposed movement of the Fifth Cavalry northward from Fort Laramie to join Crook, and has moved it to a position where it expects to intercept these Indians, and, if possible, give them a warm reception....A young man named Patrick O'Neil died in Chicago, the other day, of hydrophobia, caused by the bite of a dog inflicted about eight months ago.

GEN. SHERIDAN is in receipt of dispatches from Gen. Crook, dated "Camp on Goose Creek, Wyoming, July 13," in which he says: "The best information I can get from my front is that the Sioux have three fighting men to my one, although I have no doubt of my ability to whip them with my present force, but the victory would likely be one barren of results, and so I have thought it better to defer an attack until I can get the Fifth here, and then end the campaign with one crushing blow. The hostile Indians are, according to my advices, encamped on the Little Horn, near the base of the mountain, and will probably remain there until my reinforcements come up."

A SINGULAR domestic tragedy was enacted in Chicago a few days ago. A married woman named Mrs. Henry Wilner, while laboring under a temporary fit of insanity, threw her two children into the river and then jumped in herself. All three were drowned before assistance could reach them....A fine corn crop is predicted in Minnesota....Four miners from Deadwood arrived at Sioux City, the other day, with a large quantity of gold, one of them having sixty ounces. They state that claims in that locality are paying from $100 to $400 per day per man. Provisions are now to be had at reasonable figures. On the way out they met 300 teams loaded with supplies between Fort Pierre and the hills.

HON. GEORGE E. PUGH died at Cincinnati last week of paralysis. He was 54 years old ... A Cheyenne dispatch of the 20th states that Gen. Merritt has successfully intercepted the 800 Cheyenne Indians who had left the agency, and driven them back to that place.

THE rumored death of Sitting Bull, Crazy Horse, and Black Moon, in the fight with Custer's command, is confirmed in a special to the St. Paul Pioneer-Press from Bismarck. It is insisted that these three great chiefs of the hostile Sioux were slain at the battle of the Little Horn, and that about 400 of their followers were sent to meet them in the happy hunting-grounds....Four miners, on their way from the Black Hills to Cheyenne, were recently killed and scalped by Indians.

WASHINGTON.

THE testimony taken by the Special Committee of the Senate who recently returned from Mississippi makes 1,700 pages. Senators Boutwell, McMillan, and Cameron, of Wisconsin, have begun the preparation of their report, which will be to the effect that gross outrages have been committed upon blacks, and that many have been causelessly slaughtered. The minority, Senators Bayard and McDonald, will give their views, to the effect that the outrages and other crimes are attributable to maladministration of the Government of that State, Gov. Ames, when in authority, having armed the colored militia against the whites, thus provoking collision.

PRESIDENT GRANT states that the reason why he asked Postmaster General Jewell to resign was that he interfered officiously with matters outside of his own department....Gen. T. W. Bennett, recently nominated for Governor of Idaho by the President, declines the office.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 20th says: "Gov. Chamberlain, of South Carolina, arrived here to-day, and had a consultation with Secretary Cameron and Attorney General Taft regarding the recent trouble at Hamburg. The Governor was fully informed as to what the views of the general Government are upon this affair, and they are substantially to the effect that the State of South Carolina should execute its laws and bring to prompt trial and punishment parties who are guilty of having incited the riotous demonstrations and murders just reported."

A WASHINGTON dispatch of July 21 says: "It has been represented in some quarters that Gov. Chamberlain, of South Carolina, was coming here to ask the interposition of Federal power, but this is not true. He does not believe this necessary, and is opposed to it, and does not ask it."

THE SOUTH.

HAYWOOD GRANT, a crime-stained villain who was hanged for arson at Rome, Ga., the other day, confessed to having committed four murders, one of them being the killing of Gen. Hindman, at Helena, Ark., in the summer of 1868. Gen. Hindman was fired upon through an open window by an unknown assassin, and the murder has remained a mystery up to this time.

ARTHUR MORSE, a son of the late Prof. S. F. B. Morse, was recently killed by a railway accident near New Orleans. His head was severed from his body.

THE cotton worm has appeared in great abundance in all the cotton fields in Middle and South Alabama. They seem to be general, and fears are entertained, owing to their advanced state at this early date, of a total destruction of the crop. The corn crop will be the best ever made.

POLITICAL.

THE Liberal Republicans of New York have called a State Convention, to meet at Saratoga, on the 23d of August.

EX-SECRETARY BRISTOW, in a letter to the President, declines the latter's invitation to testify concerning Cabinet conversations. He says: "I respectfully suggest that the appearance of the several heads of departments before committees of Congress to testify to conversations between the President and themselves, running through a period of many months, would almost inevitably lead to disclosures of differences of recollection, and present to the country an unseemly conflict to which I could not willingly be a party; besides it seems to me that such an inquiry by a committee of Congress tends to the absorption if not the complete destruction of executive power, and to the establishment of a purely-legislative government. In any view I am able to take, it seems to me that duty requires me to adhere to my announced purpose not to answer the questions propounded to me by the committee. I beg to remind you that my opinion on this subject was repeatedly stated to you and members of the Cabinet, and as I understood met your and their approval. My withdrawal from the Cabinet does not alter or modify my duty in this respect, nor have my views undergone any change. I hope I will not be recalled by the committee, but should they see proper to call me again I cannot consent, as at present advised, to testify to conversations held with the President on official business."....Mr. Mason Brayman has been appointed by the President Governor of Idaho.

GENERAL.

THE report of mercantile failures by Messrs. Dun, Barlow & Co., for the six months ending on the 30th of June last, is out. It is not an encouraging document. The number of failures for the six months is 4,600, against 3,563 for the corresponding six months of last year, and the amount of these failures is $108,000,000, against $76,000,000 for the corresponding six months a year ago....The scarcity of small change will in all probability be speedily remedied. Congress has passed the Silver bill, which provides for the issue of $10,000,000 of subsidiary silver coin in exchange for legal tenders, and provides for the additional coinage of $20,000,000, or so much as will take the place of all outstanding fractional currency.... Gen. Custer had a life-insurance policy for $5,000; Capt. Yates, $5,000; Keogh, $10,000; Lieut. Calhoun, $5,000; Crittenden, $10,000; and Porter, $5,000....Sitting Bull and his braves are armed with Winchester rifles that are more effective than the arms of our own troops....Another King has come to visit, not to rule over us. Belgium's monarch, under the title of Count d'Artois, reached New York last Sunday, en route to the Centennial.

FOREIGN.

A PROPOSITION for the total abrogation of the laws restraining the freedom of the press has been defeated by the French Assembly by a large majority....The British turret-ship Thunderer, while making a trial trip in Stokes' Bay, a few days ago, exploded one of her boilers, killing twenty-five of her crew and wounding some sixty others, numbers of whom will die. The bodies of the killed were shockingly mutilated, the flesh being stripped from the limbs by escaping steam. The forward stokehole, where the explosion occurred, was divided from the after stokehole by water-tight bulkheads. The stokers in the latter were protected from the fragments caused by the explosion, but were literally boiled alive by the steam.

THE sentences upon the persons tried in connection with the recent outrage in Salonica have been increased. The Chief of Police has been degraded from his rank, and has fifteen years' penal servitude. The commander of the Turkish frigate is degraded from his rank, and has ten years' imprisonment. The commander of the citadel has three years' confinement in the fortress.

THE London Times' correspondent telegraphs from Perakin that the report of Gen. Olimpies, concerning Turkish cruelties, says: "The Turks have killed several hundred women and children. In Bosnia they are cutting women and children to pieces, throwing them in the air, and catching them upon bayonets. They cut off heads or noses of the dead and wounded, whereas the wounded Turkish prisoners are treated like Servians."....A Constantinople dispatch says the health of the Sultan causes great anxiety. He has never recovered from the shock caused by the suicide of the Sultan Abdul Aziz and the murder of Hussein Avni Pasha, Minister of War. He is a mere wreck, and utterly unfit for business. Some have positively declared that symptoms of softening of the brain have appeared.... Commercial interests in India are in a state of fearful stagnation. The London Times of July 18 says: "Except the mutiny, this is the worst crisis in Anglo-Indian history, and there are few instances anywhere of a calamity so crushing and so general."....The city of Vienna was visited by a severe earthquake shock on the 17th of July.

IT is estimated that 20,000 Bulgarian and Bosnian volunteers have taken up arms against Turkey....A Vienna dispatch says an outbreak of the party opposed to the war is expected in Central Servia. False telegrams are being secretly disseminated announcing the annihilation of the Servian army.

IT is reported that Russia, thinking the Turkish war likely to become savage and fanatical, intends shortly to urge upon the powers the necessity of arranging an armistice.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, July 14.—Senate.—The conference reports on the Silver and Bankrupt bills were concurred in and the bills passed....The River and Harbor bill was discussed....The impeachment trial was postponed till Monday, on account of the absence of the witness Evans.

House.—The Massachusetts contested-election case of Frost (sitting member) versus Abbott was decided in favor of the latter.... The conference report on the bill to amend the Bankrupt law was adopted....A large number of bills of a private character were disposed of.

SATURDAY, July 15.—Senate.—After the passage of a few private bills, and the bill to extend the duration of the Court of Commissioners of the Alabama Claims to Jan. 1, 1877, the Senate worked the entire day on the River and Harbor Appropriation bill.

House.—A pension of $50 per month was voted to the widow of the late Gen. Custer....The House defeated, in committee of the whole, the bill for the protection of the Texas frontier. Smalls offered an amendment providing that "no troops shall be withdrawn from South Carolina so long as the militia of that State, peacefully assembled, are assaulted, disarmed, taken prisoners, and then massacred in cold blood by lawless bands of men invading that State from the State of Georgia." An exceedingly lively debate followed, participated in by Smalls, Conger, Bright, Cox, Hartridge, Rainey, and Jones (Ky.); but without reaching a vote on the amendment the committee rose and the House adjourned.

MONDAY, July 17.—Senate.—The witness Evans not having arrived, the impeachment trial was adjourned until Wednesday, 19th....The Senate spent the entire day on the River and Harbor bill.

House.—The following bills were introduced: By Hepkins, appropriating $100,000 for the continuance of the Washington monument. By Phillips (Kansas), authorizing the President to accept the services of volunteers from Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Wyoming, Colorado, Dakota and Utah, against the Sioux Indians. By Wade, for the erection of an equestrian statue of Gen. Custer, in Washington. By Landers, for the immediate utilization of gold and silver bullion, by certificates of a value to encourage the coining thereof, and to make the standard silver dollar a full legal tender. By Eames, an addition to the bill for resumption of specie payments, requiring 6 per cent. of the amount of the standing legal-tender notes to be set aside in coin every year until the legal tenders are of equal value with gold. By McDougall, a bill granting pensions to the heirs of the officers and men killed in Custer's recent battle with the Sioux at increased rates proportionate to that of $5 per month, the increase in the legal pension of a Lieutenant Colonel.... A resolution was adopted authorizing the appointment of a committee to proceed to California after the adjournment, to investigate, conjointly with the Senate committee, or otherwise, the extent and effect of the Chinese immigration. Bills were passed to pay the states of California and Oregon for expenses in suppressing Indian hostilities in 1872 and 1873, and removing the political disabilities of G. T. Beauregard....Two unsuccessful attempts were made during the day to instruct the Banking and Currency Committee to report a bill to repeal the Resumption act.

TUESDAY, July 18.—Senate.—The Senate gave up a good portion of the day to a spirited discussion of political questions, Merrimon and Morton being the principal spokesmen....Boutwell made a personal explanation, stating that the Democratic platform adopted at St. Louis charged the late Secretary of the Treasury (alluding to himself) had forced balances in the public accounts. He denied that such was the case, and read from the report of the Finance Committee, recently made to the Senate, stating that they were fully satisfied that not the slightest change had been made in the books. Davis said that if the books of the Treasury Department had not been changed, the official statements sent to Congress had.

House.—A fierce political debate raged in the House all day, the occasion being the amendment of Smalls to the bill for the protection of the Texas frontier, in connection with the Hamburg troubles, that no troops shall be withdrawn from South Carolina. Smalls advocated his amendment, and was replied to by Cox, who said that the amendment had been offered for bad political purposes. Townsend followed Cox, and made a bitter attack upon the Democratic party. He spoke of William M. Tweed as the ruler of New York city for more than twelve years, and said that during that time, when Tammany Hall was in its power and glory, under Tweed, the gentleman from Ohio (Cox) brought his little carpet-bag into the city of New York, set it down in Tammany Hall, and looked up smiling for the approbation of William M. Tweed. Cox, in reply, reminded Townsend that it was because of Gov. Tilden's eminent services in driving out Tweed that he was now the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. As to his (Cox's) taking his carpet-bag from Ohio, he had always maintained his right of locomotion, and he had the right to go back to New York in sight of his grandfather's old Congressional District. He did not care where a man was born, so long as he was good and just. Lamar got the floor and spoke of the Hamburg affair as disgraceful and terrible, but he denied that its circumstances were a legitimate topic in the House debate. There were one or two facts that gleamed out indisputably. One of these was that a body of white men had put to death without authority of law a number of colored citizens while prisoners, not prisoners in the legal sense, inasmuch as these white men had no right to deprive them of their personal liberty. He wished to say in this place that no excuse or palliation could possibly be found for that outrage and barbarism. [Applause on the Republican side of the House.] The South had its lawless class, as the North had. He declared that there was not a community in the South which had not been struck with horror at such occurrences as the Hamburg affair. He deemed it a wonder that society under the Governments which allowed such lawlessness to stalk abroad in the land did not go to pieces. He declared that the use of the army had never produced a good effect in such cases. The troops always got there after the occurrence. In conclusion, he declared the occurrence at Hamburg was a mobific element, not sporadic, but unnatural, and one that would disappear under good government. At the close of the debate Hancock moved a substitute for Smalls' amendment, to the effect that no troops shall be taken from any State or service where public interest requires their continuance. Smalls accepted the substitute, and it was agreed to—86 to 83. The discussion of the South Carolina matter was subsequently reopened by Hoge and continued by Cox, each speaking of the other as the carpet-bagger from Ohio, but Hoge saying he had carpet-bagged with a knapsack, to which Cox reiterated, with an intimation that Hoge needed a knapsack to carry all that he had picked up. Foster called upon Representatives from Georgia to stop these infernal outrages, and to be active in hunting out the inhuman fiends that crossed the bridge from Augusta to Hamburg. Do this, and then sing to us a panegyric in vindication of outraged law, instead of talking about your noble blood, aye, a nobility that murders in cold blood a captured negro. If you have not the ability to stop these outrages you are not fit to be representatives of the people of Georgia. Do it, and we will say "Well done," and we will fall on your necks and rejoice. [Mocking laughter on the Democratic side and shouts of "No!" "No!"] Cook—"You have fallen on our property and everything else, and we don't want you to fall on our necks." Cox ridiculed Foster's expression about falling on the necks of Southern men, and asked him why he had not fallen on the necks of Pratt, Yaryan, Dyer, Jewell, and others, and suggested that he would rather fall on the necks of McKee, McDonald, Joyce, Babcock, Delano, and Avery, and would even rather embrace a barrel of crooked whisky. [Loud laughter and much confusion.] The Republican side of the House had defended Grant and his administration against those men, and when the gentleman from New York (Townsend) talked so glibly of Tweed and others with whom he (Cox) had no association, he wanted to know how it was with Babcock, with Avery, with Williams, and the rest of these men. Townsend—"When did you dissolve association with them?" Cox—"I never had any connection with them to dissolve. It was the Republican Legislature, of which you were the great trumpeter, which helped Tweed to his frauds in New York. Everybody knows that I never in my life gave voice or vote to help him." Townsend—"You never cast a vote against Tammany since God made you! [Loud shouts to order.] You are the most perfect tool of Tammany who has ever been in New York." [Laughter, uproar, and great confusion.] You had to leave that chair, thank God, at the call of Kelly and go to St. Louis. Thank God you are out of it and can't get back!" Mr. Cox—"You sit down—I have the floor. When you say that I left that chair at the beck of any one, it is untrue. I was elected as a delegate from my district, and, my alternate not being there, I had to go; but it was at no man's call" [shouts of "Time!" "Time!" "Order!" "Order!" and great confusion.]

WEDNESDAY, June 19.—Senate.—Consideration of the articles of impeachment was resumed, and John S. Evans, the Fort Sill post-trader, was examined. He testified that Belknap was ignorant of the understanding between him and the deceased and the present Mrs. Belknap, but admitted that Belknap brought him and Marsh together when the arrangements were made, and the whole of the evidence of both Evans and Crosby, the chief clerk of the department (who also testified), was damaging to Belknap....Conference reports on the Army and Sundry Civil Appropriation bills were agreed to.

House.—Jones, from the Committee on Railroads, reported a bill incorporating the United States Central Railroad Company, for the construction of a passenger and freight railway from Chicago, through Indianapolis, Lexington, Ky., Ashville, N. C., and Spartansburg, S. C., to Charleston, Port Royal, and Savannah, with another branch to St. Louis. Referred to the committee of the whole.... The Senate bill, extending the duration of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims until the 1st of January next, was passed....The House then considered the South Carolina contested-election case, the unanimous report of the committee being that neither the sitting member, Mackey, nor the contestant Butts, is entitled to a seat. The report was agreed to without a division....The conference report on the Army Appropriation bill was agreed to, and the bill goes to the President for signature....The bill for the protection of the Texas frontier was considered in committee of the whole.

THURSDAY, July 20.—Senate.—Patterson submitted a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, any information that he may have in regard to the riot at Hamburg, S. C.... A bill was passed to continue for ten days the act to provide temporarily for the expenses of the Government....The impeachment trial was resumed at noon, and Blair, of counsel, opened the argument for the defense, holding that the impeachment should be dismissed on the ground that more than one-third of the Senate voted against it. He was followed by Lynde for the prosecution, who commented on the effect of the vote of less than two-thirds of the Senate voting in favor of jurisdiction, and argued that in the impeachment of Judge Barnard, of New York, various Senators who voted against jurisdiction voted in favor of his conviction. The question of jurisdiction in this case had been decided according to law, and was binding upon all Senators. He quoted from numerous legal authorities in support of his views.

House.—The bill for the protection of the Texas frontier was passed, authorizing the President to station (and keep on the Rio Grande) two regiments of cavalry for field service, in addition to such infantry force as may be necessary for garrison duty.... Randall made a conference report on the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, which was adopted....Bills were passed appropriating $7,000 for the joint select committee on Chinese immigration, extending to the 31st of July the act making temporary provision for the expenses of the Government, and to punish the counterfeiting of trade-marks.

WILLIAM A. WHEELER.

His Letter Accepting the Republican Nomination for the Vice Presidency.

MALONE, N. Y., July 15, 1876.

The Hon. Edward McPherson and others of the Committee of the Republican National Convention:

GENTLEMEN: I received, on the 5th inst., your communication advising me that I had been unanimously nominated by the National Convention of the Republican party, held at Cincinnati on the 14th ult., for the office of Vice President of the United States, and requesting my acceptance of the same, and asking my attention to the summary of the Republican doctrines contained in the platform adopted by the convention.

A nomination made with such unanimity implies a confidence on the part of the convention which inspires my profound gratitude. It is accepted with a sense of the responsibility which may follow. If elected, I shall endeavor to perform the duties of the office in the fear of the Supreme Ruler, and in the interest of the whole country.

To the summary of doctrines enunciated by the convention, I give my cordial assent. The Republican party has intrenched in the organic law of our land the doctrine that liberty is the supreme, unchangeable law for every foot of American soil. It is the mission of that party to give full effect to this principle, by "securing to every American citizen complete liberty and exact equality in the exercise of all civil, political, and public rights." This will be accomplished only when the American citizen, without regard to color, shall wear this panoply of citizenship as fully and securely in the canebrakes of Louisiana as on the banks of the St. Lawrence.

Upon the question of our Southern relations, my views were recently expressed as a member of a committee of the United States House of Representatives upon Southern affairs. Those views remain unchanged, and were thus expressed: "We, of the North, delude ourselves in expecting that the masses of the South, so far behind in many of the attributes of enlightened improvement and civilization, are, in the brief period of ten or fifteen years, to be transformed into our model Northern communities. That can only come through a long course of patient waiting, to which no one can now set certain bounds. There will be a good deal of unavoidable friction which will call for forbearance, and which will have to be relieved by the temperate and fostering care of the Government. One of the most potent, if not indispensable, agencies in this direction will be the devising of some system to aid in the education of the masses. The fact that there are whole counties in Louisiana in which there is not a solitary school-house is full of suggestion. We compel these people to remain in the Union, and now duty and interest demand that we leave no just means untried to make them good, loyal citizens. How to diminish the friction, how to stimulate the elevation of this portion of our country, are problems addressing themselves to our best and wisest statesmanship. The foundation for these efforts must be laid in satisfying the Southern people that they are to have equal and exact justice accorded to them. Give them, to the fullest extent, every blessing which the Government confers upon the most favored; give them no just cause for complaint; and then hold them, by every necessary means, to an exact and rigid observance of all their duties and obligations under the constitution and its amendments, to secure to all within their borders manhood and citizenship, with every right thereto belonging."

The just obligation to public creditors, created when the Government was in the throes of threatened dissolution, and as an indispensable condition of its salvation, guaranteed by the lives and blood of thousands of its brave defenders, are to be kept with religious faith, as are all the pledges subsidiary thereto, and confirmatory thereof. In my judgment the pledge of Congress of Jan. 14, 1875, for the redemption of the notes of the United States in coin, is the plighted faith of the nation, and national honor, simple honesty, and justice to the people whose permanent welfare and prosperity are dependent upon true money as the basis of their pecuniary transactions, all demand the scrupulous observance of this pledge, and it is the duty of Congress to supplement it with such legislation as shall be necessary for its strict fulfillment.

In our system of government, intelligence must give safety and value to the ballot. Hence the common schools of the land should be preserved in all their vigor, while, in accordance with the spirit of the constitution, they and all their endowments should be secured by every possible and proper guaranty against every form of sectarian influence or control.

There should be the strictest economy in the expenditures of the Government consistent with its effective administration, and all unnecessary offices should be abolished. Offices should be conferred only upon the basis of high character and particular fitness, and should be administered only as public trusts, and not for private advantage.

The foregoing are chief among the cardinal principles of the Republican party, and to carry them into full practical effect is the work it now has on hand. To the completion of its great mission we address ourselves in hope and confidence, cheered and stimulated by the recollection of its past achievements, remembering that, under God, it is to that party that we are indebted, in this centennial year of our existence, for a preserved, unbroken union; for the fact that there is no master or slave throughout our broad dominions, and that emancipated millions look upon the ensign of the republic as the symbol of the fulfilled declaration that "all men are created free and equal," and the guaranty of their own equality under the law with the most highly-favored citizen of the land. The intelligence and conscience of all who desire good government, good-will, good money, and universal prosperity, the Republican party, not unmindful of the imperfection and shortcomings of human organization, yet with the honest purposes of its masses promptly to retrieve all errors and to summarily punish all offenders against the laws of the country, confidently submits its claims for the continued support of the American people. Respectfully, (Signed) WILLIAM A. WHEELER.

The New Postal Law.

The Postmaster General has sent the following circular to the postmasters throughout the country:

The following section of a law has been passed by Congress and approved by the President:

"SEC. 15. That transient newspapers and magazines, regular publications designed primarily for advertising purposes, or for free circulation at nominal rates, and all printed matter of the third class, except unsealed circulars, shall be admitted to and transmitted in the mails, at the rate of 1 cent for every two ounces, or fractional part thereof; and 1 cent for each additional two ounces or fractional part thereof; and the sender of any article of the third class of mail matter may write his or her name or address therein, or on the outside thereof, with the word 'From' above or preceding the same, or may write, briefly, or print on any package, the number and names of any articles inclosed. Publishers of newspapers and periodicals may print on the wrappers of newspapers or magazines sent from the office of publication to regular subscribers the time to which subscription therefor has been paid; and addresses upon unsealed circulars may be either written, printed, or affixed thereto, at the option of the sender.

"SEC. 16. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

On unsealed circulars, and all mailable matter of the third class, other than that designated in the foregoing section, postage will be charged as heretofore — 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof.

JAMES N. TYNER, Postmaster General.

THE NEW WORLD'S FAIR.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

SPAIN.

This interesting country has entered with a large degree of sympathy into the enthusiasm and the practical idea of the exhibition. The exhibits are not confined in their ownership to any class, but every circle has sent its contribution. There are some beautiful embroidered shawls from Madrid. Fans are also in great variety of style and finish. Nowhere does the fan come into greater play than in the graceful hands of a Castilian maiden. Barcelona sends paper. Toledo is to Spain what Liege is to Belgium, Birmingham to England, and Springfield to the United States. The blades of this old city are famous the world over. I saw one that is put in a semi-circular case, and after being confined for a long period will spring to the full tension on release. The elasticity of these old Toledo blades is wonderful.

SWISS WATCH-WORK.

The Swiss lead the column in this branch. In Neuchatel 20,000 women are engaged at $3.75 a week, who make 1,500,000 watches yearly, besides movements for the American market. Berthoud says, "To become a good watchmaker, it is necessary to be an arithmetician, geometrician, a mechanician and an artist, to know how fluids resist bodies in motion, the effect of heat and cold on metals, and a happy genius to apply all." It is said there are 102 distinct branches of this art, to each of which a boy may be put apprentice, the watch-finisher being the only one who can work out of his department.

Watch-making was introduced into Switzerland in 1769 by Daniel John Richard La Lange. It is to this liberal Swiss that woman is indebted for a recognition of her valuable services in this mechanical art. One factory, American, represented at the Exhibition employ 700 women, whose earnings are $10 per week. The exhibition of Swiss watches is handsome, and with other novelties in delicate work enable the Swiss to sustain their reputation or skill and enterprise.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The Cape of Good Hope is represented at the Exhibition in seeds, woods, diamonds, in their crude state, which from their size would stand much cutting off from the hands of the lapidary, and then they would be of large size and of immense value. A large assortment of wines are on exhibiton from the Cape, skins, etc. The collection is valuable and very interesting, and is additional proof of the interest taken by the people of the geographical extremes of the world in America, and the creations of her energy and genius.

GERMAN EXHIBITS.

Germany has an extensive line of exhibits in every department—horse hair spun by the German, English and French processes, mathematical instruments. This is a marked specialty with the Germans, their work in these articles dating back to the fifteenth century, until now. The annual production of single establishments may be said to aggregate 4,000 sets of instruments. There are sixty shops for mathematical instruments at Nuremburg. Large quantities are shipped to the United States.

GERMAN BOOK TRADE.

This was initiated by the invention of book-printing in 1440, and in 1875 there were 4,616 publishers and booksellers in communication with the agency at Leipsic. At present there are published in the domain of the German tongue 12,000 volumes of new works, continuations and new editions a year. This is against not more than 5,000 published in France or England. The sale of German books annually amounts to $17,500,000. There are elegant specimens of German literature on exhibition. Jewelry is another of the specialties that the German defies competition in. One town, Hanau, has 280 manufactories of gold and gilt jewelry; 150 smaller shops, 178 assistant shops, altogether working 8,000 people. These exhibits are generally of a cheap grade.

WINE.

If beer is a German specialty, and there are some hopping specimens in the Exhibition—so they say who skip round with a score or so of zwei lager under their vest—yet the Teuton is not indifferent to the charming influence of the juice of the grape. There are 310,000 acres of land in Germany devoted solely to the culture of the vine. There are 80,000 acres in the newly-acquired provinces of Alsace and Lorraine. No wonder Germany fought so hard for this favored spot. Next Bavaria, the Palatinate; then Prussia, Wurtemberg, Baden, and Hesse; making together 58,000,000 gallons, specimens of which visitors to the Exhibition pronounce good.

BEER.

Bavaria devotes 44,000 square acres to hops. In Nuremburg there are 120 hop houses, and this venerable city is the scientific center for Germany. Query—Is malt good for science? In Bavaria there are 5,000 breweries, the greatest part of the production being consumed at home. The annual product of the breweries amounts to 336,887,000 gallons. Looking at these figures, and then taking the population of Bavaria, which is 4,700,000, what a happy family Bavaria presents to the world. Bavarian beer is famous at the Exhibition, and with Vienna beer bears off the palm from less-significant nationalities.

WOOLEN CLOTHS.

Germany is making wonderful progress in cloths, the Bioli and Simoni ranking with the best French in finish and texture, in fact, a large proportion are sold as French manufacture. Their imitations of Smyrna carpets are nearly as beautiful as the Oriental. In cotton goods the Germans are not far behind the French and English.

MISCELLANY.

Twenty-seven mowing machines contested for the championship of the world; they made their fight on 40 acres of ground. Each machine cut about a half acre of grass.

South of Machinery Hall is a building containing an interesting exhibit. It is called the Nevada Quartz Mill, and was established with a part of the $20,000 appropriated by Nevada toward her Centennial display. The remainder of the money was devoted to the State building. In this quartz mill is performed the entire process of extracting gold and silver from quartz. The rock is finely pulverized in a pounding machine, from which the powder runs into a tank of water and settles to the bottom. The water is then allowed to run off, and the sediment is put into a cylindrical vessel, called an amalgamating pan or grinder; here more water is put on, and also mercury, in the proportion of 175 pounds to two tons of mixture. The mercury begins to collect the gold and silver as soon as the grinder gives the mixture a circular motion. While grinding, the mixture is also kept heated to the boiling point, the better to infuse the mercury. The latter is then allowed to run into another cylindrical vessel, called a settler, where it is stirred, and cooled, the compound of mercury, gold and silver meanwhile settling at the bottom. The metallic compound flows out at the bottom through an inverted siphon, from the widened mouth of which it is dipped and put in a filter. Through the latter nearly all the quicksilver escapes and is collected, and the amalgam of gold, silver and mercury is left behind ready for the mint. All the machinery is operated by steam. The quartz came from the Consolidated Virginia mine in Nevada. Much of the silver obtained from it is converted into Nevada Centennial medals in the mint.

J. B.

THE Texas Legislature recently passed a bill which makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of $100, for a person to use profane language within the hearing of any private dwelling. The Morristown Herald says that a man's mule got balky in a Texas town the other day, and the man [illegible]. The beast would start off suddenly, run about twenty yards, and then stop fifteen minutes to survey the neighborhood, and before the man got out of town he owed the authorities $80,000.

A GEORGIA musical critic says: "At the concert in Griffin the other night, a solo sang by Mrs. Clara R. Johnson received rapturous applause. Her voice is rich, clear and full of melody. It falls upon the [illegible] like silver spray upon a sea of molten gold dotted with floating diamonds and precious pearls."

BOLD HIGHWAYMEN.

Particulars of the Missouri Train Robbery

The most connected account of the recent robbery of a train near Sedalia, Mo., is furnished by J. B. Bushnell, the express messenger who accompanied the train:

"The first intimation I had of the matter, I was standing in the car doorway when the train stopped suddenly. Some fellow on the bank hallooed, 'Shoot the son of a gun,' and blazed away at me. The bullet lodged in the side of the door. Then two or three more shots were fired, and I jumped back.

"The brakeman was standing in the door of the smoking-car. He says, 'I have got a revolver. Do you want one?' I told him I did, and he gave me the revolver. I took out the safe key and gave it to him, and told him to go to the rear of the train, as I didn't want to give up the safe key unless forced to do so. I started to go back in the baggage-car, and had just got on the platform, when they commenced shooting again, and said, 'Get off, you son of a ——,' and I stepped inside the door of the smoking-car. Five men jumped into the baggage-car, and told the baggageman to give up the key, thinking he was the express messenger. He told them he was not the messenger, but they, not placing any confidence in his statement, went through him, of course without finding the key. They wanted to know where the messenger was, and told the baggageman if he didn't tell them damned quick, they'd teach him a lesson he wouldn't soon forget. He told them I was back in the rear end of the train, upon which they told him he must find me or they'd kill him. They then took hold of him and marched him back to the rear end of the train, where I was standing. One of them spoke to me, and said, 'You're the man I want. Come forward and unlock that safe without any nonsense!' I told him I hadn't the key. He said, 'you want to find it damned quick or I'll kill you!' Three of them then marched me through the coach into the sleeper where the brakeman was, and made him give up the key. Next they marched me into the baggage-car, and, pointing their pistols at my head, demanded I should unlock the safe, which, under the pressure, I did. Then they took the money out of the United States safe and put it in a sack. Then they wanted me to go through the other safe. I assured them I had no key for that, as it was a through safe. One man then went into the engine cab, procured a coal pick and came back with it. They first pounded away at the hinges, but finding they would not give way, broke open one of the panels, a single thickness of iron. When through, they wanted to know if that was all I had. I told them it was. They looked through the packing trunks, but found nothing they cared for. They broke the lock off the train-boy's chest, helped themselves to apples and such things, and topped off with taking all the cigars he had.

"One, the ring-leader, wanted to know where they kept the water. Some one pointed out the water-cooler, and he inquired if it was good. If they had put anything in it lately. They said, 'no!' He said he'd rather have somebody try it first, and, pointing to Conkling, said: 'Here, you s— of a b—, take a drink of that, I don't propose to run any chances in any of this water business.' After the party had drank some one suggested, 'Better go through the passengers,' but the leader was against it, saying, 'We have been an hour here already, and can't waste any more time, as trains are coming up. Must get away.' Just as they left the leader said, 'Well, if you see any of Allan Pinkerton's men, tell them they had better come and find us.'"

Speaking of the leader, Bushnell says he was a very tall man, wearing a striped coat, dark pants, and hat, with a handkerchief tied over his face. He had light, straw-colored hair, and was sunburnt.

The other members of the crew were, with one exception, all tall men, and had white and red handkerchiefs over their faces, some with eye holes and some with nose holes. Some were only masked over the mouth and nose, leaving the eyes and forehead exposed. One man wore long gray whiskers. The small man of the party wore no mask, and had short stubby whiskers and beard.

So far as can be learned, the Adams Express Company loses some $4,000, and the United States Company about $12,000.

Lilies.

See the lilies "how they grow,"
Some with purest bells of snow,
Deeply scented, softest white,
Basking in the noonday light—
Breathing sweetness all the night.

Scarlet ones in brightest sheen
Lift their cups with graceful mien,
Mottled lilies perfumed rare;
Tinted ones fresh beauty wear,
Purple [illegible], passing fair.

Where the starry daisies beam,
Some with upright chalice gleam,
Gemmed with deep and sparkling dew,
Gazing at the sky's deep hue,
While soaring lark sings in the blue.

On the water's blue expanse,
Silver lilies smile and glance
In the morning's golden beams,
Where the fullest glory streams,
Fragrant lilies known in dreams.

In damp valleys' shaded dells,
Lilies swing their tiny bells,
Sending perfume on the air,
Dearest of the lilies fair
That have neither toil nor care

Bright arrayed, excelling far
Robes that richest monarchs wear—
Lifting incense as they glow—
Still, dear Lord, we do not know
Just how all Thy lilies "grow."

Around the Farm.

THE Judge of the Leeds County Court has given $25 and costs in an action brought by a farmer for damages to crops by smoke and sulphur created by fireclay manufacturers.—London News.

SALT brine impregnated with the blood etc., of herrings, is a good manure. Mixed with five times its measure of water, it may be applied between the rows of any of the cabbage tribe, and to rhubarb, beet-root, and to artichokes.

DORMANT buds, that start and rob the trees in June, should be rubbed out, and thus save much expense in pruning. If every tree in a young orchard is looked over once in a year with careful pruning, looking to the future and seeing in the infant trees the sturdy trunks and well-developed branches of the full-grown tree, then will the sound of the saw cease to be heard in our orchards.—Maine Farmer.

AN exchange newspaper replies to a correspondent who has inquired what is a good pasturing for sheep, as follows: "Rye sown on corn stubble in the spring will make a tolerable pasture for sheep, and light land managed in this way will be better fitted for a crop of wheat than to put on oats or any other crop, and allow the same to ripen. The sheep will always keep the land clear, and, the rye being consumed on the land as a matter of course, the soil will be proportionately enriched."

DON'T allow your carriage to rattle like a threshing machine. Washers of sole leather on the spindles of axletrees will stop the clatter caused by two much play; a piece of rubber put in between the trill iron and clip will silence matters; and a little coal oil on the circle or fifth wheel will stop its squeaking. Where nuts work loose, cut a thread in front of them with a cold chisel after screwing them up tight.

A GENTLEMAN who has just returned from a trip through the northern portion of Kennebec county, Maine, says he was greatly astonished at the extent of the caterpillar war on the fruit trees. Acres and acres of orchards standing within sight of the roadside stripped of leaves, blossoms, and every green thing, and look as bare and desolate as in December. The caterpillars hang in festoons, clusters and ropes of worms from all the trees, presenting a most disgusting sight.—Springfield Republican.

A BOSTON firm have packed pork for the last thirty years. In times past they have received hogs fed on the sweepings of flour mills, but the meat was so bleached and the fat so readily cracked up into distinct masses, that the pork was unmerchantable; and if all the hogs they prepare were fed on flour, their business would be destroyed. They state further that the bristles (hair) of the flour-fed hogs were very white and thin, so as to be worthless for the brushmakers. It is safe to infer that the chances for healthy hair are better with food that contains the full amount of mineral matter than with flour.—N. E. Farmer.

WHEN a barn is infested with fleas there is probably some cause for it that might be removed. Poultry will sometimes stock a barn with such vermin when they are permitted to roost in it. If hogs are kept under it, or manure is allowed to accumulate about it, vermin will gather and soon stock it. If any such cause as this exists, it should be removed. Then, when the barn is empty in the summer, it should be well cleaned out, a quantity of hot, clear coals should be placed upon a heap of earth on the floor, and the doors being closed, a pound of sulphur should be burned upon the coals. After a thorough fumigation, the barn should be whitewashed inside.

About the House.

INDIAN RUSK.—Two light cups of Indian meal, one cup of white flour, one teaspoonful of saleratus, enough sour or buttermilk to dissolve, one cup sweet; stir in three-quarters of a cup of molasses.

TO CLEAN ivory, take a piece of common white chalk, scrape it to a powder, add as much water as will produce a paste, and apply this paste to the surface of the ivory. If the stains are very bad, two or three, or even more, applications may be necessary.

BAKED SPONGE PUDDING.—Three eggs beaten very light. Their weight in butter, in sugar, and in flour. This quantity makes four large cups. Fill the cups half full, bake in a moderate oven ten minutes, being very careful not to scorch. To be eaten with cream sauce, hard sauce, or wine sauce.

FISH FRITTERS.—Take salt codfish, soak over night. In the morning throw the water off the fish, put on fresh and set it on the range until it comes to a boil. Do not let it boil, as that will harden it. Then pick it up very fine, season with pepper, mace, and perhaps a little salt. Make a batter of a pint of milk and three eggs, stir in the fish, and fry in small cakes. Any kind of codfish makes nice fritters.

KEEPING INSECTS FROM BACON.—Take cane molasses and apply to the flesh parts carefully, as much as will adhere, then sprinkle on as much ground black pepper as will adhere, and hang up in a smoke house or any place you wish to keep it. In order that this may be effectual it must be applied immediately after smoking, for if the egg of the fly, from which the worm is hatched, is deposited on the meat before the application is made, it will not be effective.

A LADY writing in an English agricultural paper recommends all young housekeepers to cultivate an acquaintance with culinary art, and there is no better way of acquiring and retaining this knowledge than by making a private recipe book in which to jot down all tried and approved recipes. She began this when about 12 years of age, at the suggestion of an experienced matron, herself a model of order in everything relating to housekeeping, and subsequent observation and experience have taught her to look back on that friendly counsel with respect and gratitude.

SAVAGE SLAUGHTER.

Previous Defeats by Indians—Some Bloody Reminiscences.

In its magnitude Custer's is the most crushing defeat that the American army has sustained at the hands of savages since the United States became a nation, if there be excepted St. Clair's disaster. This took place Nov. 4, 1791, when the Miamis, led by Mishekonequoh, better known as Little Turtle, utterly routed the American army under Gen. St. Clair, who lost 39 officers and 593 men. One of the few occasions on which Washington, himself versed in Indian warfare, and remembering the fate of the regulars under Braddock, lost his self-control, was when he received the news of this calamity. The news was brought to him by a special messenger while he was at dinner with company. He went out to speak with the messenger, returned to his seat, went through the dinner with perfect composure, and immediately attended Mrs. Washington's drawing-room, speaking courteously with every lady. When the company had gone and Mrs. Washington had retired, leaving the President and his Secretary, Mr. Sears, alone, Washington broke out again and again in terrible explosions of wrath. "Yes," he exclaimed, "here on this very spot I took leave of him; I wished him success and honor. 'You have your instructions from the Secretary of War,' said I. 'I had a strict eye to them, and will add but one word—Beware of a surprise.' He went off with that, my last warning, thrown in his ears. And yet, to suffer that army to be cut to pieces, hacked, butchered, tomahawked by a surprise—the very thing I had guarded him against. O, God! O, God! (throwing up his hands and shaking with emotion) he's worse than a murderer. How can he answer to his country? The blood of the slain is upon him, the curse of widows and orphans, the curse of heaven!"

The war of 1812 witnessed no serious defeat, the massacres of Chicago and Detroit having been wrought on defenseless prisoners. In 1835 came the Seminole war. Gen. Thompson, the Commissioner, when the Indians refused to emigrate, denying that they had signed the treaty of Fort Gibson understandingly, put Osceola in irons and provoked a war. On the 28th of December Osceola killed Thompson, a Lieutenant and several others at Fort King, and the same day, in the Wahoo swamp, fell on Maj. Dade and a body of 110 regulars and destroyed them completely; indeed, the bodies were not found for a long time. Thus began a war which cost the United States 1,466 lives and $10,000,000.

The next great Indian war was provoked by the massacre of some 500 Indians, principally women and children, Nov. 28, 1864, at Fort Lyon, by Col. Chivington, after they had been induced to go into camp in the vicinity of the troops. The Indians had vengeance for this in December, 1866. The Government had been constructing a new road to Montana, which the Indians claimed would drive the game out of their best hunting grounds; accordingly they opposed its making and use vigorously. From July 26 to Dec. 21 they attacked every train that passed over the road, and fifty-one times appeared in hostile array before Fort Phil Kearney and killed five officers, ninety-one men and fifty-eight citizens. Dec. 6 they attacked a wood-train two miles from the fort. Col. Fetterman, with fifty men, sallied out and rescued it. This gave the Indians the hint, and on the 21st they planned a similar attack, preparing an ambush. Col. Fetterman, Capt. Brown and Lieut. Grummond were sent out with ninety-one men, when the Indians, 3,000 strong, fell on them and destroyed them. Sixty-seven corpses were found in a space thirty-five feet in diameter. Col. Fetterman and Capt. Brown blew out each others' brains to avoid being taken alive.

Number of Nails to the Pound.

The following table shows the number of nails to the pound, in the different sizes from "3-penny" up to "20-penny," as well as the number of several sizes of spikes. The first column gives the size, the second the length in inches, and the third the number to the pound:

Sizes.	Length.	No. to lb.
3-penny	1	557
4-penny	1¼	353
5-penny	1¾	232
6-penny	2	167
7-penny	2¼	141
8-penny	2½	101
10-penny	2¾	68
12-penny	3	54
20-penny	3½	34
Spikes	4	16
Spikes	4½	12
Spikes	5	10
Spikes	6	7

From this table an estimate of quantity and suitable sizes for any job can be easily made.

THE Rev. Dr. Field, Bishop of the Church of England in Newfoundland, is dead. He was Bishop for thirty-two years, and was distinguished for zeal and assiduity. He spent a large portion of each year voyaging off the coast of Newfoundland in the "Church Ship," visiting his widely scattered flock in the bays and inlets of its two thousand miles of coast line. He had also Labrador and Bermuda under his jurisdiction, so that his was the most extensive diocese in the world.

THE Rev. Dr. Cuyler says that the pulpit is more influential in this country than in any other.

THE BELKNAP CASE.

Marsh's Remarkable Testimony.

[Washington Cor. New York Tribune.]

Mr. Carpenter had not recovered all his good nature since yesterday, but he was brighter, and in his cross-examination of Mr. Marsh he showed that he knew exactly what he would testify to. The testimony itself was most extraordinary. It had previously been proven by the testimony of Mr. Marsh—no longer ago than yesterday—that the payment to Mr. Belknap began a month after Mr. Evans was appointed as post-trader at Fort Sill; that Evans at first paid $12,000 a year, and then $6,000 a year, royalty to Mr. Marsh for obtaining the appointment; that Mr. Marsh regularly and from the first divided the amount equally with Gen. Belknap; that the payment began a month after the appointment and continued until last Christmas, when the last money was paid by Mr. Marsh to Mrs. Belknap, by Gen. Belknap's special direction. In the light of his testimony yesterday, that given by Mr. Marsh to-day was most remarkable. He said he never agreed with anybody to pay Gen. Belknap for his appointment, nor the appointment of Evans. He never had any arrangement with Gen. Belknap, never promised to pay him one-half the, or any, amount. He did pay Gen. Belknap half he received. He thought Gen. Belknap was induced almost wholly in making the appointment by his (Marsh's) kindness to Mrs. Belknap and Mrs. Bowen in New York.

During the direct examination of Mr. Marsh on yesterday, and the cross-examination by Mr. Carpenter to-day, it was evident certain points had been, for some unknown cause, purposely omitted There seemed to be a hitch in the examination, and the managers and counsel both appeared to be at a loss what next to do. At this point the Senators began to ask questions. Senator Mitchell was the first, and his question went directly to the mark: "Why did you give Mr. Belknap half of all the money you received from the Fort Sill transaction?" To this question Mr. Carpenter objected, but, as usual, was overruled. Mr. Marsh, with hesitation and without a blush, said he felt like doing it. It gave him pleasure to do it. The money he gave was merely a present to Gen. Belknap. Senator Edmunds sarcasticallay asked if Mr. Belknap knew beforehand how large the next present would be. Mr. Marsh said Mr. Belknap knew nothing about it, and, in answer to a question, said that he himself did not know how large the next remittance would be, for he had determined to send Gen. Belknap half the sum he derived from Fort Sill. Mr. Marsh denied that he had talked about the subject of the payment of Gen. Belknap to anybody except the present Mrs. Belknap, although he swore yesterday that he had been for five years paying Gen. Belknap money, and had sometimes paid it to him personally, and had reduced the installments from $1,500 to $750. What he said to Mrs. Belknap was at the time he came to Washington to attend the funeral of the former Mrs. Belknap, and he said, in substance, that the payment should be continued to the young child of Mrs. Belknap. Subsequently the child died, and the witness thought he would continue the payments to Gen. Belknap. In answer to other questions by Senators, Mr. Marsh said Gen. Belknap never asked where the money was coming from. It seemed rather singular that Gen. Belknap, who did not know Mr. Marsh very well, should receive from $3,000 to $6,000 a year from him in regular installments, and never ask even where it came from, and there is no disguising the fact that Senators looked upon the spectacle of the Secretary of War receiving money over the dead body of his wife and through the nursery of his children from a post-trader, without asking a question, with a feeling of ineffable contempt and loathing.

Italy's Greeting.

The President has received the following letter of congratulation from His Majesty the King of Italy on the occasion of the centennial celebration:

Victor Emmanuel II., by the grace of God and the will of the nation King of Italy, to the President of the United States of America, greeting:

MY VERY DEAR AND GOOD FRIEND: On the day upon which the great American republic celebrates the centennial anniversary of its existence, it is our desire to express our congratulations and those of our people to you personally and to the nation over which you preside, and which with admirable ability you have succeeded in directing to its noble destiny. Neither the distance which separates us nor any difference of race will ever weaken in us and in our people that firm friendship which unites us with the brave American nation, with which for a hundred years Italy has had relations productive of mutual esteem. We are inclined to convey to you these sentiments so much more readily because for the purpose of more worthily celebrating the memorable day by the monster exhibition at Philadelphia, you were pleased to invite to the festival all the nations of the earth. Accept the assurances of our highest esteem and friendship, together with the prayers which we offer to God that He may have you, my dear friend, in His holy keeping.

Given at Rome on the 11th of June, 1876.

Your good friend,
VICTOR EMMANUEL.

One Million Stamps.

The joker who offered a life annuity to the collector of 1,000,000 old postage stamps, without any idea that the offer would be accepted, has been brought to book at last by the young girl whose efforts to win the prize have been so frequently chronicled during the past two years. Everybody who heard the offer and had any power to assist in the matter, has seemed to take a malicious pleasure in helping the young collector, and contributions of stamps have poured in from all quarters, one especially-large one being a contribution of 50,000 from Paris. It helps one's faith in human nature to learn that the promise made in jest has been kept in earnest, and that the young girl has her annuity secured to her.

A Two-Headed Child.

A correspondent of the Petaluma (Cal.) Argus says that in the red woods about twenty miles from Petaluma there lives a family who have a female child about 8 years old, which has two well-developed and perfectly-formed heads and necks. According to this correspondent, the necks unite where the neck joins the backbone, and from that point downward to all appearance it is the body of but one child. The two heads are called Dollie and Ollie. Dollie has rich brown hair, dark hazel eyes, and is a brunette. Ollie has a fair skin, auburn hair, and blue eyes. They can each converse with different persons on different subjects at the same time, and are well informed and intelligent.

THE NUMBER NINE.

Curiosities and Mysteries of the Last of the Nine Digits.

[From the New York Mail.]

In reply to our request for the forgotten rule of proving addition or multiplication by "casting out the 9's," we have received several letters from San Antonio, Texas; Cape Vincent, N. Y.; Troy, N. Y.; Boston, and other places. The clearest explanation in case of multiplication is by N. McG., of Boston, who says:

I submit the following, which I remember to have seen in an old arithmetic, some twenty years ago, and since used by me to prove long sums in multiplication. I have often wondered why it should not be still in use, and finally made up my mind that it was because no one could explain why the process proved the accuracy of the work. Take the following example:

Multiplicand..........................874776
Multiplier............................284372

                                     1748752
                                    6120632
                                   2623128
                                  3479504
                                 6995008
                                1748752

Add together all the figures in the multiplicand and you get 35; divide this by 9, and it goes three times and leaves 8 over; put this remainder aside. Add in the same way the figures in the multiplier and you get 26, which is twice 9 and 8 over. Put this 8 remainder under the other 8 remainder. Now add the figures of the product, and you get 55. Divide this by 9, and set the remainder (which is 1) at the right of the two 8s. Now multiply the 8s—eight times 8 is 64; divide by 9—seven times 9 is 63—remainder 1. If this remainder is the same as the remainder from the product, you may be sure the multiplication and addition are correct. That is the case in the example here given. But if the remainders differ, there is an error somewhere. Our correspondent adds: "Should any 9 occur in the lines of figures added, cast it out." There is no occasion for that—it comes out, of course, when the sum is divided by 9.

The old phrase, "casting out the nines," is more elaborately explained by J. G. McN., of Troy. He gives a sum in addition, proceeding as follows:

58647—7 and 4 are 11—9 and 2 over; 2 and 8 are 10—
      9 and 1 over; 1 and 6 are 7 and 5 are 12—
      9 and 3 remain.
37821—Add and cast out same—3 remain.
79632—Add and cast out same—0 remain.
90096—Add and cast out same—0 remain.
17838—Add and cast out same—4 remain.
46507—Add and cast out same—4 remain.

328676—Add and cast out same—5 remain.

Add up the column of remainders, excluding that of the answer—4 and 4 are 8 and 3 are 11 and 3 are 14; throw out the 9 and the remainder is 5; that sum being the remainder from the product the addition is correct.

Turkish Slave Traffic.

[Pera Cor. London Times.]

The Porte has come to the desperate resolution of enlisting and arming 80,000 Bashi-Bazouks throughout the empire, who, if they cannot do much as soldiers, will be available as brigands, and may prevent the spread of insurrection by the instant menace of a general massacre of the Christians. The awful work these savage irregulars, and especially the Circassians, have been carrying on in Bulgaria, is an earnest of the efficient aid they can lend the Government of the Porte in its straits. I have heard from several sources during the past three days the distressing report that Bulgarian children were sold as slaves by their Circassian captors. A wealthy Greek banker at Pera, whose name I could mention, has, for humane reasons, bought four such captives, of course with a view to rescue them from the fate which awaited them in the hands of Turkish purchasers. I am informed that many of the Pashas and Beys are supplying their harems with servants from this source, and that at Adrianople this trade is carried on with little, if any, attempt at concealment. You are aware that the Circassians have always been and are in the habit of bringing up their children to stock the harems of wealthy Mussulmans. No wonder if, together with their own, they offer to the highest bidders the young creatures they have seized in the ravaged villages of the Balkans. I have been assured that a poor Bulgarian refugee recognized his own child in the hands of a Circassian slavedealer, and upon claiming it before the authorities his claim was rejected on account of the absence of Mussulman witnesses establishing his paternity—for undoubtedly many of the magistrates, in spite of all the sovereign hatts, still refute or disregard Christian testimony.

An Irreconcilable Savage.

Sitting Bull, the leader of the hostile Sioux, has, since 1856 been in constant aggressive hostility to all the United States. He has never signed any of the treaties which some of his own band have recognized, and in every case has absolutely stood out against any measure tending to recognize the power of the United States Government, and has refused to respect those agencies which are striving to civilize and feed the Indians. Sitting Bull was the leader of the Minnesota massacre, and has been the author of the murder of countless frontiersmen.

JOHN A. MORROW, more familiarly known as Jack Morrow, died a few days since at Omaha, after an illness of eleven weeks, of consumption, aged 46. He was known as "the iron man of the plains." He resided on the frontier twenty years, but the last six years had made his permanent residence at Omaha. At one time he was very wealthy. He now leaves a handsome property, besides $10,000 insurance on his life. None of the old Western ranchmen are better known than he. His life has been full of adventures and daring deeds. He was honorable in his dealings and was respected by all who knew him best.

"WELL, you know, Bobby, your eye's very inflamed; you can't go out with Tommy Brown till that speck of dust's out of it!" Bobby (anxious to be off)—"I'm all right—I know it's out now; (earnestly) I—I think I heard it fall!"

A FEMALE BLONDIN.

A [illegible] Walks Across [illegible] on a Tight Rope.

[From the Buffalo Courier.]

The Signorina Maria Spelterini is a genuine belle of the Campagna, the name being her own, as we are positively assured, and her nationality unquestionably Italian. The Signorina is not particularly sylphlike; on the contrary she is quite what might be termed buxom, and physically able to hold her own in the battle of life. Saturday afternoon this lady accomplished a feat which no woman had ever before essayed. This was no less an undertaking than the crossing of the gorge of Niagara on a tight rope stretched immediately over the point where the rapids boil most furiously, a couple of hundred feet beyond the railroad suspension bridge. At the point selected for the exhibition, the same at which the famous Blondin stretched his second rope, the gorge is something more than eight hundred feet across, and the banks about two hundred feet above the seething water. It is one of the wildest, most troubled parts of the river. Inclosures had been formed by rough board fences at either end of the rope on both the American and Canada sides, and an admission fee was charged, but on the Dominion side an unruly mob tumbled down the fence and defied the toll collector. On the hither side quite a large number of spectators, both in carriages and on foot, who had gained admission by paying their honest fee of entrance, were assembled, but many preferred to view the novel and startling spectacle from the bridge. This might be considered hardly the fair thing, in consideration that the Signorina had been to an expense of $640 for her rope and guy-ropes alone. The rope, we may mention, is two and a quarter inches in diameter, of the best Manila, and weighs nearly a ton. It is held taut by 1,400 pounds of guy ropes. The Signorina started on her perilous journey promptly at the advertised time, 4 o'clock. When those who went down by that train arrived inside the enclosure, they saw a glistening figure far out upon "the straight and narrow way," and with steady, measured steps progressing. The lady was attired with green buskins, tights of the color nature gives the cuticle of the Caucassian race, a tunic of scarlet, and shining green bodice. Her head was covered only by its luxuriant growth of flowing brown hair. Bands at either side of the river played inspiring music, but every eye was fast fixed upon the form of the daring woman who was now passing up the ascent to the further shore. A few more seconds of intense interest, at least to those who were lookers on, and she stood on the shining shore of Her Majesty's dominion. The accomplishment of her passage was the signal for applause from both banks and the bridge. Then they waited, probably ten minutes. At the expiration of that time the Signorina appeared, balance pole in hand, and, stepping lightly upon the rope, began the return journey. Steadily she came across the long line, stopping at the center to rest upon one knee, then, again stepping forward with measured and steady tread. When within a few rods of the final destination, she stood immovable for a moment in statuesque pose, while an enterprising photographer secured her presentment. Then she traversed the remaining distance until safe again on terra firma, and thus the exhibition of the day was closed.

The New Postmaster General.

James N. Tyner, the newly-appointed Postmaster General, was born at Brookville, Ind., Jan. 17, 1826. He received a good common-school education, and upon reaching manhood studied law and began its practice as a profession. He took part in political contests in Indiana while yet a young man, and at the age of 31 was elected in 1857 Secretary of the Indiana Senate. He served in this office for the three following sessions of the Senate, and was chosen a Presidential Elector in 1860. From 1861 to 1866 he acted as a special agent of the Postoffice Department.

In 1868 the Hon. D. D. Pratt was elected a member of the Forty-first Congress from the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana, but was subsequently elected a United States Senator by the State Legislature. A special election was held to fill the vacancy, and Mr. Tyner was elected on the Republican ticket. He was also elected a member of the Forty-second and of the Forty-third Congresses. In the Forty-third Congress he was a member of the important "Committee on Appropriations." In the fall of 1874 he was not nominated by his party as a candidate for the Forty-fourth Congress.

A Strange Man.

A singular man was the Bishop of Havana, whose death is just announced by telegraph. The dispatch tells us that this Bishop had to be buried by public subscription, as he left nothing, having given all his possessions to the poor. Queer, was it not? Some people will say he was a very foolish man. He had plenty of chances to make money, which he might have put out at interest until it grew to a fortune. He had a good salary, which he might have hoarded up, and by which he might have enriched his heirs. But, instead of doing any of those things, this singular Bishop had given all his possessions to the poor, not leaving even enough to pay the expenses of his funeral. He died of the vomito, which is raging in Havana. He did not run away from the city because the vomito raged in it, but remained there for the sake of his flock who were falling victims to it. Some people will say that this clergyman ought to have looked after himself; but, alas! he neglected his own interests in every way.

Vengeance Eaten Cold.

In 1850 a poacher named Rambouillet, was arrested by the gamekeeper of a forest in the Haute Marne, France, and punished according to law. After his release he by good behavior won the respect of his neighbors, but he was only waiting for revenge. Four years ago, when the streets of the village were filled with German troops, he got in the crowd and fired through the window of the gamekeeper's cottage, killing his wife. On the next day it was said that the Germans had killed the woman, and she had a large funeral. The ex-poacher became morose, and not long ago in a quarrel used words which led to his arrest, trial and sentence to death.

A NEWFOUNDLAND in Charleston, S. C., set upon by a bull-dog, eluded his foe by jumping into the water. The bull-dog was nonplussed by this flank movement, and speedily released his hold and made for land. The water was not his element, and the Newfoundland was master of the situation.

HENRY KROEGER, the Milwaukee weather prophet and seer, says there will be four months' good sleighing in the winter of '76-'77. Kroeger says: "There will be five months of cold weather, with little rain and without thunder. There will be plenty of ice in the river of thirty inches' thinkness."

A PERUVIAN died in Paris two years ago, and his brother arranged to have the body embalmed, but quit the city before the job was done. The embalmer wrapped the remains in cloths and sold it to a museum as a mummy. The trick has been discovered through the return of the brother to get the body for burial.

IT has puzzled many people to decide why the dark wood so highly valued for furniture should be called rosewood. Its color certainly does not look much like a rose; so we must look for some other reason. Upon asking, we are told that when the tree is first cut the fresh wood possesses a very strong, rose-like fragrance. Hence the name.

TALKING about Centennial and horse-ear poetry, could anything equal the sublime originality of the following, by "Zozimus," a Dublin celebrity of forty years ago:

In Egypt's land, upon the banks of Nile,
King Pharaoh's daughter went to bathe in style;
She took her dip—she came unto the land,
And to dry her royal "pelt" she ran along the strand.
A bulrush tripped her, whereupon she saw
A smiling "babby" in a "wad" of straw;
She took it up and said in accents mild,
"Tare-an-ajers! girls, which o' yis owns the child?"

Origin of Our Postal System.

The first postal system of the colonies was organized by four printers—Franklin, Holt, Goddard, and Hazzard—in July, 1775. Congress appointed Franklin the first Postmaster General, with a salary of $1,000, residence in Philadelphia, and instructions to establish posts from Falmouth, New England, to Savannah, Ga., with cross posts, and rates 20 per cent. below the old Parliamentary charges. The Secretary and Comptroller received $340 each.

Texas Cattle.

The Kansas City (Mo.) Price-Current has advices that the grand total of the Texas cattle-drive, to July 6, is 305,290 head. Of this number, 50,638 have been held in Northern Texas, while the remainder (254,652) have been driven north. Several thousand head which were wintered in Northern Texas last season have been also driven north, which will probably swell the total to between 260,000 and 270,000 head.

A MAN in Troy, N. Y., a few days ago caught some boys bathing in a pond on his premises, and seizing the clothing of the lads hid it. The boys apparently took no notice of the man, but after a little while they managed to surround him, and getting him away from the clothes pushed him into the pond, nearly drowning him before he was rescued.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 40 per cent. is added to price. The impor has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and whol sale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prune Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these inter edi item profits. No middlemen with us. April 29, 1875.

A young lady was asked, upon her return from church last Sunday, what the text was, to which she unhesitatingly replied, "Blessed are the dressmakers"

The more the Radical party attacks Governor Tilden, the more clearly appears his record as a reformer. The persistent enemies of his election are the prominent leaders of the Grant rings who know that his election will be the death blow to all their schemes for robbing the treasury.

Hayes' ability to reform abuses in the government is beautifully illustrated by the kind of men by whom he is at present surrounded. His right bower and chief of staff is Hayes, the individual who received such a rebuff from his party when a candidate for Governor of Ohio for dishonest practices while Probate Judge of Hamilton county.

If Orth has explained his connection with the Venezuelan swindle to the satisfaction of his party, how does it happen that there is a movement on foot among the influential members of that organization to force him off the ticket on account of the disastrous effect to his party, that this same connection is likely to have in the present canvass.

Hayes no Reformer.

Above all, Hayes is no reformer. He is not the man to clean out political corruption, to destroy the desperate rings which have got hold of the country, or to do anything to obliterate the abomination of Grantism. He is the man who, in the presidency, would run the machine in as easy and unobjectionable way as he could; but he would run it in the old ruts; and this is about the worst thing that could be said of any man who desires to become the successor of Grant.

Just So.

New York Sun.

With Orth as the Republican candidate for Governor, and Tyner as Post master General to run the machine under Morton's orders, Pratt dismissed ignominiously from the office for daring to resist corruption, Bristow forced out for convicting the whisky ring, and all his subordinates in that work turned into the street for trying to "let no guilty man escape," Jewell ordered to Connecticut for not bowing down before Boss Shepherd, and the thieves restored to protection and favor at the White House—in presence of all these things, and others equally damaging, there can be very little doubt in regard to Indiana.

All that power and patronage and money can do will be done to carry that State for the Republicans. Nothing will be omitted that a desperate administration can achieve; but, in spite of these efforts, the people can not be made to vote understandingly for a corrupt candidate like Orth, or to prolong the infamies of Grantism through Hayes.

California Farming.

What do you think of an unbroken furrow 6 miles long? That's what you can see any day by going to Elm River, where Messrs. Dalrymple and Grandin are breaking prairie. The teams start in the morning and make one round across an entire township and back (12 miles) before dinner, and the same in the afternoon—24 miles travel for each team every day. All for wheat next year.—[Fargo (Cal.) Times.

In common parlance, the Republicans are hedging on the presidential question, by announcing that their party is not responsible for the crimes of Grant's administration. This is the merest subterfuge, and will not bear the test of scrutiny for one moment. Grant's administration has been the most vindictively partisan of any that has existed within the memory of the present generation. So well has be pleased his party friends that in the last Republican presidential convention his administration was unequivocally endorsed. Whether Grant's administration be good or bad, it is as straight Republican as it was possible to make it. When Grant insults the better sentiment of the country, by showing sympathy with the whisky thieves, and all the corrupt rings that have fattened on the government, let it be understood that he does it as the head of the Republican administration, and that the Republican party cannot escape its share of responsibility.

The terms of seventeen Republican members of the Senate, expire next March. Five of them represent States in this part of the country, viz: Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and New Jersey. The Senators from New Hampshire and Rhode Island have been already elected for the coming six years; but legislatures are to be chosen this fall which are to elect Senators in the room of Blaine, Boutwell and Frelinghuysen. New Jersey can certainly be carried by the Democrats, and Frelinghuysen be got rid of, provided the campaign is properly conducted. There are hopes even of Maine. At all events, Blaine, who holds his seat by the favor of the Governor, can be defeated, for the Republicans dare not make his election for six years an issue in the canvass. Massachusetts will probably go Republican, but we do not believe Boutwell will get back to the Senate.

Sheep on the Farm.

That sheep can save farms from utter ruin and improve the condition of good farms, is beyond doubt. However much we may prize the horse and cow for their valuable services to mankind, still we must admit that the keeping of sheep is very profitable to the farmer, in that it brings money to his pocket and improves the condition of his land. Experience has shown that sheep husbandry is directly profitable. There are no losses and very few risks to be met in the business.

Early lambs, fat wethers, wool and pelts always bring good prices and find ready market. Besides, sheep bring up the condition of the farm, and as the old adage has it, "turns the earth to gold wherever their foot-prints are found." Nothing will improve a farm so well as a course of husbandry in sheep, well selected and judiciously followed. Sheep can be made the salvation of a poor farm, and if more of our farmers would keep sheep, a larger share of prosperity would be the result.

Political.

MISSOURI DEMOCRATS.

The Democratic State Convention which met at Jefferson City nominated Hon. John S. Phelps for Governor. The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, that the Democracy of Missouri, in State Convention assembled, do hereby adopt, indorse, and reaffirm the National Democratic platform, adopted at St. Louis.

Resolved, That we hail with enthusiasm the nomination of Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, for President, and Governor Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice President, as the strongest possible combination the Democracy of the union could have selected for the suffrages of the American people, and in their great and varied civil services, eminent abilities, fine civic and honorable record without spot or blemish, that in their election the people have a certain guarantee of reform, that the constitution will be preserved in tact, laws executed vigorously, and without distinction to race, color, or creed, with protection and equally guarantee to life, liberty, and prosperity to every citizen in the union, and we hereby pledge the State of Missouri to ratify this nomination by 60,000 majority.

THE YACHT DISASTER.

RECOVERY OF BODIES.

Feeling Against the Captain.

NEW YORK, July 21.—There is genuine mourning in the city over the fate of those who met their death yesterday in the yacht Mohawk. Mr. Garner's establishment, at the corner of Worth and Hudson streets, was closed, and from a flagstaff on the roof floated an American flag at half mast. The body of Mrs. Garner was found by the diver on the port side of the Mohawk, jammed up between a sofa and sideboard, a lot of lead ballast having forced the floor up, and falling on her dress and legs, thereby pinning her down. That was the reason she could not be pulled out. The body of Miss Hunter and that of Garner will probably be recovered this afternoon. Mr. Frost Throne is supposed to have been drowned in the open bay The Mohawk still lies off the northwest shore of Staten island, most of her under water. The body of Mrs. Garner was conveyed to the late residence on Bond avenue, New Brighton, where this afternoon the coroner held an inquest.

Coroner Dempsey says that last night when the police arrested Captain Roland, of the yacht, they had to land him at a private dock for fear the people would lynch him. The warrant upon which he was arrested was issued upon complaint of Frederick Furguson, quarter master of the yacht Mohawk, who charges that Roland, in charge at the time of the accident, carelessly and negligently managed the yacht so as to cause it to capsize.

The efforts of the divers at the yacht Mohawk were rewarded during this afternoon by the recovery of the bodies of Mr. Garner and Miss Hunter from the cabin. Later, the body of the cabin-boy, Peter Sullevan, was recovered. The bodies were all removed to New Brighton, Staten Island, where the inquest was held. The body of Frost Throne, brother of Mrs. Garner, and two cooks and the stewart, are still missing.

The Chance for Hayes's Election.

There is just one chance for the election of Governor Hayes as the next president. That chance implies that the people do not demand reform. We do not design to use the term reform as merely a party shibboleth, but we mean by it a substantial reformation in the administration of the government. Are the people satisfied with the record the Republican party has made during the last four or eight years? If they are satisfied then the election of Hayes will be the undoubted evidence that they desire no change. It will mean that Grant is good enough. It will mean that such cabinet officers as he has chosen are good enough. It will show that the people are indifferent to the character of our chief officials. It will sanction Belknap's rascalities. It will endorse the whisky rings. It will endorse straw bid contracts. It will approve the selling of post trader ships. It will sanction the infamous interference with state legislation inaugurated by the Republican party. It will acquiesce in packing the Supreme Court. It will sanction subsidy legislation. It will approve salary grabbing. It will excuse despotism. It will say that taxation is no burden, and that the people submit to the robery of the treasury by the most wasteful and extravagant administration that this or any other country ever endured.

This then, is Hayes's chance for election. If all these things meet the approval of the people, and they deem Grant a model president, and his advisers the right kind of men for executive subordinates, then we see no reason why Mr. Hayes should not be elected. But what is the disposition of the people this centennial year on these subjects. There is evidently an earnest determination to endure the evils of the present and the past no longer. Grant's administration goes down to posterity in deep disgust. His advisers and the leading men of the Republican party must go down with him. The election of Hayes can not be a simple perpetuation of Republicanism as it is under Grant. Every effort toward reform initiated by the present House of Representatives has been opposed by the very men who are seeking to have Mr. Hayes elected. The very authors of all the bad legislation under Grant, the men who have registered his bad appointments, the men who advocated the subsidy legislation, who hold up for high salaries and extravagant appropriations are through the election of Hayes, seeking their own endorsement. They are seeking the perpetuation of their own power. They make Grant the scapegoat of the past, and Hayes their tool in the future. Hayes' election is simply the perpetuation of Grantism, or Chandlerism or Conklingism or whatever any one may choose to call the maladministration of the past seven years. Do the people desire a perpetuation of this rule? If so, they should elect Hayes. His chance for election rests in this. There is no use trying to conceal it by special promises. Reform can only come by placing a reformer in the presidential chair, cutting him loose from the surroundings of the present incumbents.

Grant—Chandler—Hayes.

There is a cool and refreshing impudence in the frequent assertion that in the nomination of Hayes the Republican party has turned its back upon Grantism and its attendant corruptions, when the manner in which that party propose to conduct the campaign is considered. The Republican party may pile upon the sturdy shoulders of its solid chief the responsibility for its past follies, blunders and crimes. It may even charge the new instances of administrative incompetency and official corruption which are daily coming to light to weigh down the party in the coming contest, upon the lingering influence of an autocratic and unscrupulous executive. Such a change is a conspicuous confession of weakness in a great party, and an admission that the entire Republican body is held in shameful, unresisting servitude to the evil purposes of one bad man; but if the Republican party chooses to confess itself impotent for good, rather than to accept responsibility for the acts of its chosen leaders, it may perhaps be permitted to do so, as to its past career. For the future, however, no such plea can be permitted. General Grant's corrupting influence, if it is merely a matter of personal contagion, can not extend to the campaign for the election of his successor. If the Republican party is in earnest in its abandonment of Grantism, this purpose must appear in its conduct of the coming canvass. The New York Tribune grasped at a part of the situation when it said that to regain any share of the public confidence, the Republicans must "cut loose from the administration so completely that they may enjoy its unconcealed hostility." This is good so far as it goes, but something more is needed to convince convention from Grantism to an honest and upright political faith. There must be abandonment of old party machinery, change of old party methods, dismissal of old party hacks from places of trust and honor and the filling of their places with new, untainted men, in short, a total and radical change in the whole political programme. In making arrangements for tne coming campaign, the Republican party has not taken the first step towards these urgent reforms. [illegible] progress seems to be in the other direction [illegible] Republican side promises to offer in its methods and in the men who conduct it an example of the climax and culmination, the very flower and full grown perfection of the corrupt, vicious, and demoralizing system of political machination that has grown up within the last seven years, and has been given the name of Grantism. The machinery to be employed has already been set in motion, and its operation may be seen anywhere. Removals for partisan reasons, appointments in reward of party service, political assessments in support of a campaign corruption fund, the turning of federal officers into electioneering agents, and the employment of the whole enginery of the civil service for corrupt and bartisan uses, this is the old Republican method which is to be used with redoubled vigor this year. And the men in charge are the same disreputable schemers who have made the name of Republicanism an offense and stench in the nostrils of honest men. The party may be fairly judged by the men it employs to conduct its political campaign. At the head of its executive committee is Zach. Chandler, who was retired from the Senate by an indignant constituency and called by Grant to the cabinet to use his vast experience in turning the interior department into an engine of political corruption. Other members are A. B. Cornell, who runs the Conkling custom house machine in New York, Postmaster Filley, of St. Louis, about whose name hangs the memory of political assessments, and Senator Patterson, the man who thought there was "five years" good stealing left in South Carolina." Chandler, however, is the chief and type of these, and he is the man who forms the connecting link between Grant and Hayes—between the administration that is going out and that which wishes to come in. Behind the transparent mask of candidates who are presumed to be pure because they are unknown, the old corrupt Republican machine is working with a perennial vigor that nothing but crushing defeat can check. Should Hayes be elected, he would find the policy of his administration marked out for him by powerful and skillful hands, in which he would be but as wax, and his first term would be scarcely distinguishable from a third term of Grant. The band of shrewd and unscrupulous politicians in whose hands Hayes has placed himself, and of whom Chandler is a type, form an indissoluble bond between him and the old party of Grant which makes any hope of reform from his election the wildest and weakest delusion.

WELCOME TO THE NATIONS.

BY R. H. STODDARD.

Welcome, a thousand welcomes! Our emotion
Demands a speech we have not; it demands
The unutterable largeness of the ocean,
The immeasurable broadness of the lands
That own no masters. Who is he shall speak
This language for us? from what mountain peak?
And in the rhythms of what epic song,
At once serene and strong?
Welcome, ten thousand welcomes! It is much,
Oh sisters! ye have done in coming here;
For from the hour ye touch
Our peaceful shores, ye are peaceful, equal, dear!
Not with exultations,
O Sister, Mother nations!
Do we receive your coming; for more than many ties Comes with ye; do ye see it? It is what is to be
Some day among your myriads, who will no more obey,
But, peaceable or warring, will then find out the way
Themselves to govern; if they tolerate
Kaisers, and Kings, and Princelings, as to-day,
It will be because they pity and are too good to hate.
The New World is teaching the Old World to be free;
This, her acknowledgment from these, is more
Than all that went before:
Henceforth, America, Man looks up to Thee,
Not down at the dead Republics! Rise, arise!
That all men may behold thee. Be not proud;
Be humble and be wise;
And let thy head be bowed
To the Unknown, Supreme One, who on high
Has willed thee not to die!
Be grateful, watchful, brave;
See that among thy children none shall plunder,
Nor rend asunder—
Swift to detect and punish, and strong to shield and save!
Shall the drums beat, trumpets sound,
And the cannon thunder round?
No, these are warlike noises, and must cease;
Not thus, while the whole world from battle rests,
The Commonwealth receives her honored guests—
She celebrates no triumphs but of Peace.

THE MADE BELLE.

It was a sultry day in late July. The ocean breeze failed to dispel the fever of the air that waited impatiently for the fulfillment of the promise, that lay broadly legible along the eastern horizon, of a coming thunderstorm.

The sultriness and impatience that pervaded the atmosphere, thirsting for the excitement of electrical volleys and a dash of impetuous rain, also pervaded the mental atmosphere of a group of idle young men who lounged upon the shady corner of a hotel piazza killing time until the dinner hour.

"Celia Carr was the belle last year," said Ned Grosvenor, "and we shall not 'look upon her like again.'"

"The array of beauty at present is not alarming," observed Sam Dent. "The Brewsters are nice girls; Miss Fanning may be called quite stylish, Miss Hayward decidedly so; Jennie Hammond will be a capital creature, but she is rather 'bread-and-butterish' yet; her sister is a schooled coquette, Adele Ferris is the belle so far."

"I never pay court to beauties," said Armand Du Bois. "When a girl expects every man who beholds her to be at her feet, as a matter of course, I prefer to pique her, for some time, at least, with indifference."

"There have been several arrivals today," said Grosvenor, "Miss Monroe among the number. Look out for Miss Monroe, Du Bois. She isn't a beauty exactly, but—"

"Let us make a belle," suggested Arthur Lindsley. "Let us take some moderate girl and idolize her, one and all of us. Not ridiculously, but just enough to turn her head and have all the other dear creatures dying of jealousy."

"What will you make her of?" asked Sam. "Where's your material? Produce your belle-metal, Lindsley."

"She must be a novice," said Grosvenor.

"And susceptible," said Sam.

"But not too susceptible, or there'll be no fun in it," said Dick Wilhurst.

"She must not be a beauty," said Du Bois.

"Nor a stupid," said Lindsley.

Wanted—a belle. So stood their agreement, when all minor tintinnabulations received an obligatory knell from

"That tocsin of the soul, the dinner-bell."

Two days later a party arrived at the hotel, who were registered as "Mr. Wolf, Mrs. Wolf, and Miss Wolf, of C——," and on the same afternoon Lindsley announced, triumphantly, "I've found the girl. No, don't ask me what she's like. Nothing startling, I promise you. Just a passable sort of a rather lady-like nobody. The raw material, that's all; and that's what we want. A mighty pretty little foot she had, though, peeping from under her water-proof cloak. But plain, unmistakably plain and unpretending, I assure you. Just the nondescript sort of thing we require for our made belle."

A more inviting drawing-room no summer hotel could boast. Given the lights and the music and what volatile creatures could desire a better field for the dance? Easily disencumbered, too, and convertible for private theatricals, tableaux, and games, its entertainments were famed. An occasional dull day could be endured in anticipation of the unfailing bewitching qualities of its "falling grace."

In this inviting drawing-room Miss Irene Wolf made her debut, clinging rather closely to the side of her mother until the music struck up. The dance began. The young and shy stranger found herself introduced to a number of agreeable young men. Every one seemed pleased with her. Everything she said, everything she did, proved to be just the happy word of the moment or the happy act. "It has been such a delightful evening," she said to her mother, when, after midnight, she lingered to talk over the novel event. "I was a silly girl to dread the beginning so much. How kind every one is!"

Happily she was not mediumistic, to know the comments made upon her by her gentle sisterhood of the house. She came in mention quite disparagingly in contrast to Miss Monroe, likewise a debutante of the evening—a young lady just returned from a tour in Europe, who had brought the "loveliest costumes" from Pingat's and Worth's; in one of which, purple and pale blue, with rococo jewels and a wonderful fringe, she had appeared that night.

"Wasn't it amiable," said Miss Fanning, "in Ned Grosvenor and other fellows of our set to take up that bewildered little Backwoods? Poor thing! I hope they will not drop her flat all at once."

Drop her? This was the last thought likely to occur to the kind young men; they had no such intent. On the contrary, they congratulated themselves upon the fact that Irene Wolf was not only just the thing they wanted for their made belle, but a nice sort of a girl, and a good dancer thrown in.

As time rolled on, sisterly solicitude for the ultimate fate of "Backwoods" became extinct. Propitious circumstances elevated "the poor thing" to "that Miss Wolf." Favorite partner of the dance, abettor of games, receiver of the prettiest bonbonnieres and the loveliest flowers, the first-thought-of-invitation for the ride, drive, and walk, the queen of the picnic, and the belle of the ball. "I asked Sam Dent," said the beautiful Miss Ferris, "what was the charm of that Miss Wolf. He said it was simply the 'je ne sair quoi' which always attracts men, but that women invariably fail to perceive."

"I always knew," pondered the devout heart of Mamma Wolf, who, with her beast-of-prey cognomen, reflected upon the vexed question of "what's in a name" the most lambent possible light—"I always knew that our Irene had the disposition of an angel; but I never realized before that my child was the raving beauty I find she is."

As the season advanced, the triumphs of the made belle lost none of their brilliancy. Her success began to reflect credit upon her makers. Every day she seemed more lovely, every day more worthy of preference. For is there a cosmetic like praise? Is there a tonic like smiles?

It is worth while to a woman to have a credulous heart, if only for the beautifying effect of flattery upon her grace and complexion.

Irene Wolf, in her midsummer experience, thought that watering-place life was an episode of paradise. But the serpent always crawls into Eden. And in Irene's paradise the intruder had, as in Raphael's picture, a woman's face.

Miss Hammond thought it her duty to confide to Miss Wolf a secret that had been intrusted by Dick Wilhurst as something which he considered "too good to keep." Imagine the delicacy of the self-imposed act; for the secret was no other than the fact that the belle of the season was the creature of a joke, the envied idol of the summer literally nothing more than "a block of wood or stone," at whose efficacy the priests of its worship mocked.

Miss Hammond performed her self-imposed duty without trepidation. If in the rivalry of the season she had allowed herself to feel bitterness, and if malice lay in her motive, she was not rewarded by the effect upon her victim of her astounding revelation. In listening to the humiliating tale, given in strict confidence and without suppression of any stinging detail, Irene remained calm, offering no interruption or exclamation. Her heart, indeed, beat violently, her color went and came. When the whole story was ended, she pondered a minute, and said:

"Do you believe this, Miss Hammond? I hardly can. I think these gentlemen—these friends of yours—are too well-bred to have placed a girl, an unoffending stranger, in such an ignominious position. No! Do not trouble yourself about this story. I feel sure these men have better hearts."

But, oh, the storm that swept over that bared bit of palpitating mechanism, the woman's heart, in the darkness of the night. The pain, the tantalizing torment, the bewildering doubt. Could it be true? Let the careful memory, the calm judgment, take up the facts. Alas, the story was not without its corroborating proofs!

The first night of anguish that sweeps across the pillow of a young girl robs it forever of all the white roses of which girls' pillows are made. Thenceforth the softest is but ruffled linen in which the head rests.

In the morning Irene awoke—for at dawn she caught one miserable half hour's sleep—awoke for the first morning of her life upon a flat, stale, unprofitable world.

What pleasure was there to a made belle in fixing her blonde hair at the glass?

The first thought of the child had been this: "Oh, how I wish I could tell mother!" But she reasoned with herself, "No, it is better I should bear it myself. And father, dear father, how he would resent this cruelty! how much he loves his poor little girl! He must never, never, never know."

The evening after Mis Hammond's dutiful act Irene was beautiful—really beautiful for the first and, perhaps, for the last time in her life. She came down into the drawing-room arrayed in an excellent Paris dress; for her mother, whose maternal instinct had been aroused to the perception that Irene's costumes were not the style of those worn by her companions, had purchased for her darling, at an immoderate cost, from one of those fashionable modistes who follow in the wake of the summer-faring gay world the very last importation of draperied grace.

Irene came down into the drawing-room attired like a little princess; but it was not that which made every eye discover she was a beauty at last. It was the hectic rose-leaf on her cheek, the scarlet of her lips, the violet shadow about her eyes, the mystical shadow upon young eyelids that grief has at last kissed; it was the kindled excitement of conflicting pain and pride, the quick flame that made her gentle, fawn-colored eyes shine steel and gold, gold and steel, and that illumined into positive, potent brilliancy her modest, softly-tinted, pleasantly-featured, but never-before-startling face.

She was really beautiful, and every one said so that night. The belle, without possibility of mistake.

But to those who knew her, and were with her frequently, or watched her closely from that time forth, there was something missed in Irene that hitherto had part in herself—the joyous confidence, the innocent abandon, the quiet but genuine under-tone of real happiness, had fled. With all her pride, she was too ingenuous to conceal from those who cared for her that her perfect peace was lost.

Our friendly young men held a consultation upon this point.

"Mark me," said Sam Dent, "I know something of girls, and that girl has fallen in love. Mark me, has fallen in love with one of us! I only hope, since I'm an engaged man, that it's not me."

Du Bois looked infinitely self-conscious, but did not speak.

"Don't trouble yourself, Sam," said Dick Wilhurst, with insinuating self-assertion. "I happen to know she hasn't been such a fool as that."

"We've played too deep," said Grosvenor. "Upon my word it hasn't been right. We've had our fun, but, by Jove, it has been hard upon the girl."

"Well," said graceless Dick, "it isn't a wrong that can be made right. If its me she is in love with—and—but—well—n'importe. If it's me, I don't care if I do become a victim. 'Tis a cool three hundred thousand. It might be worse."

"Wilhurst," exclaimed Lindsley, with flashing eyes, "take care. Miss Wolf is too true and good a girl to be lightly spoken of, in my presence at least. A girl that any man may be proud to make his wife."

"Hear! hear!" cried Dick. "Excuse me, friends. I meant to praise, not to scoff. What greater compliment can be paid to a made belle than to ring the change out of her—ring the changes, I mean. Lindsley, my dear fellow, I pass. Take her, and a thousand blessings go with you, my boy!"

"Lindsley is right," said Sam Dent. "The girl has metal in her."

"Who ever heard of a belle that hadn't metal in her?" asked Dick.

"Nonsense! but I tell you there's a genuine ring to her."

"Of course."

"And a smart tongue, as I can testify, when she's put to it," said Grosvenor. "I like a woman who can hold her own."

"Her own tongue? So do I," said Dick. "Oh, I'm sincere. Irene Wolf is all right. Hurrah for our made belle! She's a trump. Lindsley, you're a success. Well, good-night, boys; I'm off. By-by, Lindsley. Ring the belle—ding-dong!"

The feminine portion of the house had not been so sensitively aware of the change in Irene. The truth is, they were too thoroughly engrossed in a wonderful event to condescend to trifles.

The event was no other than the unexpected arrival at this delightful sea-side hotel of an English lord, a bachelor, crossed in love abroad, it was rumored, and come to America expressly to marry.

A live lord! One and all of the feminine portion of the house fixed heart and soul upon him at once. There was no turning back from the plow; there was no dallying with time to be "well off with the old loves," or loss of haste in going first to bury one's dead. The affair demanded, or commanded rather, a religious zeal and dispatch. "Up and strike!" was the motto of every Amazonian ambition whose bewitching archery suddenly fixed upon this shining bull's-eye.

If the thought of "Mrs." had to any one been sweet, the thought of "My Lady," "My Lady Lindehurst," was incomparably a treat.

It was, of course, necessary to be presented to "My Lord" first. And Lord Lindehurst, who had been thrown by accident of foreign travel into intimate relations with Grosvenor and Du Bois, came specially introduced. He was legitimately a prize of the set.

Not until a fortnight had elapsed did it become faintly rumored that Lord Lindehurst, whose attentions had so far been generously general, had "taken particularly" to Irene Wolf.

A torrent of indignation swept through the house. Miss Hammond felt her plane of duty so broadened that she actually contemplated confiding Dick Wilhurst's secret, "too good to keep," to the young Englishman—to illuminate his note-book as a characteristic episode of American manners and life. She was delayed somewhat in her benevolent intent, for the reason that the live lord was not easily approached.

As for Irene, when she felt that the illustrious stranger was unfeignedly attracted by herself, she experienced some womanly tumults of satisfaction. He, at least, was sincere. This lover, at least, was unaffected in his marked preference by any latent relish for a joke.

"He did not make me," she very naturally, and with some grateful sense of restored dignity, said.

The young nobleman, an unassuming youth, who seemed hardly to appreciate the furore he had created, was rather an exception to his countrymen in his personal history. But of that history it is only necessary to say that the rumor of his having been crossed in love was not correct. He had been crossed in marriage, not in love. His own temper—far from a base sort—had made the cross by decidedly refusing a match proposed for him upon worldly principles alone.

Personally, Lord Lindehurst was a man who, without a title, would not have been popularly remarked. He was a traveled, but not a "society," man; observantly, not experimentally, educated; nor was he particularly intellectual. But he possessed an agreeable presence, refined manners, an ample fortune, and an excellent heart.

He had a presentiment that he should find his wife in the New World, and his presentiment was fulfilled.

He fell in love at first sight with Irene Wolf.

The night of his arrival was the night of Irene's beauty. In whatever degree she faded from her perfect brilliancy after that, his kindled imagination supplied the defect. He saw her first in the apotheosis wrought in her by the one cruel moment of her life. He never altered from his faith in her bright supremacy from that time forth.

For a fortnight he studied her unobserved and "afar off;" then he asked to be presented, and from that time he devoted himself to her with an increasing devotion.

At the close of the season their engagement was announced.

The refined prejudices of the young lord were not disturbed even by a prolonged visit in the Western home of Papa and Mamma Wolf. He found there what he esteemed most, the aristocracy of a heart.

It was a long wedding journey that Irene took, and for many months and even years she had no visible part in her first-loved Western life. But her image was idolized in that home. "My little girl" was the theme of incessant delight; and dearly as her affection clung to those who had filled completely her childish faith and trust, she never repented her choice. She loved her husband as truly as he loved her.

"I was made for him," she said, both first and last.

Prof. Brainard, of Middlebury College, a clergyman, recently gave his father-in-law a beating. He had been out riding with his wife, using Rockwell's horse, and when he got back Rockwell intimated that the animal had been driven too hard, whereupon Brainard jumped from the carriage, and, having given the horse a whipping, knocked down his father-in-law and struck him over the head with the butt end of the whip.

THE GREEN-EYED MONSTER.

A Jealous Husband Kills His Wife and then Cuts His Own Throat.

The village of Pemberton, Pa., was recently the scene of a terrible domestic tragedy, the particulars of which, as chronicled below, we glean from the New York papers: In 1856 Sheppard Pratt Wiley married Margaret Kinney, of Pemberton, lived with her four years, and obtained a divorce from her on the charge of adultery. Four years afterward he was married to Miss Susie Gale, a young and attractive village girl. The divorced wife continued to live in the place, and still lives there. Wiley had accumulated considerable property, but, in spite of that and his handsome young wife, he led an unhappy life. He was inordinately jealous, and his disposition led him to such extremes that he frequently charged his wife with unfaithfulness, and serious quarrels resulted. But to another scandal Mrs. Wiley continued to live with her husband. For a year past Wiley has been in receipt of anonymous letters charging his wife with infidelity. He frequently charged her with the crime, and she always protested her innocence. He became a monomaniac on the subject:

A fortnight ago Wiley received the following letter: "Ask your nephew, Dr. Jake, who the father of your child is. He knows it ain't yours, and laughs in his sleeve with your dear, innocent Susie. What an accommodating husband you are." On the receipt of this letter Wiley left his home. Dr. Jacob Wiley was his nephew, a worthy young man, who had been a frequent and favorite guest at his uncle's house. Wiley's conduct became so singular that Mrs. Wiley consulted a physician and several of her husband's friends as to the propriety of having something done for him. They saw nothing alarming in him, they said, but promised to have a watch kept over him.

On last Sunday morning Mrs. Abigail Orth, who occupied a room in Wiley's house, adjoining the bedroom of Mrs. Wiley, says about 7 o'clock she heard a knock at the back door. She looked out and saw Mr. Wiley standing there. Somebody admitted him, and presently she heard the murmur of voices in Mrs. Wiley's room. In a few minutes she heard Mrs. Wiley utter a shriek, and then say in an appealing voice: "It is not true, Shep. Please don't kill me. I'll go away. I'll go away." Wiley replied in a savage tone: "It's too late; we've got to die." A dull blow followed this, and Mrs. Orth ran out of her room in terror, and alarmed Mr. Moffatt, a neighbor, by telling him to go to Wiley's as soon as possible, as he was killing his wife. Moffatt hurried to the house. Mrs. Wiley lay on the floor. Blood was pouring from a deep wound in the temple, and a frightful gash in her neck. She was dead. Near her lay a small hatchet covered with blood. In front of a bureau in the room stood Wiley. He had a razor closed in his hand, and was gazing with a look of horror on the dead body of his wife. He had not noticed the entrance of Moffatt, and when the latter stepped up to him and laid his hand on his shoulder and said: "Shep, what in God's name have you done?" he started back in terror. A savage expression almost instantly spread over his face, however, and he replied: "What is that to you? I've had a call to do a fearful duty. I don't want to be interfered with, for I'm not half through." Wiley then opened the razor and made a motion to draw it across his throat. Moffatt seized hold of him and attempted to take the razor from him, but the madman threw him to the floor and raised the weapon to kill Moffatt. The latter, by a quick movement knocked the weapon from Wiley's hand. He then sprang to regain possession of it, when Moffatt took advantage of this to escape from the room. He summoned aid of persons who were passing, and the party entered the house and found the bedroom door locked. They broke it down. Wiley had completed his bloody work. He lay on the bed, his head nearly severed from his shoulders, dead. In the absence of a Coroner the bodies were taken in charge by a Justice of the Peace, who ordered an investigation. Mrs. Post, the divorced wife of Wiley, was called to the stand and strictly questioned as to the anonymous letters. She denied all knowledge of their authorship or anything relating to them. The feeling against her was very strong, and as she left the office she was hooted at and jostled by the crowd."

Drowned Like Cats.

On the same evening detachments of infantry patrolled the streets of Stamboul, and after midnight, when the ordinary population was in bed, suddenly pounced down upon several assemblies of Softas, who, under the pretense of devotion, were busy plotting in the smaller mosques of the Mussulman quarters. There does not seem to have been any resistance offered, and if there were any spectators of the raid, they have made no sign; but it is certain that 150 gentlemen in long tunics and white turbans were quietly taken on board a couple of transports lying in the Golden Horn, where they were joined by sixty persons of the Circassian persuasion. One of the officers of the troops on duty, from whom the tale has reached me, declares that there were no remonstrances made, no questions at all asked. The poor wretches appear to have accepted their fate with the utmost stoicism, as the tugs steamed out to the Sea of Marmora, where, one after the other, 210 men were dropped into the water and sent by this short sea passage to the Paradise of Mohammed, with a thirty-two-pound shot fastened to their feet. Now, all this is very well known to every resident of Constantinople.—Constantinople Letter in New York Times.

Cremation in South Carolina.

It has been eighty-four years since Henry Laurens, of South Carolina, directed that his body should be burned after death—instructions which were faithfully carried out. The same State is soon likely to have another experiment in cremation—Mr. Henry Berry, an old and wealthy citizen of Marion county, who died a few days since, having left positive commands in his will that his executor should have his body burned after the accepted manner of the cremationists. The executor is Mr. Berry's son, and, as he will fail to carry out his father's directions on pain of forfeiting all right and claim to his estate, he will probably follow them out to the letter.

Mercantile Failures.

Messrs. Dun, Barlow & Co. have issued their tabular statement of the mercantile failures for the second quarter of the current calendar year. The exhibit is far from cheering, though it is less gloomy than it was for the first quarter of the year. The whole number of failures during the quarter just past is 1,794, against 2,806 during the preceding quarter, and the total liabilities were $43,771,273, against $64,644,156—a decrease of 1,012, or about 36 per cent. in the total number, and of $20,872,883, or about 32.3 per cent. in the total liabilities. This is a very decided improvement upon the first quarter of the year. But a further comparison shows a greater number of failures during the last quarter than the average for any equal period since reliable records of failures have been made, except in 1875. The liabilities, however, were exceeded in 1857, 1861, 1873, and 1875.

For the six months ended June 30, the whole number of failures was 4,600 against 3,870 during half of 1875, and against 3,870 during half of 1875, and the liabilities were $108,415,429, against $100,530,176 for the half of 1875. Probably both the number and amount of failures for the past six months have been exceeded several times before during periods of equal length, as in 1857, 1861, and 1873, when panics caused the fall of many houses during short periods of time. For the past two years the failures have been much more evenly distributed. During the past six months the average liabilities for each firm failing have been about $23,600, against an average of about $26,000 in 1875, $26,600 in 1874, and $44,000 in 1873. In the Dominion of Canada the number of failures during the second quarter of the year was 381, against 477 during the first quarter, and the liabilities were $5,276,206, against $7,418,060—a decrease of a little more than 20 per cent. in number, and not quite 29 per cent. in liabilities. The average liabilities for the whole period of six months were about $14,800, or about $8,800 less than the average liabilities in this country. This difference represents in part the difference in the scale upon which business is done in the two countries, and in part the difference in prices, which probably is not less than 20 per cent.

In both the number of failures and the amount of liabilities New York takes the lead, as we should expect. Massachusetts comes next, Pennsylvania next, Illinois fourth, Ohio fifth, and Michigan sixth. The following will show the number of failures, and the amount of liabilities in these six States for the six months ended June 30:

	No.	Liabilities.
New York	892	$18,959,041
Massachusetts	408	14,832,378
Pennsylvania	309	7,682,449
Illinois	299	9,870,906
Ohio	253	4,430,864

The following table, showing the number of failures and the amount of liabilities in the United States from 1857 to 1876, inclusive, will convey a tolerably clear idea of the mercantile disasters that have occurred since the culmination of our speculative movement. The totals for the current year are estimated at twice the totals for the half year just closed:

	No.	Amount.
1857	4,932	$291,750,000
1858	4,225	95,749,000
1859	3,913	64,394,000
1860	3,676	79,807,000
1861	6,993	207,210,000
1862	2,632	22,049,300
1863	485	6,864,700
1868	2,608	63,774,000
1869	2,799	75,054,000
1870	3,551	88,242,000
1871	2,915	85,252,000
1872	4,069	121,056,000
1873	5,183	228,499,000
1874	5,830	155,239,000

The Presidency.

An interesting article on "Presidential Aspirants," in the University Herald, is concluded as follows: But, whatever the newspapers and political necessities of to-day may demand, the people in the past have trusted well-known public men and elected them to their highest office. Most of our Presidents were well known to the people when elected, as the following table will show. Of the eighteen occupants of the Presidential chair—

Three had been Vice Presidents: Adams, Jefferson, and Van Buren (not counting Tyler, Fillmore and Johnson).

Five, Secretaries of State: Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, J. Q. Adams, Van Buren and Buchanan.

Five, Foreign Ministers: Adams, Jefferson, Monroe, J. Q. Adams, Harrison and Buchanan.

Eight, United States Senators: Monroe, J. Q. Adams, Jackson, Van Buren, Harrison, Tyler, Pierce, Buchanan and Johnson.

Ten, Members of Congress: Madison, Jackson, Harrison, Tyler, Polk, Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan, Lincoln and Johnson.

Seven, Governors of States or Territories: Monroe, Jackson, Van Buren, Harrison, Tyler, Polk and Johnson.

Two, Members of the Committee for Drafting the Constitution: Washington and Monroe.

One, Speaker of the House of Representatives: Polk.

Two had never held any civil office: Taylor and Grant.

Two held office after retiring from the Presidential chair: J. Q. Adams was a Member of Congress, and Johnson was a United States Senator; both died holding these positions.

It is worthy of attention that none of our noted orators have succeeded in being elected to the office.

A Perpetual Traveler.

Twenty years ago a Liverpool steam packet company wished to buy land of a woman. She sold it cheap, but got a clause in the agreement that during her whole life she and a companion might at any time travel free in the company's vessels. The day after the bargain she sold her furniture, let her house, and went on board the first outward-bound vessel. Since then she has lived on some ship of the company's, accompanied by a woman companion, for whom she advertises, and whose passage money she pockets. She has made over $10,000 in this way.

In England, iron is rolled into sheets as thin and as flexible as paper, and not easily torn.

CHANGED HER MIND.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CORRESPONDENCE OF A YOUNG LADY.

Dear Belle:—I went to church last night
And saw your friend; why he's a fright
At least I think so; what is there pray
About his looks that made you say
That I'd admire him. Goodness me!
He's homely, Belle, as he can be,
Monstrous nose, retreating forehead
And goggle eyes; I think he's horrid.

* * * I've seen that Mr. Knox again—
Your friend I mean, that homely man
Of whom I wrote—and I declare
I must admit he has an air
About him, that one must admire.
But, Belle, I think I soon shall tire
Of his rude manners; why the man
Stared till I had to use my fan.

* * * I went last night to the soiree,
And who, think you, chanced there to be
Why, Charley Knox! we stayed till four—
I danced with him six times—or more,
And he has asked me—don't you tell—
To go with him next time; now, Belle,
I'm not in love. You'll laugh I know—
But still I say he's not my beau.

* * * O, Belle! O, Belle! what do you think
Has happened. I can't sleep a wink
Until I've told my dearest friend;
O, Belle! my girlhood's at an end,
That Charley Knox!—O, dear, O, my!
I don't know whether to laugh or cry—
I never yet did feel so queer—
Just think! I am engaged! my dear.

"My friends!" said a builder whose health had been drunk at a dinner in celebration of the completion of a public hall which he had constructed, "My friends! I would gladly express my feelings, did I not feel that I am better fitted for the scaffold than public speaking!"

"What on earth am I to do with that incorrigible son of mine?" inquired an anxious father of a friend. "Dress him in shepherd's plaid," was the reply. "Why, what possible benefit would that be?" demanded the wondering parent. "It would at least be a way of keeping him in check."

Davie:—"Can ye gie's a pipe, John?" John—"Oh, aye." (Hands him one almost empty.) Davie:—"Hae ye ony tobaccy?" John—"Yes, yes, lad; I can gie that tae." (Hands him a "fill.") Davie (after filling)—"Hae ye a match, John?" John (to third person standing by)—"Guidness, he has naething but the jaws."

"What made you quit the East?" said a man in Nevada to a new comer. "I got into trouble by marrying two wives," was the response. "Well," said the other "I came out here because I got into trouble by marrying only one wife. "And I," said a bystander, "came here because I got into trouble simply because I promised to marry one."

"Are you going to make a flower-bed here, Judkins?" asked a young lady of the gardener. "Yes, miss, them's the orders," answered the gardener. "Why, it will quite spoil our croquet ground." "Can't help it, miss, them's your pa's orders. He says he'll have it laid out for horticulture, not for husbandry!"

Some gentle youth or good-hearted old man left a pin on the seat of a Woodward avenue car. It was a pin bent up in curious shape, and was left there to carry out a purpose. The man who swung himself aboard that car near the City Hall and sat down with a sigh got up with a yell. In his great surprise he leaped off the car and shouted: "Mad dog around!" but there were no dogs of any sort under the seat. When he discovered what had "raised" him he was much chagrined. Said he: "I thought I could lick most any man, ride any horse, stand any sickness and run for any office, and yet this contemptible little pin completely upset me."—Free Press.

SONG.

What good gift can I bring thee, O thou dearest?
All joys to thee belong;
Thy praise from loving lips all day thou hearest,
Sweeter than any song.
For thee the sun shines and the earth rejoices
In fragrance, music, light;
The spring-time wooes thee with a thousand voices,
For thee her flowers are bright;
Youth crowns thee, and love waits upon thy splendor,
Trembling beneath thine eyes:
Thy morning sky is yet serene and tender,
Thy life before thee lies.
What shall I bring thee, O thou dearest, fairest?
Thou holdest in thy hand
My heart as lightly as the rose thou wearest;
Nor wilt thou understand
Thou art my sun, my rose, my day, my morrow,
My lady proud and sweet!
I bring thee treasure of a priceless sorrow,
To lay before thy feet.
—Celia Thaxton, in Scribners for August.

A French Suicide.

One of those extraordinary suicides peculiar to Paris took place quite recently. An elderly man entered the Church of Notre Dame and ascended one of the towers, after having paid the usual two sous required from visitors. There was nothing remarkable in his bearing, and no one paid particular attention to him. When he had attained the highest point to which visitors are allowed to mount, he raised himself on the wall which runs round the top of the tower, and after looking down for a moment plunged from the dizzy height. He fell in the Cour du Presbytere, and of course was picked up quite dead.

MURDER WILL OUT.

The Mystery of Gen. Hindman's Death

[From the New York World.]

Murder will out. To that we have the testimony of the records, and the axiom has been formulated by the greatest of American orators. Not only does the body of the victim, voiceless except through gaping wounds, cry out for Christian sepulture from the depths of swamp or lonely copse where the murderer has vainly hoped to hide the witness to his crime, but the wretch himself, hurrying from bloody act to bloodier and still more cruel deeds, reaches such a height of reckless daring that the blindest justice cannot help but close about him. Then the gallows comes, and then, with no hope for the future and a late repentance for the past, he tells the story of his crimes. Mysteries of blood at last are understood; mayhap the memory of an innocent man is cleared of stain, and one death is made to pay the penalty of many. In the newspaper of every day these coincidences of fate are told. We have two of them before us as we write. With a prescience of the coming massacre before him, perhaps, a soldier of Custer's army wrote out the narrative of a murder committed long years before, which, from the obscurity of the victim or the disorder of the times, had never been traced to its author. Before the letter was read in the Southern town where the crime had almost passed from recollection, the murderer lay in that horrible ravine, retribution coming from savage hands, but the criminal dying in brave company, and as one of a noble band whose names will be bright in history. But of those who went down to slaughter that fatal June day, we may suppose that to one death was a welcome relief from the barbs of conscience. His crime drove him from the comforts of a home through fourteen years of wandering, and finally to a terrible death on the far-off plains. His uneasy spirit forced him to a confession of the forgotten murder, and at last the moldering corpse in a Tennessee grave had its revenge in a mutilated body in the lands of the Sioux.

Gen. Thomas C. Hindman was a Major General in the Confederate army. After the war he returned to his home, near Helena, Ark., and, a few years later, the community and the entire South were shocked to hear of his brutal assassination while surrounded by his wife and children. Sitting in his library one night, a gun was forced through the window, and the soldier who had escaped from a hundred battles fell dead from his chair, his body riddled with bullets. The murder was commonly ascribed to a private enmity, and a reputable citizen of Helena has since borne the load of a terrible suspicion, which the confession of the real criminal has but now removed. The mails bring us the account of a gallows scene at Rome, in Georgia, wherein, by the statement of the condemned, the mystery of Hindman's death at last is solved. Haywood Grant, colored, convicted of arson and sentenced to be hanged, and with the noose about to be placed around his neck, called the Sheriff to him and confessed to the murder of two steamboat hands on a Mississippi river steamboat, ten years ago; then to the murder of an Irishman in Memphis during the same year; and still again to the murder of a policeman near to the spot where the third of his murders had been committed, and closed the dismal catalogue by detailing the manner in which he had shot to death the ex-Confederate General in his Arkansas home. No cause was given for the crime, and a moment later the wretch was swung off into eternity. Not so soon however, but that an innocent man was relieved of a suspicion which was not so strongly supported by facts as to bring him to the felon's dock, but which, except that the law had dragged the real criminal to his fate, would have followed him to his grave and have been left as an evil heritage to his children. Justice, though tardy, had asserted itself, and the crime of the murderer had found voice.

The manes of the murdered Hindman may now rest in peace, for the law of retribution has been fulfilled on the scaffold of that Georgia town.

Does a Bird Die a Natural Death?

It is the opinion of some naturalists that birds never die a natural death, but come to their end by some murderous accidental means; yet I have found sparrows and vireos in the fields and woods dead or dying, that bore no marks of violence; and I remember that once in my childhood a red-bird fell down in the yard exhausted and was brought in by the girl; its bright scarlet image is indelibly stamped upon my recollection. It is not known that birds have any distempers like the domestic fowls, but I saw a social sparrow one day quite disabled by some curious malady, that suggested a disease that sometimes attacks poultry; one eye was nearly put out by a scrofulous-looking sore, and on the last joint of one wing there was a large tumorous or fungous growth that crippled the bird completely. On another occasion I picked up one that appeared well but could not keep its center of gravity when in flight, and so fell to the ground.

One reason why dead birds and animals are so rarely found is, that on the approach of death their instinct prompts them to creep away in some hole or under some cover, where they would be least liable to fall a prey to their natural enemies. It is doubtful if any of the game birds, like the pigeon and grouse, ever die of old age, or the semi-game birds, like the bobolink, or the "century-living" crow; but in what other form can death overtake the humming-bird, or even the swift and the barn-swallow? Such are the true birds of the air; they may be occasionally lost at sea during their migrations, but, so far as I know, they are not preyed upon by any other species.—John Burroughs, in Scribner for August.

Caught at Last.

John Collins, a talented London pickpocket, took an active part in the Moody and Sankey meetings, and after the departure of the evangelists became a popular singer and exhorter. His piety was not questioned by his fellow workers, and his friends among the thieves did not expose him. Thus he was enabled to pick pockets with great facility, often taking the watches and pocketbooks of men and women while praying at their sides, or while explaining to them the way of salvation. Continued success, perhaps, made him careless, for, while taking part at the exercises at the laying of a corner-stone for a church in Uxbridge, he was caught stealing a watch from a woman who was sharing a hymn book with him during the singing. He was arrested, and then a great number of robberies were traced to him.

A CURIOSITY OF COOKERY.

The Dinner Served to a Party of South Carolinians by Mr. Baker, the Eccentric Massachusetts Millionaire.

It is not very surprising perhaps, in view of the desire which so many rich men manifest to preserve their names from oblivion by founding new institutions of learning, that Mr. Baker, an eccentric rich man of Massachusetts who has a similar ambition, should make a gift for a college of cookery. He did not stop to think how much more good his $50,000 and his farm of fifty acres would accomplish if bestowed on some prosperous educational institution already organized for its work. It was enough for him to know that his new "college" will bear his name. There will be some curiosity to know how the new institution will be organized. Of what specialty will its President be master? Will there be professors of soups, roasts, and deserts, and tutors of hash, fries, and stews? Will the newly-arrived students be required to eat their first dishes?

Mr. Baker, who has made this odd gift, is the gentleman who last year invited the Southern visitors to the Bunker Hill Centennial celebration to assist at the dedication of his "centennial pig-pen," and who, during the present week, has been entertaining a large company of Southerners at his Massachusetts farm. His notion of a good dinner may be inferred from the following bill of fare of a dinner which he gave to his guests on Thursday:

L'HOMME OR ANATOMICAL MENU.
Soup—Potage a la Esau, with Anatomical Drops,
Fish—Boiled Salmon, with Muscles, Sounds, and Soles (the brains of men), dressed with Agassiz' comments.
Meats—Pork, Beef Tongues, Dressed Goose, etc., representing the porcineograph, forceful, and garrulous man.
Entrees—F. F. V. Bivalves, Clinch Rifle Greens, Bay State Fish Balls, Palmetto Cabbage and Fayetteville Bull's Eyes, with Army and Navy Sauce.
Vegetables—Dead Beats with Latin Tongue, the Art I Choke, Corned Dodgers, Small Fry Potatoes, and let us have peas—but the Split Peas.
Salads—Lobster and frog-leg, indicating the clannish and spasmodic man. Moslem salad, with the great Saladin.
Relishes—Chaw-Chaw, Lamb's Tongues and Pig's Feet.
Desert—Saharah (for the sandwich is there where Ham was bred), M. T. Representative.
Cocoanuts, Washington Pie, Centennial Gum Drops, Darwinian Surprises, Cream Ices, Sherbet, etc.
Of Brandy flip and night-cap nip,
Drink your share, but Punch with care.

Each guest received a little China baby in his plate of soup, and a larger specimen of a doll baby was placed in each goblet, carefully wrapped in a Japanese paper napkin. The host's eccentricity was further shown by his announcement at the close of the feast that he proposed to introduce to the guests one of Darwin's friends. Drawing a slide from a wire cage which, covered with flowers, stood near him a large monkey sprang out.

If Mr. Baker's large gift is a genuine one, and we have no doubt that it is, it is to be hoped that his amusing eccentricity will not cause it to be wholly wasted.—New York Evening Post.

A Scene in the French Assembly.

The Versailles correspondent of the London Times describes an unparalleled row in the National Assembly in consequence of a Jesuit professor having divulged a competition problem. Leon Gambetta asked for an investigation by members of the two chambers, and said he was confident the Jesuit had knowledge beforehand of the geometrical problem. A Bonapartist Deputy interrupted the Radical leader by exclaiming against the Republic. "Last year," continued Gambetta, "a similar thing happened and was passed over in silence." "It was before the Republic," cried a Bonapartist. "No," retorted Gambetta; "the Republic was, it is true, then not governed by Republicans, but France was long quit of Imperial putrefaction." A terrible tumult arose on the Bonapartist benches, whence an irate Deputy shouted, "If it be said that the Empire was rottenness, it is allowable to reply that the Republic is a dunghill." For over a quarter of an hour chaos reigned in the Assembly. Radicals and Imperialists left their seats and advanced with threatening gestures towards each other, uttering invectives, vociferating, bawling, and making the hall resound with their clamor. It was a sickening spectacle, and, as a Bonapartist Deputy observed, it is not only the Republic which loses caste by such incidents, but the whole chamber.

The Flight of Birds.

A year ago last April, the pigeons flew for two or three days up and down the Hudson. In long bowing lines, or else in dense masses, they moved across the sky. It was not the whole army, but I should think at least one corps of it; I had not seen such a flight of pigeons since my boyhood. I went up to the top of the house, the better to behold the winged procession. The day seemed memorable and poetic in which such sights occurred.

While I was looking at the pigeons, a flock of wild geese went by, harrowing the sky northward. The geese strike a deeper chord than the pigeons. Level and straight they go as fate to its mark. I cannot tell what emotions these migrating birds awaken in me—the geese especially. One seldom sees more than a flock or two in a season, and what a spring token it is! The great bodies are in motion. It is like the passage of a victorious army. No longer inch by inch does spring come, but these geese advance the standard across zones at one pull. How my desire goes with them, how something in me, wild and migratory, plumes itself and follows fast!—John Burroughs, in Scribners.

The Slayer of Jim Fisk.

Stokes, who has always had a pretty easy time at Sing Sing, could hardly believe it when he was told he must go to the Auburn prison, with its strict discipline, especially as his term of imprisonment will expire in a couple of months. He was shackled to a notorious jail-bird, known in the prison as "Jimmy, the Kid," and placed in the gang of fifty who were drafted.

A Prison that Has Kept the Gallows Busy.

The last report of the Warden and Directors of the Connecticut State Prison shows 252 convicts in that institution, of whom 121 were received within the past year. The number last year was 236. Sixty-eight are of foreign birth. A reduction in the price of labor of the prisoners, who are engaged in cigar, shoe, wirework, and rule making, from sixty to forty cents a day has so far decreased the income of the prison as to leave a deficit of $2,874. The more humane system of discipline introduced by Warden Hughes is maintained with satisfactory results. A striking commentary upon the cruel discipline formerly in vogue there is the fact that in thirty years there has been only one hanging in Connecticut for crime committed outside of the prison, but that in the same period there have been four executions for crime perpetrated within it.

A YOUNG French Canadian has accomplished the feat of walking on the water. He has a pair of very large canoe shaped shoes, which bear him up and enable him to keep his balance. He recently walked about a mile on the Ottawa river.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.:—I wish to add my testimony to the wonderful curative properties of your Alt. Ext., or Golden Medical Discovery. I have taken great interest in this medicine since I first used it. I was badly afflicted with dyspepsia, liver deranged and an almost perfect prostration of the nervous system. So rapid and complete did the Discovery effect a perfect cure that it seemed more like magic and a perfect wonder to myself, and since that time we have never been without a bottle of the Discovery and Purgative Pellets in the house. They are a solid, sound family physician in the house and ready at all times to fly to the relief of sickness—without charge. We have never had a doctor in the house since we first began the use of your Pellets and Discovery. I have recommended the use of these medicines in several severe and complicated cases arising from, as I thought, an impure state of the blood, and in no one case have they failed to more than accomplish all they are claimed to do. I will only mention one as remarkable (though I could give you dozens). Henry Koster, furniture dealer, of this place, who was one of the most pitiful objects ever seen, his face swollen out of shape, scales and eruptions without end, extending to his body, which was completely covered with blotches and scales. Nothing that he took seemed to affect it a particle. I finally induced him to try a few bottles of the Golden Medical Discovery, with daily use of the Pellets, assuring him it would surely cure him. He commenced its use some six weeks since, taking two Pellets each night for a week, then one each night, and the Discovery as directed. The result is, to-day his skin is perfectly smooth, and the scaly eruptions are gone. He has taken some seven or eight bottles in all, and considers himself cured. This case had baffled the skill of our best physicians. Messrs. Dunsford & Co., druggists, of this place, are selling largely of your medicines, and the demand steadily increases, and they give perfect satisfaction in every case. Respectfully, W. H. CHAMPLIN, VEGETINE meets with wonderful success in the cure of cancer and cancerous humors.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic.—In the atmosphere experienced here during the summer months, the lethargy produced by the heat takes away the desire for wholesome food, and frequent perspirations reduce bodily energy, particularly those suffering from the effects of debilitating diseases. In order to keep a natural, healthful activity of the system, we must resort to artificial means. For this purpose Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is very effectual. A few doses will create an appetite, and give fresh vigor to the enervated body. For dyspepsia, it is invaluable. Many eminent physicians have doubted whether dyspepsia can be permanently cured by the drugs which are generally employed for that purpose. The Sea Weed Tonic in its nature is totally different from such drugs. It contains no corrosive minerals or acids; in fact, it assists the regular operations of nature, and supplies her deficiencies. The tonic in its nature so much resembles the gastric juice that it is almost identical with that fluid. The gastric juice is the natural solvent which, in a healthy condition of the body, causes the food to be digested; and when this juice is not excreted in sufficient quantities, indigestion, with all its distressing symptoms, follows. The Sea Weed Tonic performs the duty of the gastric juice when the latter is deficient. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is sold by all Druggists.

LAME AND PAINFUL BACK.
12 DAYS IN HOSPITAL.

MESSRS. WEEKS & POTTER—Gentlemen: I have just recovered from a lame and painful back through the use of your COLLINS' VOLTAIC PLASTERS. My back was so lame and painful that I could not stoop, walk or do duty of any kind, and was placed in the hospital for 12 days without cure. I then asked permission of the Surgeon to try the COLLINS' VOLTAIC PLASTERS, and in a few hours after putting one on was entirely relieved of pain and able to bend my back; am now perfectly well. I consider them simply wonderful.

"THE VIBRATOR"
1000 SOLD LAST SEASON
WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION

This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE NICHOLS, SHEPARD & CO.
"VIBRATOR"

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz.: our improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

The Wonders of Modern Chemistry.
Sarsaparillian and Its Associates.
Changes as Seen and Felt as They Daily Occur after Using a Few Doses of
DR. RADWAY'S
Sarsaparillian
Resolvent,
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

1. Good spirits, disappearance of weakness, languor, melancholy; increase and hardness of flesh and muscles, etc.

2. Strength increases, appetite improves, relish for food, no more sour eructations or waterbrash, good digestion, calm and undisturbed sleep, awaken fresh and vigorous.

3. Disappearance of spots, blotches, pimples; the skin looks clear and healthy, the urine changed from its turbid and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color; water passes freely from the bladder through the urethra without pain or scalding; little or no sediment; no pain or weakness.

4. Marked diminution of quantity and frequency of involuntary weakening disch[illegible] (if afflicted that way), with certainty of permanen[illegible]. Increased strength exhibited in the secreting gla[illegible] and functional harmony restored to the several organs.

5. Yellow tinge on the white of the eyes, [illegible] the swarthy, saffron appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively and healthy color.

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs or tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucous from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate, (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in diseases that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhea and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphiloid ulcers; in dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers, and in tubercles of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets; in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture, wherein this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hopeless to a new life and new existence where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 31, 1876.

DEAR COURIER—It is a painful sight to see so many idle men standing on our street corners and walking the streets seeking for sufficient employment to keep them alive. Go where you will you can detect their eager anxious faces from those more happily employed. Many of them are honest, sober men, and detest loafing as they do crime, but their present condition and future prospects are gloomy indeed.

It is within the limit of fact to say that in the United States two hundred and fifty thousand men who went to sleep somewhere last night do not know where they will get their dinners to-day. And it is also within the limit of fact to say that these men do not belong to the idle, the vicious or the criminal classes. They are not men who are on strike; they are not men endeavoring to keep up prices; men who will not work except upon their own terms. They are men who would gladly work upon any terms; who are fathers of families or have families dependent upon them. All through the manufacturing regions of New England the condition of the factory hands is infinitely worse, so far as the actual necessities of life are concerned, than the condition of the former slaves ever was in the darkest hours of the peculiar institution. In the chief city of New Jersey, probable the richest state in the union, which paid more income tax to the government than even Massachusetts, hundreds and hundreds of men are walking the streets idle and holding mass meeting around the mayor's office, demanding employment. In the city of Wilmington, Delaware, a similiar condition of things exists. In Cumberland nine hundred men were thrown out of employment a few weeks ago by one establishment alone because there was no work for them to do. Heaven only knows how they and their families are living.

In every hamlet in the country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the cry goes up for employment, and hundreds of men are perambulating from one place to another in search of work, until they are now almost looked upon as outlaws and outcasts. This was not the case a few years ago, and to what condition of things can it be traced. The outlawed tramp of to-day, was the honest, law-abiding, hard-working American mechanic of a year ago. He attended church; his children went to Sunday School; he had money in the savings bank; he was a respectable member of society; he was a voter, an American citizen. To-day he is an outlaw. What is the reason? What are the causes that have led to his degredation and the degredation of his family? There is only one way to account for it and that is the remorseless policy of the Republican party, which for years and years has been making the rich man richer and the poor man poorer. The republican orators and organs tell us the present disastrous condition of the country is all owing to the war, to the speculation it engendered; to the extravagance to which it gave birth to the improvidence it created. They tell us that we are gradually coming down to "hard pan," that we are "[illegible] bottom," and that by and by [illegible] will [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] argument [illegible] [illegible] fallacy, the [illegible] [illegible] John Stuart Mill—and [illegible] [illegible] down as law that with good government a country recovers from the effect of the most desolating of wars in a very few years. The condition of France to-day shows how true this is. She is now one of the most prosperous countries in Europe Only four or five years ago she was under the foot of the German. Her industries were prostrate. Her Capital was famishing. She struggled under as large a debt as our own. Specie payments were suspended. She ceased to sell the world. Her markets were destroyed. But when the end came she had statesmen who knew what they were doing, and in a few months her indemnity was paid, her industries was revived, specie payments resumed, her commerce restored and her people almost as flourishing and prosperous as ever. In our country what has been the result? At the end of eleven years between one and two millions of men are out of employment; mechanics are starving; merchants are failing; no man is thriving except the jobber, the corruptionist and ring thief who has his hand in the public treasury. Vicious, corrupt legislation, bad men in office, have done it all. The people have been plundered in the name of law more mercilessly than the middle classes of Europe were ever plundered by the feudal barons of the middle ages. Republicanism has become the synonym of fraud, rascality, and public pillage and plunder. There will be no chance for the better until it is driven from power; until its laws in the interest of the rich and against the poor have been wiped from the statute books. There will be no prosperity until we have a change, not of administration but of party and of system.

The only remedy for the evils that now effects our country lies in the hands of the voting population. It is for them to say whether this condition of things shall continue, by voting for the men and measures that have brought it about. I believe that there are so many bad men so firmly fastened upon the Republican party, that reform is impossible. I believe the mass of the people are honest, and desire to put true and honest men in power. This can only be done by an entire change in the control of our national affairs. If the Democratic party was in power to-day Mr Tilden would be powerless in the midst of an army of men, who hold a firm grasp upon every avenue of the civil service. It required the combined force of the greater part of poth parties, with such men as Tilden at its head, to break up a local ring of thieves and swindlers in New York, and now it will require the combined influence and co-operation of all good men throughout the country, to exterminate the rings that are to-day sucking the life blood of the nation. Let the honest voting masses ponder upon this, and yet without that partizan feeling, with which these corruptionists endeavor to inflame them.

It is true that no one can say anything bad about Governor Hayes; it is also true that no one can say anything positively good about him as a public servant. His negative character furnishes no themes for an enthusiastic following to seize and dwell upon. On the other hand Goveror Tilden has been an active, positive and aggressive leader against a long established order of things, and has overthrown in a State what the people demand shall be overthrown in the nation. It will offer no little encouragement to his supporters to feel that they can stand on the political grave of a Tweed, and address a mixed audience on the dealers in post-traderships and manufactures of crooked whisky of the Republican. I trust the gallant Democracy of DeKalb, are arming for the good fight—the fight agaist corruption and extravaganse, and in favor of economy and reform. Let every township be thoroughly and carefully organized. There is every encouragement for an united effort. There is something in the air that tells me the people will triumph, and that Tilden will once more be placed to the front, to break that influence that is prostrating our industries, stopping our work shops and discouraging the energies of the farmer and business men.

I cannot close without giving you a little joke, perpetrated by the Chronical of this city on our candidate for Governor. Such things do not hurt him. It shows that the opinion of even our Republican friends recognizes the healthy condition of Uncle Jimmy's honesty.

"BLUE JEANS" TAKES A BATH.

Washington Chronicle

"Blue Jeans Jimmy" Williams, Democratic candidate for governor of Indiana, the great economist and lemonade objector of the House, has taken a bath He went down to the bath-room the othey day and acually bathed. When he was drying himself a happy thought struck him, and he asked the attendant how many towels they used in a day.

"Two hundred," repled the attendant.

"Cæsar and seed corn!" exclaimed the economist. "What in the nane of four acres do you do with two hundred towels?"

"They use 'em bathin', sir," replied the darkey.

"Two hundred men don't bathe here every day!"

"No, boss, but some of 'em they use two an' three an' four towel swhenever they bathed."

"Great Jupiter!" exclaimed the would be governor of Indiana: "Why, boy, I have a family of eleven at home, and [illegible] towel last[illegible] a week."

"You must keep pretty clean then, [illegible]" was the darkey's sagacious re-[illegible]

POOR ORTH.

The Fort Wayne Gazette, the leading Republican paper in northern Indiana, announces in its issue of yesterday that it will not support Orth. It says: "The Gazette, will not be among those who choose to defend wrong." Orth's infamy is to much even for Republicans who will support the remainder of the ticket. —Logansport Pharos.

YOUNG FOLKS' SOCIAL!

At Pleasant Lake To-morrow.

The bills read as though it was expressly for the young folks. Not so. Everybody, old and young, rich and poor, are cordially invited to attend. It will be one of the most joyous occasions ever known for the price. Only 25c for dinner and all those that stay for the evening train will have a ten cent lunch in the evening.

The Wabash Plain Dealer says: "Editors learn in more directions than one, that there is no such thing as pleasing everybody. We stop one man's paper at expiration of the time for which he has paid, and he is offended because we seem unwilling to trust him Another man takes our paper and reads it regularly for weeks after his time has expired, as he is notified by the slip on each paper, and then refused to pay the extra because he supposed we would stop his paper as soon as his time was up, and he gave it no further thought. The fair dealing of the latter is not quite apparent to us.

DIED—At his residence in Concord Township, July, 31st, 1876, James A. Widney, in the fiftieth year of his age. The deceased was born January 4th, 1837, at the place where he died, and was one of the oldest native born citizens of DeKalb county. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Erick, of Spencersville, pastor of the Lutheran church of which Mr. Widney was an esteemed member. An impressive discourse from Luke 7—16 was delivered to a large audience of mourning friends and neighbors, at the U. B. Church, in Newville. COM.

NOT BAD.

A fellow trading horses with the traveling jockies that were here last week, met with one of our assessors and the following conversation took place:

"Bob, that is a good horse you have there; how much is he worth?" "Three hundred and fifty dollars." "Not so much as that!" "Yes, every cent of it, and another fifty on top of it." "Are you sure?" "Yes, I'll swear to it." "All right." "What are you so inquisitive for?" "Merely for assessing purposes. I am assessor of this ward, and only wanted to know what you held your nag at."

Union township will hold a Sunday School Institute on Saturday, August 12th, 1876, at the Emanel Church. The following subjects will be discussed before the Institute: The "Wants" of our School, Rev. Daniels, Waterloo; The Teacher, helps, and preparation, E. D. Hartman, Auburn; the superintendant, his office and work, Rev. Brown, Waterloo; how to reach the young man, Rev. Johnson, Auburn; the value of modern sabbath schools considered, religiously and socially, Rev. Welsh, Auburn. Institute commences at 10 A. M. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Waterloo Items.

—Forepaugh's show was good, only the ring performance was too long. The crowd in town was not as large as it was here when Robinsons showed. The crowd seemed to be peaceable.

—Gust Lease, owner of the popular livery barn fed the majority of the horses in town on show day.

—Mr. Bigler of the Bigler house, is the most accommodating landlord you generally strike.

—The show tents were put up on the "school house ground"

—A general raid was made on a house of ill fame, last week. Some parties are blamed that they better count ou-et.

—The 3:50 train was a half hour late making it convenient for those attending the afternoon show.

—Bower dance and lemonade stands were numerous. Weamer bought one glass.

—Mr. Edge has started a new saloon, and controles his share of the patronage.

Weamer, in his majesty, with spread eagle arms, stood before the Hook and Ladder Company and says: "Boys, I have a pass over the Saginaw road and I will go down to Fort Wayne and price flannel for "our suits." He went and brought back a satchel full of samples, showed them in his usual "snide" way and said: "Gentlemen"—he had a notion to say ladies, but one of the boys winked at him and he kept his "rep.' He went on to say: "I can get flannel for "our suits" at Fort Wayne for, at least 25c on the dollar cheaper than we can at this place, or in other words 25c cheaper than Mr. Munn offered. The above we get from a member of the Hook and Ladder Company. Now, how is that for home patronage? Further more, he says, so we learn, "I am a Methodist church member, but if "we" get up a dance I will help you all I can." Dance money is as good as any money. What is a man going to write! Will the English language let us out? In the language of the poet, we say, nix-ey.

The Angola Herald of last week says: "Granny Weamer, of the Auburn Republican, in trying to elucidate our article in last weeks issue, which was such a stunner to the standing of this defamer and blather-skite, failed to substantiate his case, but tried to palm off some of his thievish low-lifed cussedness onto us. Stating that we, while in his employ upon the Butler Review, (now defunct,) had stolen some festival tickets, and applied them to the benefit of ourselfe and friends. Now when both sides of this story is told it will not sound so favorable for this dirty brute in human form. Well, does this conceited simpleton know that when we asked him for a little money to be used as spending money at the festival he stated that he had but ten cents, and wanted that to buy a loaf of bread for breakfast, but would fix the thing up by running off ten checks more than had been ordered by the committee, which he gave us, and then charged us up with one dollar for the same. This all worked very well until the committee found out that there was foul play, and tackled this "woof in sheep's clothing," who then squirmed out of it by blaming it onto a poor orphan boy, then in employ. How is that for standing? Standing, God bless your soule, Weamer, if you have any, your name stands upon the books of every business man in the country, which they would be glad to erace if you would fork over what is due them.

The following extracts from the Auburn Republican, dated October 18th, 1875, will prove the editor of that sheet a liar in the statement he made in his last issue:

"I. L. Wiseman, who was in our employ about one year ago, on the Butler Review, called upon us on Tuesday. Mr. Wiseman is a gentleman, and a first-class printer."

Weamer, you certainly are a snide rooster of defunct standing.

WHITE CLOUD, KANSAS, July 17, '76

DEAR BROTHER, FOLKS AT HOME—Yours of the 13th inst., at hand, which contains that heart rendering news that we will think of until time (with us) shall be no more. Our dear sister Hallie has gone before us, she has taken a final adieu of this world, to prepar her home in the next. How unfortunate she was to meet with such a horrible death. Two of our once happy family are now sleeping beneath the sod, and their forms lie mingling with the millions of dead. Oh, how can we think of the cruel fate of Hallie's, but with her to her silent grave she has carried brothers love and affections, brothers that were far distant, who could not expect to meet her in this world, but hope to meet her in a world to come. Henry is not with me now to share his grief with mine, but I speak for both, he will not be here for a few days, soon enough he will learn the dreadful news. Could you have kept the corpse but 40 hours we would have been with you to pay that last tribute of respect which we owe to a blessed immortality. At that time Henry and I were together, but little did we imagine that so soon we should be called to mourn the loss of an affectionate and only sister whose lot it seems was to meet death by the torture of burning flames, and, with a becoming fortitude. A few years makes such a change among us that we soon see ourselves deprived of those with whom we entered into life with. Let us remember that it is but a short space we have to measure, our shadows are lengthening and our sun declining that goodness which has conducted us in early years, will not fail in the coming act of life, but we are only here to be driven awhile by hope or fear about the surface of the earth, and then like our helpless Hallie, be lost in the shade of death. Oh, can it be that she has departed from us forever, that her loved voice has passed away like a summer breeze, yet will it not sweeten the bitter cup to know that others mourn with us that her loss is deeply felt by all who knew her, and that her memory will be cherished by us all, until life is at an end and time with us shall be no more.

Of death thou cruel monster,
To fear death we were made.
You called upon our sister
And lonely she was laid.

Where are her little ones?
They have no mother now,
When the night winds sigh and their sleeps are o'er,
They wear a clouded brow.

'Twas the fendish flames that burned her from them,
To her fathers house on high—
To the green fields and fountains,
Of the land beyond the sky.

E. BOYER and H. WEAVER.

A Rowe at Kendallville.

The marshall at Kendallville, was struck with a stone by some three card monte men that were hanging around Forepaugh's Show. We learn the citizens of the above place followed the show to Waterloo, armed with necessary implements to send them on their way rejoicing. In the evening they captured one of the party, and paid his way to Albion. We hear they were no men employed by Mr. Forepaugh.

Corunna Items.

—James Finch and partner visited this city Wednesday.

—We visited the above village last Sabbath and found everything all "squegee."

—Mr. T. B. Hall and family will move to Pioneer, Ohio in a short time.

—Mr. S. Masters is about to move to Texas. His residence will be occupied, by the Methodist Minister. The members of the above church have purchased it for a parsonage.

—Croquet is a fashionable game at this place on Sunday. Naughty, boys.

—Joe Loveland gathered a patent pail of blackberries in six hours. They must have been thick.

—Lafe Miller has disposed of his crow. There is a great deal of cackling among the garden makers close by.

—Mr Chaffee's residence presents a fine appearance. It will soon be ready for occupancy.

—A new hardware and dry goods store will be started there in a short time.

—Parties say that the railroad bridge is not altogether substantial.

—The road west of Main street has been greatly improved, by filling it up and putting in tile to carry off water.

—We learn through the agent, Mr. Miller that there will be very little No 1 wheat handled this season.

—Mrs. Loveland's residence has been undergoing improvements.

—Mr. Calkins has added a saw mill to his brick yard.

Geo. Blake, Esq., has the contract for moving the bank safe.

The young folks social, to-morrow, will be largely attended.

Auburn is getting to be quite a trading point, both in real-estate and horses.

Joe. E. Bengnot lost his saloon key. A liberal reward will be given for the return of the same.

The members of the Presbyterian church are preparing for an excursion to Toledo in a short time.

Mrs. J. L. Davis will entertain an ice-cream social next Wednesday evening, at seven o'clock. All are cordially invited. MRS. R. ELSON, Sec'y.

Marrying and giving in marriage goes on all the same, no matter how eccentric the mercury, or the low price of coal. A number of licenses have been granted lately.

We are sorry if we have made any personal remarks, this week, in regard to Bro. Weamer, and get at the same time he cannot blame us. He pitched the first "shoe."

We might tell our readers all about it, but we have a little self-pride left and too much sense to come out personally against a fellow-man.

Think for yourself.

Thousands lead miserable lives, suffering from dyspepsia and disordered stomachs and liver, producing biliousness, heartburn, costiveness, weakness, irregular appetite, low spirits, raising food after eating, and often ending in fatal attack of fever. They know they are sick, yet get little sympathy. The unfailing remedy, which is yearly restoring thousands, is Dr. Costa's Radical cure. Sold by F. E. Davenport, the Druggist, Cor. Main and Nineth streets. A 25c bottle will convince you of its merits. Don't delay another hour after reading this, but go and get a bottle, and your relief is as certain as live. Will you do it, or will you continue to suffer? Think for yourself!

Professor Parker's Pleasant Warm Syrup is perfectly safe and extremely palatable. No physic required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1876.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THREE tanks, containing upward of 70,800 barrels of oil, were consumed by fire at Parker's Landing, Pa., last week....A colored man has turned up in Philadelphia who claims that Charley Ross is alive, that he has seen him within a few weeks, and that he is able to restore the lost child....Mr. Blaine has gone to Rye Beach to recuperate his shattered health. He is said to be a little stronger physically, though the improvement in his health is very slight.

By the swamping of a small steam yacht in the Hudson river, near New York city, a few evenings ago, Gregory Fox, Thomas Edgley, Jr., George Bloomfield, Jonas Faulkner and Harry Maniche were drowned. Four others the party were saved by swimming ashore. Edgley was drowned in attempting to save Fox, who could not swim....A fire at Shelburne Falls Village, Mass., last week, destroyed the Woodward Hotel, Methodist Church, thirteen stores, and two dwelling houses. Loss $80,000; insurance, $40,000.

THE falling-off in the attendance at the Philadelphia Exhibition has caused a reduction of the force. The number of visitors fell off materially during the heated term, and has not increased with the return of pleasant weather. Since the opening of the Exhibition the average daily expenses have been about $9,000. The average daily cash receipts have been $12,285.05.....Another great auction sale of flannels, blankets, tweeds and cotton goods, from the principal mills and manufactories, came off in New York a few days ago. Most of the large houses of the country were represented, and among the buyers Western men purchased heavily. The bidding was very spirited. The prices realized were from 5 to 10 per cent. in advance of the sale of the previous week.

THE banking firm of Jay Cooke & Co., of Philadelphia, whose collapse caused the panic of 1873, having gone through the Bankruptcy Court, have now been discharged, their creditors making no objection....Two women were killed in Philadelphia, last week, by leaping from the third-story window of a shoddy manufactory which was on fire. Another one was so badly burned that she cannot recover.

THE WEST.

THE Chicago Times, of Saturday, says: "Doleful facts and discouraging figures turn up from the counties concerning the crops and farm products of all kinds. From present appearances Illinois will raise barely enough to support her own million, with nothing to spare to make a frugal profit on."....The growing crops in Nebraska are said to be the finest ever seen in the State.

INFORMATION from Gen. Crook's camp on Goose creek, dated the 18th of July, states that Gen. Crook expected Gen. Terry to join him by the 15th of August, and Gen. Merritt, as observed before, will probably reach him about the 5th of August....Reports from the agencies are that 100 Indians have left Spotted Tail, and from Red Cloud, that 2,000 Sioux and 1,500 Cheyennes, men, women, and children, of whom 700 were warriors, had left since the 15th of July. On the 15th 200 Indians under Dull Knife left in a body. The agent at Red Cloud admits that 1,000 Sioux and 1,200 Cheyennes have gone north.

A SAD calamity occurred a few days ago near St. Joseph, Mo. James O. Cross was with a party of young girls boating on Contrary lake, and one of them reaching to get a water-lily tipped the boat over. The water was twelve feet deep, and before assistance could arrive, the girls, five in number, were drowned. Cross had seized his daughter, and was endeavoring to place her on the bottom of the upturned boat when he was taken with cramps, and was with great difficulty saved....A freight train on the Union Pacific railroad recently ran into a washout near Green river, Wyoming, and killed the engineer, fireman, and another man who was riding on the engine.... Denver, Col., had a double lynching the other night. Two murderers, Joe Tallmadge and Felipe Solas, who recently murdered and robbed a Mr. Newman, in Wet Mountain valley, were arrested, brought to Denver, locked up in the jail, and confessed their crime. A company of citizens forced the jail and hung them....Thirteen Chinese woodchoppers, at work in the Diamond Range mountains, near Eureka, Cal., were recently overwhelmed and drowned by the bursting of an immense waterspout....Joseph Wise, one of Reno's command, who had been just discharged, arrived at St. Paul last week, en route to New York, and gives a very graphic description of the terrible fight in the Black Hills. He puts to rout the story that Custer's heart was cut out, etc. He says that the only disfiguration on the body was a red cross on the forehead, indicating that he was a great brave. The remaining officers, he says, were horribly mutilated.

CHICAGO elevators, as per official figures, contain 1,710,042 bushels of wheat; 996,557 bushels of corn; 206,892 bushels of oats; 62,909 bushels of rye, and 346,905 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 3,323,305 bushels, against 4,187,862 bushels at this period last year....Three hundred pounds of specimen quartz were received at Bismarck from the Black Hills the other day, and assayed. The richest showed $5,059 to the ton, and the poorest $2,500.

THE new census of Nebraska shows that the State has more than doubled in population since 1870. The number of inhabitants is now 257,747....William H. Heath, the late crooked Auditor of St. Louis county, Mo., has been indicted for embezzlement. His defalcation amounts to about $150,000....L. P. Richardson, a correspondent of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, was recently killed and scalped by Indians about 100 miles north of Fort Laramie. He was en route to the Black Hills.

WASHINGTON.

HON ALLAN TAYLOR CAPERTON, Senator of the United States from West Virginia, died in Washington, last week, of a disease engendered by the recent heated term. Mr. Caperton took his seat in the Senate March 4, 1875, and his term of service would have expired in 1881. He was a member of the Confederate States Senate up to the close of the war in 1865, and died at the age of nearly 66 years.

BLUFORD WILSON, late Solicitor of the Treasury, appeared before the House committee on whisky trials in St. Louis, last week, and gave in detail his knowledge in regard to the late whisky prosecutions in the West, and particularly in regard to the connection of Gen. Babcock with them. He related with great minuteness various conversations which he had with Gen. Horace Porter, Mr. Bristow, Attorney General Pierrepont, and finally with President Grant himself on the subject. Wilson said that there was no lack of co-operation on the part of the President in the whisky cases generally until Babcock became involved, when a coolness between the White House and the Treasury Department arose. Wilson gave an explanation of the manner in which the famous "Sylph" signature arose: There was a certain woman who had given the President much trouble. Babcock and McDonald, being together in Washington one day, saw her, and McDonald recognizing her, exclaimed, "There is 'Sylph!'" Babcock said, "Do you know that woman?" McDonald replied, "I know her very well." "Then," said Babcock, "I wish you would get her away from here. She is annoying the President." "Certainly," said McDonald; "that is easy. I can manage her." and he did so. The term "Sylph" became a sort of standing joke between Babcock and McDonald, and they often addressed each other and signed their communications in that way. While in Washington last week, Wilson was sent for by President Grant, and requested to surrender up the original copy of the latter's famous "Let no guilty man escape" letter. Wilson declined to do so, by evading a knowledge of its whereabouts. What followed is related in a dispatch to a Western newspaper: "The President was made very angry, and he directed that a close watch be placed upon Wilson to see what he intended to take out of the department. Wilson made copies of several documents there that had played important parts in the prosecution of the whisky ring, as much for his own protection as anything. He did this in a very quiet manner, but not in so unobserved a fashion but what the President knew of it. Three candle-boxes were filled up and sealed with a direction to his home at Springfield. They reposed quietly in the Solicitor's office awaiting an expressman, when an order came from the President, through Secretary Morrill, that these boxes should be opened and examined before they should be allowed to depart. Wilson was then summoned from his hotel near by. He has been quite ill during the last few days, and was much excited by this raid upon his property. He stood by, however, while the treasury officials went through his boxes. Almost the first thing seized upon was Grant's 'let-no-guilty-man-escape' letter to Bristow."....A Washington dispatch of July 28 says: "A Democratic caucus was held in the hall of the House last night, continuing from 8 until 11 o'clock. The question of repealing the date of the resumption of specie payments was, after discussion, voted on, with the result of about 50 members for repeal and 25 against."

POLITICAL.

THE Missouri Democrats have nominated Hon. John S. Phelps for Governor. Mr. Phelps was a representative in Congress for many years, prior to the war....The President has appointed Samuel Hooper, of Iowa, Consul at Glasgow.

APPOINTMENTS by the President: C. C. Sheats, Appraiser of Merchandise, Mobile, Ala.; Col. Benjamin Alvord, Paymaster General, with the rank of Brigadier General; George Andrews to be United States District Attorney for the Eastern District of Tennessee; Wm. A. Hathorne, of Massachusetts, to be Consul at Zanzibar; Herman Van Arnam, of New York, to be Consul at Guayna.

THE official canvass of Colorado's vote on the State constitution has just been made, and a certified copy of the returns forwarded to Washington, on reception of which the President will issue his proclamation declaring Colorado admitted into the Union. The majority for the constitution is 11,704 out of a total vote of 19,492. The first election for State officers will take place the first Tuesday in October, and the Republican State Convention will meet at Pueblo, Aug. 23.

THE Democrats of the Seventh Congressional District of Illinois, in convention at East St. Louis, last week, nominated William R. Morrison for re-election by acclamation.

THE Democratic State Convention of Louisiana assembled at Baton Rouge last week, and, after balloting four times, nominated Gen. Frank Nichols for Governor....Green B. Raum, of Illinois, has been appointed Commissioner of Internal Revenue, vice Pratt, resigned.

THE Republicans of West Virginia met in convention at Wheeling last week, and nominated the following ticket: For Governor, Nathan Goff; Superintendent of Public Schools, F. H. Crago; Auditor, C. M. Sheron; Treasurer, Moses Frankenberger, of Kanawha county; Attorney General, John A. Hutchinson; Judges of the Court of Appeals, Hicks and Berkeshire, each twelve years, and Judge Brown, four years....The Democrats of Illinois, at their State Convention, held at Springfield last week, placed in nomination the following ticket for State officers: Governor, Louis Steward (previously nominated by the Independents); Lieutenant Governor, A. A. Glenn; Secretary of State, S. Y. Thornton; Auditor, John Hise; Treasurer, George Gundloch; Attorney General, E. Lynch. The Democrats of Louisiana have made the following Congressional nominations: First District, R. L. Gibson; Second, E. John Ellis; Third, J. H. Acklin; Fourth, J. B. Elam; Sixth, E. W. Robertson....The Prohibitionists of Kentucky met in State Convention at Louisville last week to organize the party for the canvass for the Presidency of the United States. Green Clay Smith, Prohibition candidate, was present and made a speech. The State Central Committee and Electors were appointed, and the platform of the party read and adopted.

THE SOUTH.

TWO COMPANIES of United States soldiers have been stationed at Hamburg, S. C., the scene of the late race troubles. Two companies have also been ordered to Aiken, opposite Hamburg, where they will remain all summer.

GENERAL.

SPEAKING of the Indian war, Gen. Sherman says it will be stubborn and bloody; that the Indian chieftains will naturally have the choice of position; that to fight them it will be necessary to take them when they offer and wherever caught; that they will not fight if they can help it unless they have the advantage of ground and numbers, and as a consequence we must suffer losses. He says that Crook and Terry have no superiors as Indian fighters, and if they get anything like a fair chance they will make it warm for the warriors of the Big Horn. He estimates the fighting force of the Sioux now in arms at 2,500. It is the settled purpose to make the punishment of the Sioux one never to be forgotten by that powerful portion of our aboriginal population.

THE attendance at the Centennial is increasing....The great free-for-all trotting race at Cleveland, last week, was the most remarkable turf contest that has taken place for years, if, indeed, it was ever equaled. Against a field of the fastest flyers, the famous mare Goldsmith Maid took the first two heats in the extraordinary time of 2:15¾ and 2:17¼, but here the wonderful little queen of the trotting turf was forced to abdicate her sovereignty to the great stallion Smuggler, who won the third, fourth and fifth heats and the race in the unprecedented time of 2:16¼, 2:19¾ and 2:17½.

OFFICIAL returns made to the Bureau of Statistics at Washington show that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, there arrived in the United States 22,572 Chinese immigrants, of whom only 259 were females. During the corresponding period of 1875 the total immigration to the United States from China was 16,437, of whom 82 were females.

FOREIGN.

A DISPATCH from Belgrade, dated July 21, says: "The Turks are everywhere assuming the offensive. It is officially announced that the Turks intrenched at Beljine attacked Gen. Olimpics, Thursday, with ten battalions, chiefly irregulars. They attempted to drive the Servians across the Drina. After six hours' fighting they were repulsed and pursued to Beljine with heavy loss. The ground was covered with Turkish dead. A rain-storm stopped the pursuit, but the Servian artillery made great havoc in the Turkish ranks.

TERRIBLE atrocities by the Turks are reported from Bulgaria. The destruction of Christian villages and the barbarous massacre of men, women and children are of common occurrence. These outrages, it is alleged, are committed by "irregular" Turkish troops, and the Sultan's Government is arresting the perpetrators.

IN the British House of Lords, the other day, Earl Granville called attention to the extradition question. He said the act of 1870 could have no effect on the treaty of 1842. The only advantage derived from Earl Derby's course was the questionable enjoyment of the society of certain American citizens until they were arrested for cheating, robbing, or murdering some one here. He advised remedial legislation. Earl Derby in reply said negotiations were now going on with hopes of speedy success. Meanwhile the Government is concerting means to tide over the interval....The Belgrade correspondent of the News asserts that the Servians are not losing ground. Their delay is no sign of weakness. The Servians are gaining recruits faster than the Turks.

A BATTLE was recently fought near Orizaba, Mexico, between a force of Government troops and 1,300 revolutionists under Hernandez, in which the latter were badly routed, with the loss of 100 killed and 600 captured. This is a very serious blow to the revolution....A Belgrade dispatch of July 25 says: "Yesterday the Servian army under Gen. Zach encountered the Turks on the whole line, near Yavor. The artillery fire lasted seven hours, and was followed by an infantry engagement, in which the Servians were completely successful. Two other minor Servian successes are reported." ....The London Daily Telegraph is in receipt of letters from Stanley, the African explorer, dated April 24.

PRESIDENT MACMAHON has granted 127 additional pardons to French Communists....The French Senate has adopted the bill authorizing the International Exhibition in 1878....The Chamber of Deputies has voted a credit of $1,500,000 for the expenses of the War Department....Lerdo de Tejada has been re-elected President of the republic of Mexico....The municipal authorities throughout Austria have been instructed to prepare for mobilization of the army.... Affairs in Roumania are rapidly approaching a crisis, with every indication that this powerful province will soon cast its strength on the side of the insurgents. The cable announces that 25,000 Roumanian troops are massed on the Danube frontier in an attitude so threatening as to have drawn a large force of Turks to guard the opposite bank.

COL. VALENTINE BAKER, whose extraordinary escapade with a young woman in a railroad train between London and Weybridge overturned even the stolidity of the British people, has been released, and voluntarily expatriates himself. He has accepted a commission in the Turkish army....The Turks have been badly defeated by the Servians in an attempt to cross the river Timok....The Emperor William has earnestly impressed the Prince of Roumania with the importance of maintaining peace. Turkey has demanded from Roumania the observance of strict neutrality, and has complained that munitions of war are transmitted to Servia through Roumanian territory....It is stated that the Turkish Government has decided to issue paper currency to the amount of £3,000,000.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, July 21.—Senate.—The impeachment trial was resumed, but, on the statement that Mr. Carpenter and Manager Lapham were sick, the Senate, as a court, adjourned till Monday, and continued its discussion of the River and Harbor bill.

House.—A number of private bills were reported and acted upon, after which the House went into committee of the whole on the private calendar. No business of importance was transacted.

SATURDAY, July 22.—Senate.—Sherman called up the bill appropriating $100,000 for the completion of the Washington Monument. After discussion and the adoption of the amendments of Mr. Morrill, providing for the examination of the foundation, etc., and limiting the cost to $350,000, the bill was passed. It appropriates $100,000 to continue the work after the Washington Monument Society shall transfer to the United States all its rights and privileges, and provides that the work shall be under the direction of the President of the United States, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and the Architect of the Capitol....Logan called up the House bill to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen and others, which was amended and passed....The Senate then resumed consideration of the River and Harbor bill.

House.—The House was not in session.

MONDAY, July 24.—Senate.—Cragin submitted a resolution requesting the head of each of the executive departments of the Government to furnish the Senate with the aggregate number of civil employes in their employ, exclusive of mechanics and laborers, for the years 1859, 1861, 1863, 1865, 1867, 1869, 1871, 1873 and 1875. Agreed to.... Logan moved to take up the House bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union. Agreed to—yeas, 22; nays, 20. The morning hour expiring before the bill was read through, Logan asked that the reading be completed, but Edmunds objected....The impeachment trial was resumed. An application of the managers for a postponement till Wednesday, owing to the sickness of Lapham, was denied. Leave, however, was granted to Lapham to print his argument. Manager Jenks then spoke on the question of fact. He was followed by Black for the defense, who dwelt on the question of jurisdiction as being still open, and characterized the receipt of money by Belknap at different times as the acceptance of presents, which was no crime. He ingeniously alluded to the appointment of Henry Clay as Secretary of State, by John Quincy Adams, as a return for what Clay had done in electing him President; to the pecuniary donation made to Daniel Webster, and to the many valuable gifts made to Gen. Grant before his election, followed by the appointment, after he became President, of some of the donors to high places. These were not bribes. Neither could the presents made by Marsh to members of Gen. Belknap's family be called bribes.

House.—Kelley moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill for the coinage of a standard silver dollar, and to make it a legal tender for all debts. Rejected—119 to 68; not two-thirds voting in the affirmative....Hurlbut offered a resolution directing the President to take measures to prevent ammunition being conveyed to the Northwestern Indians. Referred....A resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for a report as to the amount of gold in the treasury....A bill was passed extending to the 1st of February next the time within which the lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes may be redeemed....Cox asked leave to offer a resolution authorizing the several committees of the House to report, at any time during the remainder of the session, in regard to all matters under consideration by such committees. The motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution was defeated by a party vote—yeas, 121; nays, 77—not the necessary two-thirds in the affirmative....Caldwell moved to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution, aimed at Secretary Chandler, declaring that the performance by the head of an executive department of the Government of the duties of the Chairman of a partisan committee, having in charge the arrangement and prosecution of a political campaign, is inconsistent with the relations existing between him and the whole people, whose salaried servant he is; is incompatible with the faithful, impartial and efficient discharge of the duties and responsibilities of his exalted position; is at war with every rational idea of civil-service reform, and challenges public criticism and condemnation. The motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution was defeated....A motion to suspend the rules and order the printing of the report of the Naval Committee on the alleged abuses and frauds in the naval service was defeated.

TUESDAY, July 25.—Senate.—Gordon introduced a bill to establish a non-partisan revenue corps....The House bill amending the Postoffice Appropriation bill of June 23, 1874, and section 3,954 of the Revised Statutes in regard to straw bids, was passed....Consideration of the articles of impeachment was resumed, and Carpenter addressed the court for the defense. He spoke four hours in his accustomed easy, energetic style, and was at times quite eloquent. Before concluding his argument the Senate adjourned.

House.—The House took up the Virginia contested-election case, the resolutions of the committee being that Goode, the sitting member, is not entitled to a seat, and that Platt, the contestant, is. The report of the minority takes the opposite view... Lamar rose to a personal explanation, and defended himself against the charge of certain newspapers that he had made speeches in Mississippi laudatory of what is known as the White-Line policy....Hurlbut, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the resolution directing the Secretary of War not to issue the Northwestern Indians special patent cartridges, which are required for the arms used by them. Adopted.

WEDNESDAY, July 26.—Senate.—The impeachment trial was resumed, and Carpenter concluded his argument for the defense. Scott Lord, in behalf of the managers of the House, followed with the closing argument for the prosecution....No legislative business of importance was transacted.

House.—The House passed the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain Indian trust funds in the United States treasury, in lieu of investment....The Virginia contested-election case of Platt vs. Goode was taken up, and several speeches were delivered in favor of the majority and minority reports. The House adjourned without reaching a vote....The views of the minority of the Committee on Naval Affairs, signed by Representatives Harris, Danford, and Hays, were presented in the House. The minority severely criticize the majority report, alleging that it is unfair in its statements, fallacious in its conclusions, is evidently prompted by a partisan spirit, ignores entirely testimony favorable to the Navy Department, and perverts other portions in such ways as to inflict gross injustice upon the Secretary and other officers.

THURSDAY, July 27.—Senate.—The Senate met, and, after the announcement of the death of Senator Caperton, of West Virginia, adjourned out of respect to the memory of the deceased.

House.—Foster, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the Senate bill appropriating $100,000 for the construction of the Washington monument, which was passed with amendments, one of which increases the amount to $200,000....A message from the Senate announcing the death of Senator Caperton, of West Virginia, was presented, whereupon, on motion of Wilson, the usual resolutions were adopted. Wilson, Banks, Luttrell, Douglas, Hardenbergh, Faulkner, and Kasson were appointed a committee to accompany the body to West Virginia, and the House adjourned.

CENTENNIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Rowell's Newspaper Pavilion—Printing Presses—Trial of Reapers and Binders—The Esterly Reaper—Esterly & Son's Harvesters.

NEWSPAPER PAVILION.

One of the marked features of the exhibition is Rowell's Newspaper Pavilion, a neat wooden structure, 67x46 feet, and 33 feet high, with galleries surrounding the inside, furnished with writing-desks and writing materials free, to accommodate the members of the press. On the sides of the first floor ranged in alcoves, in perfect order, are complete files of all the newspapers published in the country—3,129—and any visitor, from any part of the United States, can find any newspaper he asks for, of the latest date of publication. The number of the press representatives who resort here daily is large and constantly increasing. Mr. Moses, the superintendent, extends a cordial welcome to all visitors, and makes them all feel at home. Placards are conspicuously posted, "Free to the Press." "Ask for any newspaper you want to see." This is the first time and place in our history when a collection of all the newspapers published in this country could be seen at any day of the week or month. The press owes Mr. Rowell unstinted thanks for this magnificent exhibition.

PRINTING PRESSES.

There is a very great number and variety of printing presses in Machinery hall, the principal ones being the Bullock, the Walter (English), Hoe's, and the Potter. Some of the large newspaper press run a daily edition here. The New York Times ships its plates here by express, after its edition is worked off in New York, and, at stated hours through the day, works off a large number of copies and distributes gratuitously to the crowd. It uses the Walter press, which, at ordinary speed, prints 14,000 copies an hour.

The New York Herald does the same thing on the Bullock press, which prints 20,000, and at a forced speed has printed 28,800 an hour. It sells its morning issue to protect its large local trade here, but gives them away in the afternoon.

The Philadelphia Times has quite recently adopted the same plan. So that we now have three daily papers, with the complete news of the day, issued in Machinery hall.

A TRIAL OF REAPERS AND BINDERS

was held the past week at Schenck's station, some twenty miles north of here, on the line of the road to New York, and a large number of machines on exhibition here participated in the trial. Director General Goshorn, by a published hand-bill, had announced that the competitive trial, ordered some time ago, would not be held, for reason not given, but that a voluntary trial by exhibitors might be made. And Superintendent Landreth gave notice that such trial would be held on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week. I was there to see on my own responsibility, and at my own expense, and followed the machines for some five hours, under a blazing hot sun, and at another time shall give the result of my observations. At present I wish to speak of reapers and reaper trials in general. As to competitive trials, my matured conviction, after long observation, is that usually they are a great sham. Almost always a majority of the judges are composed of men incompetent to determine the real merits of the competing machines. They are not experts, and are not half so well qualified to judge justly, as a majority of farmers who use these machines. It is rare that even one expert can be found upon any committee, or that the award made at such trials command general confidence. Apropos of this subject, a good story is told, which, if not true, at least represents truly the popular belief. It is said that Mr. Landreth, the Superintendent of Agricultural hall, wrote to Mr. Reynolds, of Chicago, Secretary of the great Industrial Exposition Company there, asking him what he thought would be the effect of holding competitive trials of Agricultural machinery, and bestowing awards. Mr. Reynolds, it is said, replied that it would work great injury, but, for one reason, and that was, that nobody now was fool enough to care anything for such awards.

In addition to the incompetence of the judges, there is the liability to be influenced to render partial judgment to favorites. Wealthy machine-makers, having had long experience in this business, with medals and stars emblazoned all over their banners, as the trophies of former contests, enter the field determined to win, new laurels, and are not always over-scrupulous as to the means of obtaining the victory. Indeed, the renowned commanders of well-disciplined armies might take lessons in strategic tactics, and in the art of mining and sapping, of these veteran knights of the harvest field. And the judges, sometimes in the innocence of their souls, and sometimes with sinister motives, scarcely concealed, walk right into the trap set for them, and often render a verdict that has no more relation to the facts of the trial, than a proposition in Euclid has to the fables of Esop. These judges are often appointed by the influence of prominent manufacturers, and there is often as much partisanship manifested at these trials as in a political caucus. I speak of what I have seen and what I know.

The field selected for the trial was a very large one, and the grain on the south side stood upright, but that on the north and west part was quite crimpled, with heads interlocked, and some of it was badly lodged. And the grain was too ripe, and the straw very brittle. Any fair reaper can cut and lay decently upright grain; but the test is, will it do work well in grain in bad condition. Few of those on the ground could cut and deliver lodged grain. Most of them cut upright grain well enough, but only a small number laid the bundles smoothly and evenly. Indeed, all of the revolving arm-rake reapers lay the bottom of the bundle crosswise, as any one can see by examining it.

THE ESTERLY REAPER, OF WHITEWATER, WIS., with reel and one arm-rake, working in a quarter circle, is the only machine here that lays the bundle perfectly even. Equal to any in all other respects, it excels all other reapers in this.

But reapers have had their day, and henceforth harvesters and binders are to take the lead. A good harvester saves the labor of two men, for two men can bind as fast as a harvester can cut, but it takes four men to bind after a reaper. The imperfections of all harvesters here, except one, are that they do not separate the bundles, and hence in binding there is always some scattering and waste; that they all use canvas with belts and rollers to carry the grain, and as the canvas stretches in dry, and shrinks in damp weather, and the straw winds around the rollers, and the leaves and fine straw clog the gudgeons, they are continually getting out of order and cause much delay in adjusting and cleaning.

ESTERLY AND SON'S HARVESTERS

Dispense with all this machinery, and a revolving and vibrating rake strikes the butts of the cut grain and carries it up on the transverse table, where it is pushed by a reversible rake to the binders. If the grain is light two bundles need make but one. Both rakes are driven by a small spur wheel on the main axle of the driving wheel, working in a spur gear, in connection with a cam, rake and pinion. The whole machine is simple, operates perfectly and commends itself to all visitors.

My conviction is, that we have not reached perfection in harvesting machinery. We must have in the future, what we have not now, a harvester and binder that will cut and bind grain in all stages, unless badly lodged, and deliver it in good condition without waste. Such a machine is demanded. Such a machine we must and doubtless shall have at no distant day. The best machines we now have are merely indices of what are to be. S. M. B.

WENDELL AND TECUMSEH.

The Great Agitator Writes a Sharp Letter to the Old Warrior—An Earnest Plea for Ye Noble Indian.

Wendell Phillips has addressed a very sharp open letter to Gen. Sherman, in which he arraigns him for his reported declaration in favor of exterminating the Indian. Mr. Phillips recites the old story of the wrongs of the "noble red man" at the hands of the barbarous whites in his usually eloquent vein, and enters into a vigorous defense of the Indian. We give the closing portion of his letter:

Except the negro, no race will lift up at the judgment seat such accusing hands against this nation as the Indian will. We have subjected him to agents who have systematically cheated him. We have made causeless war on him, merely as a pretext to steal his lands. Trampling under foot the rules of modern warfare, we have made war on his women and children. We have cheated him out of one hunting ground by compelling him to accept another, and robbed him of this last by driving him to frenzy, and then punishing resistance by confiscation. Meanwhile neither pulpit nor press nor political party would listen to his complaint. Neither in Congress nor in any city of the Union could his advocate obtain a hearing. Statesmanship, good sense and justice, even from the chief magistrate, were unavailing when they pleaded for such long-time victims of popular hate and pillage as our Indian tribes.

Can it be possible, then, that with such knowledge and such experience, you, sir, the head of the army, and bound to show at least outward respect for civilization, have no counsel to give except extermination—the extermination of these plundered victims of a greedy, unscrupulous, and cruel people? Can you advise a professedly Christian people, steeped in guilt, not to reform, but to consummate its wickedness by such hideous barbarism as only the most inhuman tyrants have ever attempted? The worst possible of infidels, do you affirm that a wise and powerful nation is safe only when it sinks below the level of savage life to clutch a coward's peace by sweeping every man, woman, and child of this insignificant race in blood from our path? Wise men laugh at such timid folly; brave men despise it. They know that fair play is the best teacher and justice always a sufficient shield.

If, indeed, this is the counsel you give from your high place, then, for the sake of that Christianity which we profess, and that civilization we claim, I wish it understood that one, at least, of your fellow-citizens believes that you misrepresent the army, whose best officers have often protested against our heinous injustice to these wards of the nation, and that you disgrace the profession of Du Guesclin, of Bayard, and Sir Philip Sidney, disgrace the post which Washington once filled, and the uniform that Thomas, Greene, and Hamilton have worn.
Your fellow-citizen, WENDELL PHILLIPS.

Tecumseh Riled.

The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times telegraphs:

"Gen. Sherman was very angry today when asked about Wendell Phillips' letter, addressed to him upon the Indian question. The letter accuses him of recommending the extermination of the Indians. This he denies most emphatically, and pronounces the article as a base villification and contemptible outrage. He says the letter was never sent to him and never came to his notice until after its publication. His views, he says, are perfectly well known to Mr. Phillips, and he has frequently expressed his opinions, which have gone out to the public, that the Indians should be made to submit to the laws, as other people, at all hazards. He says his views upon the Indian question have been so often expressed that they are very well known, and, for that reason, a man in Wendell Phillips' position is utterly inexcusable in his attempt to misrepresent him."

ISSUE OF SILVER COIN.

Text of the Bill Passed by Congress.

The following is the text of the joint resolution for the issue of silver coin, which has passed both houses of Congress and received the signature of the President:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury, under such limits and regulations as will best secure a just and fair distribution of the same through the country, may issue the silver coin at any time in the Treasury, to an amount not exceeding $10,000,000, in exchange for an equal amount of legal-tender notes, and notes so received in exchange shall be kept as a special fund, separate and apart from all other money in the Treasury, and be reissued only upon the retirement and destruction of a like sum of fractional currency received at the Treasury in payment of dues to the United States, and said fractional currency, when so substituted, shall be destroyed, as provided in the act approved April 17, 1876.

SEC. 2. That the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit from time to time the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet export demand for the same.

SEC. 3. That, in addition to the amount of subsidiary silver coin authorized by law to be issued in redemption of fractional currency, it shall be lawful to manufacture at the several mints and issue through the treasury and several offices such coin to an amount that, including the amount of subsidiary silver coin and fractional currency outstanding, shall in the aggregate not exceed at any time $50,000,000.

SEC. 4. That the silver bullion required for the purposes of this act shall be purchased from time to time at market rates by the Secretary of the Treasury with any money not otherwise appropriated, but no purchase of bullion shall be made under this resolution when the market rate for the same shall be such as will not admit of coinage and issue as herein provided without loss to the treasury, and any gain or seignorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the treasury as provided for under existing laws relating to subsidiary coinage, providing that the amount of money at one time invested in such silver bullion, exclusive of such resulting coin, shall not exceed $200,000.

President Grant's Cabinet Officers.

Secretaries of State—Elihu B. Washburne, of Illinois; Hamilton Fish, of New York.

Secretaries of the Treasury—Geo. S. Boutwell, of Massachusetts; William A. Richardson, of Massachusetts; Benjamin H. Bristow, of Kentucky; Lot M. Morrill, of Maine.

Secretaries of War—John A. Rawlins, of Illinois; John M. Schofield, of Missouri; William W. Belknap, of Iowa; Alphonso Taft, of Ohio; James Donald Cameron, of Pennsylvania.

Secretaries of the Navy—E. A. Borie, of Pennsylvania; Geo. M. Robeson, of New Jersey.

Secretaries of the Interior—Columbus Delano, of Ohio; Zachariah Chandler, of Michigan.

Postmasters General—John A. J. Creswell, of Maryland; Marshall Jewell, of Connecticut; James N. Tyner, of Indiana.

Attorneys General—Jno. A. Akerman, of Georgia; E. R. Hoar, of Massachusetts; Geo. H. Williams, of Oregon; Edwards Pierrepont, of New York; Alphonso Taft, of Ohio.

MR. E. R. MINER, of Greensburg, Ind., while on a visit to Cincinnati during the Cincinnati Convention, was so unfortunate as to lose his pocket-book, containing $200 or $300 and some valuable papers. The thief appropriated to his own use what was available, and then inclosed the pocket-book and papers in a miniature coffin, and with some sarcastic comments as to its age and amount of servitude written on the outside, expressed it to the owner.

GARNER'S WATERY GRAVE.

Capsizing of a Pleasure Yacht in New York Harbor—An Incapable Sailing-Master Causes the Drowning of Seven Society Leaders.

Mr. Wm. T. Garner, a rich cotton-printer of New York, with a select number of invited guests, went out for a sail in his own yacht, the Mohawk, in New York harbor, one afternoon recently; but when less than half a mile from the starting point, the New York Yacht Club house, on Staten Island, the vessel was struck by a strong gust of wind and capsized. All sails were set, and the wind striking the top-sails forced the yacht on her beam end, and the cabin filled with water in ten minutes. There were on board W. T. Garner, owner, his wife, Frost Thorne, brother of Mrs. Garner, two young ladies, Misses Hunter and May, and three gentlemen friends, with a crew of fifteen or twenty men. Mr. Garner and guests were all in the cabin when the vessel was struck, and Miss May was pushed up the companion-way and supported until she was rescued. Mr. Garner lost his life in a heroic effort to save Mrs. Garner and Miss Hunter, who were crushed in between the furniture of the cabin, and a Mr. Crosby, after rendering courageous assistance to Mr. Garner, was ingulfed in the cabin, but floated out through the skylight after tearing himself from the crushed and drowning Mrs. Garner, whom no efforts could save.

A large number of boats went to the rescue. The crew of the Mohawk seemed paralyzed, and all efforts to get at drowning persons before life was extinct proved unavailing.

Great excitement was occasioned at Staten Island by the seemingly avoidable accident, and sailors were especially loud in their denunciation of the manner in which Sailing-Master Rowland handled the yacht. The crew had full warning of the storm, yet waited with top-sails set, and as the anchor had been only tripped, and was not hauled up, the yacht, with all sails set, was at the mercy of the squall, and upset as easily as if it had been a paper boat. The Mohawk was a large, staunch schooner-yacht, and at favorable position in the harbor, within a short distance from shore. Seamen think she could have met with such a calamity only through the greatest negligence of the sailing-master or crew. Other yachts with mainsails but not top-sails rode out the moderate storm without an indication of danger.

Wm. T. Garner was 32 years of age at the time of his death. He was a son of Thomas Garner, the Englishman who came to this country when a young man and began the manufacture of print cloths, of which at the time of his death, in 1865, he was the largest producer in the world. In early boyhood young Garner entered the establishment of his father, and grew up with a thorough and practical knowledge of the business, which, later in life, he controlled. By his father's death he inherited a fortune, which he himself stated to be valued at from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000. Mr. Garner was the head of the large print manufactory at the corner of Worth and Hudson streets, and also of the house known as Garner & Johnson, on Fourth street, New York. Besides his business in the metropolis, he had five large cotton mills in Cohoes, others in Rochester, Little Falls, Pleasant Valley, Newburg and Reading, Pa.; also print works at Wappenger Falls and Hagerstown, having in his employ from 7,000 to 8,000 persons in cloth printing. He employed 42 machines, being double the number used by any other manufacturer or corporation in the country. His individual ownership of mill property was fully equal to one-quarter of the entire Fall River manufacturing district. There is probably no single man connected with the cotton manufacturing interests in the world whose loss will make itself more generally felt.

THE farmers of Elkhart county, Ind., petitioned their clergy to pray for a cessation of the rains until they secured their crops.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

That Calf.

An old farmer, one morn, hurried out to his barn,
Where the cattle were standing, and said,
While they trembled with fright—"Now which of you, last night,
Shut the barn door, while I was in bed?"
Each one of them all shook his head.

Now the little Spot, she was down in the lot,
And the way the rest did was a shame;
For not one, night before, saw her close up the door,
But they said that she did all the same;
For they always made her bear the blame.

Said the horse, Dapple-Gray, "I was not up this way
Last night, as I now recollect;"
And the bull, passing by, tossed his horns very high,
And said, "Where's the one to object
If I say, 'tis that calf, I suspect?"

"It is too wicked now," said the old brindle cow,
"To accuse honest folks of such tricks;"
Said the cock in the tree, "I am sure 'twasn't me;"
All the sheep just said "bah!"—there were six—
And they thought now that calf's in a fix!

"Of course we all knew 'twas the wrong thing to do,"
Cried the chickens; "Of course," mewed the cat;
"I suppose," said the mule, "folks think me a fool,
But I'm not quite so simple as that—
Well, that calf never knows what she's at!"

Just then the poor calf, who was always the laugh
And the jest of the yard, came in sight;—
"Did you shut my barn door?" said the farmer once more:
And she answered, "I did, sir, last night,
For I thought that to close it was right."

Now each beast shook his head; "She'll catch it," they said,
"Serve her right for her meddlesome way."
Cried the farmer, "Come here, little bossie, my dear,
You have done what I cannot repay,
And your fortune is made from this day.

"Very strangely, last night I forgot the door quite,
And if you had not closed it, so neat,
All the colts had slipped in, and gone straight to the bin,
And got what they ought not to eat;—
They'd have foundered themselves upon wheat."

Then each beast of them all began loudly to bawl,
The mule tried to smile, the cock crew,
"Little Spotty, my dear, you're the favorite here,"
They all cried, "We're so glad it was you!"
But that calf only answered them, "boo!"

THE London Builder recommends people who transplant to mark the north side of each tree with red chalk before it is taken up, and replace it in its natural position. A larger proportion will then live, as, in ignoring this law of nature, transplanted trees generally perish.

THE jury on agricultural machinery at the Centennial has decided to abandon the old practice of field-trials, and will, therefore, merely examine the machines as they stand in Agricultural Hall, and will recommend such makes as seem to them to command the most improvements. THE making of skim-milk cheese is detrimental to the dairy business, as it gives facilities to dishonest sellers to impose an inferior article upon consumers for a good one, and leads to a general depreciation of the reputation of Western cheese. Cheese should be branded by the manufacturer according to its character; that is, whether from skimmed, partly skimmed, or whole milk.

A PRACTICAL dairyman sends the following about rendering winter-churning easy: Strain the milk into pans and set them on a pot of boiling water, on the stove. Heat the milk quite hot, but not so as to scald. Set away the pans, and in thirty-six hours thick cream will have formed. At each skimming stir the cream well together, and, when enough for a churning has accumulated, take care, in cold weather, to have the chill taken off the cream. Then scald the churn, put in the cream, and churn gently; and if the butter does not come in less than ten minutes, you may judge that your cream is too cold.

MY GARDEN is overrun with rats and mice. In consequence I had always to sow double the quantity of peas and beans requisite, and sometimes even had to sow them twice over. This year I put twenty-two pounds of peas and six pounds of beans into the ground without any manure, previously soaking the seeds for a short time in paraffine oil. Not a single pea or bean has been touched, and the crop has been enormous. My crop of onions has every year been attacked with maggots, and my turnips with fly. For the last eight years, as soon as the vermin made their appearance, I watered between the rows two ounces of paraffine oil to six gallons of water. Both maggot and fly disappeared, and the crops and quality have always been extremely fine. I believe the seed sprinkled with the oil before sowing, or a certain portion of paraffine poured over dry earth and sown as guano, would answer fully as well, and I am satisfied it is a very powerful manure besides an effectual remedy against grub, wireworm, and all garden pests. Seed sprinkled with the oil is quite safe from all feathered and insect vermin. The proportion of two wine-glassfuls of paraffine oil to six gallons of rain water (imperial measure) is what can be applied to all kinds of green vegetables without injury. The growth succeeding its application is something wonderful.—Dumfermline Journal.

About the House.

BEDBUG CURE.—Take of iodide of potassium one ounce, and dissolve it in one-half pint of turpentine; then apply with a small brush or feather, in all the crevices of the wall and bedstead. This, I am happy to state, with the addition of scalding with alum water, ended my trouble in this line. Care should be taken to label this mixture "poison."

CORN BREAD.—Five cups buttermilk, two of sweet milk, four of sugar, five even teaspoons saleratus, two of salt, flour and meal to make a stiff batter, using two parts meal to one part flour; bake slow in iron vessel, and not cut till cold.

TO CAN RASPBERRIES.—Fill the cans full of the berries, set them in a boiler of cold water, and bring the water to the boiling point. As the berries settle, add more till the juice reaches the top of the can, then seal. In this way the syrup is undiluted with water. Or put the berries in a stew-pan with a little water, let them boil four or five minutes, dip into cans and seal up.

A CORRESPONDENT gives, in the Household, a recipe which he asserts will keep the hair from falling out: To one-fourth of a pint of number one castor oil, add one pint of alcohol, one ounce flour of sulphur, one-half a pint of rain water, enough perfume to give it an agreeable odor. Wet the head and scalp thoroughly; the hair will cease falling off in a few days, and will have a lively, fresh, glossy appearance.

HOW TO COOK CODFISH.—Put the fish to soak in cold water over night. In the morning remove it into fresh warm water, and set by the fire. Half an hour previous to its being dished up, change into fresh water, and simmer over the fire nearly to boiling heat, but no higher. This management does not draw out, but revives and enlivens the nutritious substance in them, and leaves the fish tender and delicious.

A LADY writes the Farm Journal: "There are various substances and preparations advertised to soften water; but the very best I know of, and I have tried many, is to 'break' with wood ashes in the old way of scalding sufficient ashes and then turning ashes and water into a barrel which has been filled from the well. It is better to have it done over night before using to wash, that it may thoroughly settle, and then use great care in dipping off. It is well to have a barrel with a spigot near the bottom, for drawing the water off, as the least of the sediment or ashes makes the clothes quite yellow.

British Revenue Returns.

Unusual interest attaches to the British revenue returns for the quarter ending June 30, just published. Of the nine heads under which they are exhibited, four show a decrease, among which is the income tax, although it was raised early in the quarter. Stamps show a decrease of £20,000; land tax and house duty, £8,000; postoffice, £108,000; income tax, £128,000; total, £264,000. The excise has yielded £172,000 more than in the corresponding quarter of 1875; the augmentation in customs is only £38,000; telegraphs, £25,000; crown lands, £5,000; miscellaneous, £104,750, making a total increase of £314,750, and leaving a net increase of only £80,750. All the items showing a decrease are those depending chiefly on the habits of the middle and trading classes. There have been fewer transactions and consequently fewer stamps required, fewer letters have been written, and less profit has been made, so that the income tax sank by £128,000. From 1863 to 1872 the value of exports from the United Kingdom rose from £196,902,409 to £314,588,837, but for the present England's power to extend her trade has passed away.

Matrimony and the Centennial.

A letter-writer to an Albany paper observes: "The Centennial has been a great hastener of marriages. People who, under ordinary circumstances, would have delayed their honeymoon till some indefinite future time, have rushed into matrimony, so as to be able to kill two birds with one stone—go to the Centennial and on their wedding tour at the same time."

TWO YEARS ago the Boston Common Council forbade the turning of water from roofs into the streets, and over 96,000 openings into the sewers had to be made for this additional drainage. There were a thousand more deaths in Boston in 1875 than in 1874, and the physicians say that the increase is owing to the air being impregnated with sewer gas.

FATHER JULY, of Stevens Point, Wis., lost a valuable mare in a peculiar manner. While driving along the road he heard a strange sound, as of running water. Looking at his mare he found her bleeding to death from a wound made by a sharp stick in her side. It is supposed she stepped on the stick and that it flew up and pierced her body.

THE AMERICAN CENTENNIAL.

What the London Times Has to Say About It—The "Thunderer" Makes Up for Queen Vic's Neglect to Recognize the Occasion.

The Emperor of Germany, the Czar of Russia, and the King of Italy, all sent letters to President Grant, referring in a complimentary manner to the one hundredth anniversary of the birthday of the United States of America. The Queen of Great Britain made no such recognition of the occasion—probably thinking that it could hardly be expected of her to express official congratulation over the successful results of a revolution which severed so many valuable colonies from the British Crown. The London Times, however—the leading organ of popular sentiment in the United Kingdom—makes up for Her Majesty's neglect by commenting at length, and in a kindly spirit, upon the subject of our Centennial; and, as a matter of interest to all Americans, we give place to its utterance, as follows:

[From the London Times, July 4.]

The citizens of the United States will to-day rejoice, with much effusion of sentiment and of oratory, that they have become a nation great among the nations of the earth. From earliest dawn till the hours of night slip into those of to-morrow, one thought will occupy the inhabitants of the West—that just a hundred years ago the scanty predecessors of the millions of to-day renounced their allegiance to a King who had forfeited all claims to their loyalty, and declared their independence of all earthly sovereignty. Doubtless there will be private griefs and private joys in the Western Republic while the sun is running its course. Children will be born to make glad the eyes of their parents; men will die and sink to rest. No parade of state, no pageantry of Princes or of peoples, can fail to be flecked with the changing colors of personal feelings shot across the tissue of national life. The movement of birth and of death takes no heed of the accidental divisions of political societies, and will not be arrested by political commemorations. To say so much is the commonplace of moralists, and, if we recall the well-worn thought, it is because we find in it an illustration of that feeling of national union which will underlie all the demonstrations of to-day. Though private griefs and private joys must come, they will fail, even in the hearts of those who sorrow or rejoice, to throw into the background the remembrance of the national thanksgiving. The parent of the newly-born child will connect its birth with the exuberant life of the great republic of which it becomes a living member; and the regrets of the dying, and of the friends of the dying, will be assuaged by the thought that it has been at least given them to witness the fullness of a hundred years of national existence.

"Our forefathers were a handful of men, and we have become a great people"—this is the thought to which throughout this livelong day expression will be sought to be given in a thousand shapes. It would not be interesting, it would scarcely be prudent, to dwell too long on the forms of expression this thought will take. We have ourselves a most limited capacity for organizing outward shows of national feelings, and our kinsmen in the United States are, if possible, more deficient than ourselves in the gifts which are necessary to those who would render pageantry beautiful as well as cumbrous. A stranger descending to-day in Philadelphia or New York in ignorance of the motive of the celebration about him, and unmoved by sympathy with the national life sought to be glorified, would be attracted by no grace of art, would be excited by no visions of brilliant pomp, would be delighted with no marhaling of colors as they shine in processional trophies. We know from the treasured memorials which painters have left us with what splendor and beauty the triumphs of national history were celebrated in Italian republics and German cities in the great period of the Renaissance; and it is fortunate that very few of the citizens of the United States have any knowledge of these achievements of the past. They are unconscious of the poverty of invention and of the discords of taste that would make Paul of Verona wonder into what strange land he had strayed. Let us escape from the painful attempt to realize the series of pomps which will be arrayed in so many cities of the United States to-day. We would rather turn back to the thought which we have described as symbolized by them. A group of small Commonwealths have grown into a great nation, which shall yet be greater. After the sturdy assertion of the liberty of self-government, which caused the patriots of 1776 to repudiate the sovereignty of George III., and their tenacity of resistance enabled them to make good their resolution to be free, they did not close their frontiers so as to keep the territories they had won for the exclusive use of themselves and of their children. Immigrants from all the world were invited to come in and share their freedom. No nation ever offered the privileges of citizenship more liberally, and no nation was ever rewarded with such rich returns for its hospitality. The especial glory of the growth of the United States has been this, that the republic has grown because refugees from all the rest of the world have flocked to its protection. Sometimes they have fled from the cruel conditions of overcrowded life at home, the blame of which could be laid at the door of no man, or class of men, since they were the necessary consequences of false ideas, universally acted upon as if they were true; sometimes they fled from the tyrannies of conscription and of feudal law, which kept them bound from the cradle to the grave; sometimes they sought in the West a liberty to obey the dictates of their own consciences denied by prelates and governments of the European Continent. It is justly a matter of congratulation that a great people should have thus grown up. The troops of immigrants coming in year after year have traversed the continent, plowed the prairie, bridged the mightiest rivers, thrown railways over and through mountains, and brought from the hidden depths of the earth those treasures of iron and coal which more than anything else increase the power of man to appropriate the gifts of nature to his use. Of silver and gold we need not speak; the abundance of their production is comparatively an insignificant accident. The 100 years that have passed have seen a great industrial community developed with unexampled rapidity. Its growth would, indeed, have been still greater had not foolish notions of protective legislation deceived the democracy of America, as they have deceived European governments; but the productiveness of a virgin soil has been generous enough to hide this loss. The nation has not been so prosperous as it might have been; but the aggregate wealth it now annually produces approaches that of the oldest communities, and yet the mass of population remains so small, compared with the capabilities of wealth-making which undeveloped lands afford, that the wages of the laborer are higher than they are in any other part of the world. The English settlers, and those who have come to share their freedom, have brought the United States so far in the course of 100 years, and it would be vain to prescribe the limits of the growth to which the nation may attain in another century of existence.

The Silver Coin.

The measure passed by Congress last week in regard to the issue of silver coin and the purchasing of silver bullion was not merely a concurrent resolution as is supposed in some quarters, but a joint resolution, which requires, and will, doubtless, receive the approval of the President in order that it may become a law.

Many applications are received at the treasury for silver in exchange for United States notes, based upon the impression that the bill has become a law. The Secretary of the Treasury can, under the provisions of the Silver bill, make no regulations to increase the payments, as the present rate of paying out silver will soon exhaust the amount on hand, unless the mints should at once largely increase the issue. The mints at San Francisco and Carson City are steadily working now, but the extreme hot weather has interfered with the work at the Philadelphia mint.—Washington Dispatch.

Official Bribery in Russia.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Edinburgh Scotsman says: "Officialism in Russia is one vast, overgrown system of corruption and bribery, pervading all classes, eating into all her industries, and thoroughly corrupting her morals. It is such a wide-spreading infernal machinery as other nations can scarcely comprehend. From the meanest persons who wear imperial livery to the very Princes of the imperial blood, the whole is corrupt. A system of blackmail and 'take what you can' runs through all. Take the customs—you bribe the officer of your district, and spare the half of the duty. You refuse to bribe, and the officer and his family starve, because the Government allows him such a paltry pittance that he can only starve upon it, taking for granted that he will help himself. If, as a merchant, you require your letters delivered punctually, and not destroyed, you must bribe the post officials, for the same reason. If you want for your son the university certificate, which enables him to serve in the army one year instead of five, your son does not require to know anything; all that is wanted is a couple of hundred of roubles to the professors of the University. In the army the system of blackmail is complete, from the ranks to the Field Marshal.

Population of Turkey.

During the Intertional Exhibition of 1873 at Vienna a society was formed for the collection of statistics relative to the East. This society issues a monthly journal, and from its pages the Paris Journal Officiel reproduces some facts about the population of Turkey which will be of interest at the present time. The figures are taken from official almanacs printed at the capitals of the Vilayets or Turkish districts. Constantinople, which forms a separate district, has 680,000 inhabitants. The male population of each district, according to religious denominations, is as follows:

Vilayet.	Mussulmans.	Non-Moslem.
Bosnia	309,522	306,707
Monastir	485,993	417,865
Janina	230,749	467,001
Salonica	124,828	124,157
Adrianople	235,667	401,143
Danube	455,767	715,938
Total	1,862,446	2,433,856

The total male population of Turkey, excluding the vassal states and islands, is 4,976,000—in round numbers, 5,000,000. Assuming the equality of the sexes, this would give a total population of about 10,000,000.

England and Our Indian War.

In the British House of Commons, on on the 21st of July, Sir Edward William Watkin asked the Under Secretary for the Colonial Department if he could give any information regarding the conflict between the United States troops and the Sioux Indians, many of which tribe are British subjects, and whether the origin of the conflict was not a breach of a treaty regarding an Indian reservation and subsidies, which may provoke a wide-spread antagonism between the Indians and whites on both American and British territory. He asked whether the Government proposed to tender its good offices in the interest of the Indian subjects of Great Britain and humanity. Mr. Lowther replied that, so far, no information had been received, and he could not express an opinion as to its origin or possible consequences. He had no information tending to show that any British subjects are connected with these events. As at present advised the Government has no intention to interfere.

Indian Strength Underestimated.

Sherman and Sheridan certainly underestimate the strength of the hostiles. Sitting Bull's band, before it was joined by Crazy Horse, numbered 1,800 lodges—over 6,000 effective fighting force—and Crazy Horse has proven himself strong enough to defeat Crook in every engagement without the aid of Sitting Bull. Col. Burke, the agent at Standing Rock, who certainly is well informed and not disposed to exaggerate their strength, estimates the fighting force of the Sioux at 10,000, and it should be remembered that women and children are not elements of weakness, for every 9-year old boy will handle a gun, stone, mallet, or bow to better advantage than a majority of recruits handle their muskets. Squaws do the camp drudgery and are ready for the battle if their services are needed.—Bismarck Cor. New York Herald.

The Methodists.

The Nashville Advocate (Southern Methodist) compiles a table which makes the total number of Methodist communicants in the world 4,173,047. They are thus distributed:

Methodists in the United States	3,146,356
British Wesleyan Methodists	467,683
Irish Wesleyan Methodists	21,273
French Wesleyan Methodists	2,030
Australian Wesleyan Methodists	67,012
British Primitive Methodists	174,600
Methodist New Connection	25,837
United Methodist Free Churches	74,845
Bible Christian Churches	27,708
British Wesleyan Reform Union	8,147
Methodist Church of Canada	107,616
Methodist Episcopal Church in Canada	23,012
Other Methodists	26,000
Grand total	4,173,047

The total number of itinerant ministers is 29,530, of local preachers 56,935.

Great Crops in Texas.

This is the year of jubilee with the Texas farmers. Nothing like the great crops on hand throughout the State have ever been known. We have been in Texas for thirty years, and it is the only universally fine crop year we have ever heard of. Judging from the accounts in our Texas exchanges, the crops are good everywhere. Splendid wheat crops, corn so plentiful that farmers do not know what to do with it, and cotton promising a large yield.—Marshall (Tex.) Herald.

Virtues of Sweet Oil.

An eminent physician says that sweet oil is not only an antidote to the bite of a rattlesnake, but "will cure poison of any kind, both in man and beast." The patient must take a spoonful of it internally, and bathe the wound, for a cure. To cure a horse it takes eight times as much as for a man. A pint of whisky is also good for a "snakebite."

A BAD INDIAN.

The Career of the Bloodthirsty Sitting Bull.

Delegate McGinness of Montana Territory, who has carefully studied the Indian question, makes the following statement in regard to the cause of the Sioux trouble and the character and strength of Sitting Bull "the bad:"

The cause of this war, or rather of these expeditions—for this war with these Indians has been going on for fifteen or more years—may be summed up in the words, "Sitting Bull and the outlaw Sioux." We have never had peace, or even treaty relations, with these bands. After the Spirit Lake massacre in Iowa, and the great Sioux massacre in Minnesota, all the more turbulent spirits banded together. After Gen. Sibley's expedition in 1863, they crossed the Missouri and endeavored to concentrate for another invasion of Minnesota. But the next year Sully followed them across the Missouri, and, after several running fights, they retreated across the Bad Lands into the Big Horn country. Sully followed them to the Yellowstone and established Fort Buford. Upon this post and on the steamboats and immigrants to Montana they kept up unceasing war, often keeping the garrison at Buford in a state of siege for weeks at a time, and murdering every straggler who went outside the post. An attempt was made to treat with them in 1866, but, after accepting the presents and securing some ammunition, Sitting Bull broke up the council, and the Commissioners escaped to the fort across the river. When Red Cloud and Spotted Tail made peace at Laramie, Sitting Bull stubbornly refused to come in. All that year he made war on the steamboats and commerce of the Missouri, massacreing several boat-loads of returning miners, and capturing large quantities of gold dust, which he traded for arms with the northern half-breeds. In 1867 he threatened the Gallatin valley in Montana, when the Montana volunteers were raised to meet him. In 1868 he attacked the settlement of Musclesbell, and suffered defeat, losing thirty-six warriors. The settlers, having notice of his coming, ambuscaded him in a ravine outside of the town. Although the attack was made by the Sioux on the village, this battle was denounced as a massacre by a portion of the Eastern press. After this he lost prestige. During 1869 and 1870 he devoted himself principally to the slaughter of the Crows, the Mandans, the Rees, the Shoshones, and all other tribes friendly to the whites, varying it by an occasional attack on the Missouri river forts.

In 1870 Gen. Hancock, then commanding that department, thought of organizing an expedition to bring Sitting Bull to terms; but as there was a prospect of the extension of the Northern Pacific, which would simplify operations, he recommended another attempt to buy a peace with him until that road should be pushed into the Big Horn country. On this recommendation, backed by the assurance of the Peace Commissioners and the Interior Department, Congress voted $500,000 to make peace and support him. This was the famous Teton-Sioux appropriation, Sitting Bull himself claiming to be a Teton, though his followers are outlaws and hard customers from all the bands of the Sioux nation. Considerable criticism has been made on the expenditure of this appropriation. It resulted in bringing to the Fort Peck Agency a portion of his following, but he refused to treat himself. Next year Gen. Custer went out with the Northern Pacific surveying party, and twice defeated Sitting Bull, or at least repulsed his attacks. One of his bands invaded the Gallatin valley in 1872, and carried off 500 head of horses, after murdering a number of farmers.

In 1873 he made a night attack on Col. Baker, but was repulsed and pursued. In 1874 he drove the Crows from their reservation and agency, and made war on the peaceful Indians. The Peace Commission, finding him intractable, now began to demand that the army take the offensive and subdue him, and this request has been frequently repeated by the Peace Commission and the Interior Department until the War Department has acted on it. Last year some of his followers went down to meet the Commission in conference with the Red Cloud Sioux, and came near precipitating a massacre of the Commission. Sitting Bull himself refused to go in, and spent the summer in attacks on the Crow Agency and on the Montana settlers. He captured a Government wagon-train on the Carroll road, murdered a number of recruits going to the Montana posts, and captured the stock of the Carroll Stage Company. Such have been his exploits up to the bloody history of the present year. He defies the Government, and hopes that he can get the Sioux Nation to join him. If they will only do this he promises to drive the whites back into the sea, out of which they came. He utterly disbelieves the reports of Red Cloud and others who have visited the East as to the numbers of the whites they saw. He says their eyes were dazzled by bad medicine (magic).

Brigham's Family.

Brigham Young is the father of sixty-three children, forty-five of whom are living. More than half of these are females, and, with but two or three exceptions, all are blondes, and none what may be called beautiful. The last child born unto Brigham is a little girl, about 6 years old, daughter of Amelia Van Cott, Brigham's fourteenth wife. She is a woman about forty, rather pretty, and the next favorite to Amelia Folsom, his eighteenth wife. Number eighteen is credited with having a high-grade temper, and it is said that she treats Brigham as if she were his mother-in-law instead of his wife.—Salt Lake Letter.

Icebergs.

The drift of northern icebergs is with the great polar currents which meet near the coast of Labrador. They are from thence floated with the current past Newfoundland, frequently striking the coast, and usually dissolving in the Gulf stream, which they meet near the Great Bank, they disappear at about latitude twelve degrees. The extreme limit reported in any authentic publication is latitude forty degrees north. The southern icebergs, not meeting a similar dissolvent, approach nearer to the equator, being frequently seen off the Cape of Good Hope, in latitude thirty-four degrees south. The weight, sometimes, is hundreds of millions of tons in their frozen mass. Only about one-eighth of their bulk is above the water. Capt. Ross found one aground in Baffin Bay, in water 1,500 feet deep.

Wanted to Sign the Declaration.

A well-dressed and respectable-looking man entered Independence Hall yesterday afternoon and made a determined effort to enroll his name, that of M. S. Sullivan, with the patriots and the founders of the country on the original Declaration of Independence. By force he was ejected from the room where this sacred document is kept, and he was no more allowed to enter. Then he went into Independence Square, and scaled up a lightning-rod, and reached the roof of the Sheriff's office. Infused with patriotic feeling, he succeeded in reaching the steeple in some way, and began to ring the new bell with vigor and violence. This led to his arrest, and he spent last night in a cell at the Central Station. Sullivan resides in New York, and he says he came over to see the Centennial.—Philadelphia Herald.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. The impor has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and whol sale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prune Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these inter edi item profits. No middlemen with us. We are having a great run on Prunes. The Finest

If Morton has any well defined purpose it is that no grandson of a president shall ever be governor of Indiana. He had one "done brown" once and he will do it again,

Senator Morton proposes to conduct the campaign on the Republican side as he fed his cow in the palmy days when he was military dictator of Indiana—at the expense or government. He has introduced a resolution in the House for the printing of ten thousand copies of Grant's bloody shirt messge as a campaign document. Should it pass, it is to be hoped, the House will find some way of sitting down upon it as effective as that adopted in the case of the Pinchback steal.

In order to preserve tomatoes through the year it is necessary to resort to the expense of canning them. If stewed in the ordinary manner, but without butter or crackers, only a little salt and sugar, they can be put into jars, two-quarts or gallons, according to the size of the family, and if corked up tightly they will keep for a year. To make assurance doubtly sure, some wax may be poured around the corks. Tomatoes may also be dried easily. Skinned and prepared with a little sugar, they make a good substitute for figs, and are sold under the name of tomato figs.

The administration and still more the "Independent" press—taking the Cincinnati Commercial as a standard of independence—teams with highly colored accounts of the "agreement" which has at last been reached on the financial question between Tilden and Hendricks and of the happy adjustment, after much effort of the "differences" which have existed between these candidates. This simply means that the lying statements which the aforesaid administration and independent press has circulated concerning lack of harmony between the Democratic candidates, have failed to receive credence and are about to be contradicted by the fact,; hence this disposition to hedge.

The Constitution of the United States forbids any State to make anything but gold and silver a legal tender for the payment of debts. The plain inferance is that any State can make either gold or silver a legal tender to any amount. Now the Republican party has demonetized silve. They changed the law which had existed for 75 prosperous years and which made silver dollars a legal tender in any amount and took from silver its legal tender feature. This should be returned, and in the general government does not do it the State government might see that it is done. There is not much danger of getting too much silver in circulation. The people will take it at any time and they always prefer it to rags. The COURIER believes that the general circulation and use of silver coins for currency is the surest and speediest road to an equalization of value and a final and complete return to a paper currency convertible into coin and worth 100 cents on a dollar.

The lies the Republican press circulates concerning Gov. Tilden's connection with Railroad companies, are simply enormous. Our local yarn spinners herald it over the country that Mr. Tilden owns or controls in some way or every mile of railroad in the west especially that of the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw, of which A. P. Edgerton was President. Mr. Edgerton is said to have written a letter a couple of years ago charging Mr. Tilden with dealing unfairly with Company. Upon what grounds, either true or false, Mr. Tilden is charged, we do not know. But that is generally known, the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw railroad under Mr. Edgerton's management was not in a condition to have any great frauds perpetrated on it. Its liabilities always exceeded its assets, and those very papers who are now denouncing Tilden in this connection denounced Edgerton a few weeks ago. No one of these things came to light or were talked of until Mr. Tilden's nomination by the Democrats for President.—National Union.

He'll never be Governor.

Indianapolis Herald. [Rep.]

The following paragraph, or its equivalent, appears in most of the special telegrams to the Journal, giving accounts of the Orth meetings held in different parts of the State:

"The Governor gave a clear and impartial history of the Republican party since its birth to the present time, and compared its record and achievements with the record and actions of the Democratic party."

Mr. Orth never was Governor and never will be. Therefore it is an idiotic impertinence to speak of him as "the Governor." But, waiving that, why does Mr. Orth go about condensing national history while the people are dying to learn something more about the history of the Venezuela swindle? Nobody wants to hear about that ancient putrescence, the Democratic party. We are all familiar with that. But we do want to know all about the Venezuela swindle. We want to know about Brown Who was Brown, anyhow? Mr. Orth made an exceedingly lame and puerile "explanation" of this matter once, which explained nothing, and promised a fuller and more satisfactory explanation. He has never made that explanation? Why does he not do so? Why does he go about, hot as a lime kiln, manundering and mouthing his stale charges against the Democracy, while whole nation is ringing with his own infamy? Mr. Orth mistakes the temper of the people if he thinks he can distract their attention from his own record by beating a gong.

The Marriage Question.

The country never possessed so many beautiful marriageable young women as it does at the present time. And why do we not have more marriages? We answer, because marriage for love is the exception, and not the rule. The young people of this age have gone fashion and money mad. If the dandy bank clerk who pays one half of his income for board and the other half for clothes cannot improve his condition he will not marry. The shop girl who earns good wages and cannot be distinguished by her dress from the banker's daughter certainly will not plunge into matrimony unless she betters her condition in life If a man is fortunate enough to possess money, it matters not how old or ugly he may be, hundreds of intelligent, handsome young women can be found only too willing to become his wife. Love is an after consideration. They marry to be supported and dress extravagantly How often do we hear the remark, "Better to be an old man's darling than a poor man's slave." Alas! too many of them are not satisfied to be darlings. They will persist in loving other men after they are married. It cannot be denied that a great number of the unmarried men are adventurers looking for wives who can keep them without working for a living. The peace and contentment of a happy home are not taken in consideration. They are willing to suffer hell upon earth if they can be kept in idleness. If the young people do not abandon this extravagance in dress and greed for money our country will be filled with old bachelors and old maids. We must have more genuine courtships and marriages to have prosperity and happiness in this world. Too many marry for money only to be disappointed and unhappy the rest of their lives—Albany (N. Y.) Argus.

Schuyler Colfax in his South Bend speech talked about the "Southern Democratic rebellion." Has Schuyler forgotten his connection with the Credit Mobilier bribery and the New York envelope swindle? Schuyler should hold himself aloof of "Southern Democratic rebellion" talk.

Hayes as a Reformer.

Recognizing the fact that the present is to be distinctively a reform canvass, the shrewder managers in the Republican party are making a various attempt to place Hayes before the country in the light of a reformer. These gentlemen point to nothing in the past career of Governor Hayes to support his claim to the title they now give him. They recount no victories over corrupt rings, no removal of vile abuses, no millions saved the people by reduction of taxes, no deeds of any kind in his past political life done in the interest of reform. They can not even to point to words—those hollow and unsubstantial shadows of deeds—boldly and manfully uttered in the cause of reform, until that word had become the rallying cry of the Democracy, when the candidates' parrot-like letters of acceptance weakly echoed what had been better said in their opponents' platform. So the claim made for Hayes is reducible to the simple assertion that he is a person who, if elected to the presidency, would be likely to become a reformer. What is there in the past life or present personal character of the man to justify this assumption? He is a man of fair average ability, possibly unexceptionable personal habits, being removed by his large private fortune from the necessity of stealing from the public, and of good intentions so far as anybody knows, or has hitherto cared to know what his intentions are. He is all this, but these qualities, however, they fit a man to adore private domestic circles, are not all that is needed to make a great reformeor in a crices of national importance. Nothing in Governor Hayes' past career—and he has been before the public enough to show what is in him—indicates that he possesses any of the elements of strury, aggressive independence, originately or positiveness of convictions that go to make up a reformer. Personally pure from want of temptation to be otherwise, he has been in public life as wax to the party that has used and rewarded him. No flagrant abuse within the party has ever aroused his criticism or condemnation. As a member of Congress he consented to and profited by a back pay steal and put the money in his pocket; and as governor he encouraged the repel of a reform act of the [illegible] Allen's administration for the breaking up and despoiling of corrupt local rings. What is thought of him as a reformer by his own party in his own state is shown by the fact that he was employed a year ago to beat Taft, who was too honest to suit the party managers of Ohio. On this occasion he not only weakly allowed himself to be used as a tool to defeat the purest and ablest Republican in the state, but in order to do so violated a solemn pledge previously made not to allow his name to be used against Judge Taft's in the convention. His yielding in this case, when he even sacrificed his personal honor at the behest of party and in opposition to reform, shows what could be expected from him in the presidency. For himself and within his own household, a respetable degree of honesty might be expected, and we should probably be spared the spectacle of another Babcock; but beyond these narrow limits, the public service would be as complete the public service would be as corrupt, fraud would be as open and unchecked, and the country would be plundered as mercilessly and unblushingly as at any time since the regime of Grantism was inaugurated.

Orth in the House of his Friends.

The honest portion of the Republican party is becoming more and more disgusted with their candidate for Governor every day. They realize that he has a record utterly indefensible, and prefering the honor of the State to the temporary success of their party, they have decided to oppose him. The following extract from the Indianapolis Herald (Republican,) is a very fair expression of the sentiment of that part of the Republican party:

Some of Mr. Orth's friends have abstracted from the archives of the investigating committee at Washington, important evidence bearing on his connection with the Venezuela swindle. The Comodore need not resort to such desperate measures. His goose is cooked already, and his remaining on the ticket or withdrawal therefrom cannot make a particle of difference to him personally. If he remains on the ticket he will be disastrously and shamefully beaten. If he withdraws he is ruined all the same. It does make a difference, however, and a very great difference to the Republican party. It would be rather rough on Hayes to have Orth beaten in October. But it will be a lesson to the domineering politicians who insisted on having Orth nominated in defiance of the strong feeling they knew to exist against him, and now keep him on the ticket since his shameful Venezuela record has been made public. They are trying to pull him through by pleading Hayes and the good of the ticket. It is an ugly dilemma, we confess; but in such straits there is but one safe way; and that is the honest way. Let Mr. Orth be forced off the ticket, and circumstances will take care of themselves.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 10, 1876.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE WEST.

THE Toledo Blade publishes crop reports from 172 places in Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Illinois. These show that the wheat crop in nearly all the wheat-producing districts is nearly up to the average in quantity, while the quality is superior to that of any former year. The corn crop promises very well everywhere. The acreage is much larger than ever before. A large quantity of flax-seed was sown in some parts of Indiana and Illinois, and has done well. There was a smaller acreage of potatoes planted than last year, but the crop will be enormous. Hay, except in some parts of Michigan, where the rain interfered with its cutting and curing, has produced far beyond the crops of any previous year. The quality is very good, and it has been well taken care of. The apple crop is very large everywhere. Only a partial crop of peaches will ripen. Grapes are wonderfully abundant in the lake region, and promise to ripen well.

CAPT. J. S. POLAND, of the Sixth Infantry has forwarded to Gen. Ruggles, from Standing Rock Agency, a very interesting account of Custer's last fight, as told by some Sioux Indians who were in the battle. Their account is as follows: The hostiles were celebrating their greatest of religious festivals, the sun dance, when runners brought news of the approach of cavalry. The dance was suspended, and a general rush followed, mistaken by Custer perhaps for retreat, for the horses, equipments, and arms. Maj. Reno first attacked the village at the south end and across the Little Big Horn. Their narrative of Reno's operations coincides with the published account. How he was quickly confronted and surrounded; how he dismounted, rallied in the timber, remounted, and cut his way back over the ford and up the bluffs with considerable loss, and the continuation of the fight for some little time, when runners arrived from the north end of the village or camp with the news that the cavalry had attacked the north end, some three or four miles distant. The Indians about Reno had not before this the slightest intimation of fighting at any other point. A force large enough to prevent Reno from assuming the offensive was left, and the surplus available force followed to the other end of the camp, where, finding the Indians successfully driving Custer before them, instead of uniting with them, they separated into two parties and moved around the flanks of his cavalry. They report that Custer crossed the river but only succeeded in reaching the edge of the Indian camp. After he was driven to the bluffs, the fight lasted perhaps an hour. A small number of cavalry broke through the line of Indians in their rear, and escaped, but were overtaken within a distance of five or six miles, and all killed. After the battle the squaws entered the field to plunder and mutilate the dead. General rejoicing was indulged in, and a distribution of arms and ammunition hurriedly made. Then this attack on Reno was vigorously renewed. Up to the attack the Indians had lost comparatively few men, but now they say their most serious loss took place. They give no idea of numbers, but say there were a great many. Sitting Bull was neither killed nor personally engaged in the fight. He remained in the council tent directing operations. The Indians were not all engaged at any one time. Heavy reserves were held to repair losses and renew attacks successively.

ANOTHER highly favorable report comes from the Black Hills. An Omaha dispatch states that half a dozen citizens of that town have just returned from those gold fields with dust to the value of $800,000.

COTTRELL & BABCOCK, the well-known New York printing-press manufacturers, have failed. Liabilities over $2,500,000.... Wilkesbarre, Pa., has been thrown into a fever of excitement by the discovery that a prominent business man has forged notes to the amount of nearly a quarter of a million dollars, about half of which is held by Wilkesbarre banks, the remainder being placed throughout the country. The forger is Thomas D. Conyngham, of a prominent, highly-respected family, and the junior member of the firm of Brodrick & Co., coal operators and iron-workers in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Virginia.

THE SOUTH.

HON. J. M. LOUGHBOROUGH, a prominent lawyer and politician of Little Rock, Ark., committed suicide the other day by shooting himself through the heart with a shot-gun.... An old family feud in Franklin county, Ky., resulted in the death of Riley Herrod and the fatal wounding of his brother Levi, one night last week. The particulars are as follows: Three brothers by the name of Herrod, returning home from a barbecue at Frankfort, were overtaken by James Andrew and Aleck Scott, Geo. Herrod, Wm. Penn, and Sam Ayers. The latter party rode ahead, procured arms, waited, and then engaged with the smaller party in firing at each other with pistols and shot-guns. All the parties have been arrested.

ADVICES from Hamburg, S. C., inform us that the inquest upon the bodies of the victims of the recent riots has resulted in a verdict charging the crime of murder upon Gen. M. C. Butler, Col. A. P. Butler, Pierce Butler, and the Rev. J. Mealing, and fifty-three other citizens of Aiken and Edgefield counties, and also upon thirty citizens of Georgia. Warrants for the arrest of all the parties implicated by the verdict were at once placed in the hands of the Sheriff of Aiken county, S. C., with instructions to serve them immediately.

WASHINGTON.

THE Civil Service Committee, to whom were referred the charges against Representative Purman, report that no bribes were received by Purman for appointments, and that the evidence wholly fails to establish the sale of Federal offices.

BLUFORD WILSON, late Solicitor of the Treasury Department, has been undergoing an examination before the House committee on the whisky trials. As his evidence has produced something of a sensation at the national capital, and is attracting a good deal of attention in political circles throughout the country, we give in a condensed form the salient points of the ex-Solicitor's story:

Regarding the Barnard letter (with the indorsement: "Let no guilty man escape, if it can be avoided"), Wilson stated that, in the body of the letter, or in the accompanying paper, it was made to appear that Emery Foster, of St. Louis, had stated that President Grant himself was charged with being a party to the whisky ring in St. Louis. Wilson had no doubt that the President made this famous indorsement as much on account of this charge against himself as for the fact that Babcock and Casey had been accused of complicity with the whisky ring. The President willingly consented to the publication of the Barnard letter. Wilson proved this by a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to himself, dated August 7.

The first important letter from Bristow to Wilson is dated New York, Aug. 9, 1875. The important portion of this letter is in outline this:

> The time is near at hand when I must make a square issue with the thieves and scoundrels who have combined to destroy me. You cannot be too careful about talking with anybody. The matter about the "Sylph" dispatch, and the fact of the talk with Pierrepont, is known to P. and B. (Porter and Babcock), and has greatly disturbed them. I suppose I must make up my mind to bear the abuse of the ring papers, hard as it is. They are fighting to keep their friends out of prison, and will not hesitate to destroy anybody who stands in the way. As for myself, I cannot turn back or stop to parley with the thieves. I have no other ambition to serve, no other purpose to accomplish, than to enforce the laws and secure the honest collection of the revenue. I will compromise with nothing short of this, and upon this issue I am willing to be sacrificed any day.
> P. S.—Ask Webster to write the President about the Chicago Custom House and the whisky ring. He has great confidence in Webster, and it will require the utmost of watchfulness of his real friends to prevent him from being misled. Tell Webster to write strong and tell the truth.

The creation of the military Court in Chicago was considered by Bristow and Wilson as an indication that the President had decided that the prosecution should fail.

Wilson heard nothing of the charge that he had placed spies on the President's tracks until Babcock was indicted. Then the President expressed himself openly against Henderson and Dyer. Henderson was dismissed in spite of Wilson's written protest to the Secretary of the Treasury. Judge Treat and Eaton had both declared that Henderson and Dyer meant no offense to the President by their speeches. Henderson, on the contrary, had gone out of the way to defend the President. Wilson considered the dismissal of Henderson a fatal blow to the further successful prosecution of Babcock's case.

Wilson regarded the President's persistent refusal to remove District Attorney Ward, of Chicago, as another evidence that he took little interest in the prosecution. The President was informed on Dec. 3, 1875, by Burton C. Cook, of Chicago, that Ward was a partner in Powell's distillery, and had improper relations with Jacob Rehm. The President told Cook that he would remove Ward immediately, and asked Webster to name his successor at once.

Wilson read from a note he had written Bristow, in which he stated that it was the general belief that Logan's illness was attributable to sheer fright.

Wilson produced a letter from Gen. J. D. Webster, of Chicago, to himself, dated Dec. 26, 1875, in which Webster said:

> Do you not begin to rub your eyes and inquire whether you are awake? Whether we are awake, and whether we are all not involved in some bad ring? Was there ever such scandalous lying and plotting? Is it not the most remarkable fight of the century? Is there any key to it, except that the banded corruptionists of all classes are summoning all their forces, and placing their reliance on unparalleled audacity of vituperation and cunningly-devised accusations? Is it possible that Babcock has willingly countenanced an attack upon Bristow while he confesses his own infamy? What other explanation is there for the Inter-Ocean's attack? I expect the ring have control of the Inter-Ocean. They want an English organ in the Inter-Ocean as they already have a German organ in the Staats-Zeitung.

Wilson, under date of Dec. 15, 1875, writes to the President from St. Louis, denying that he engaged persons to convict Farwell.

Wilson warned the President and the Attorney General from using C. S. Bell. The President had practically engaged him to work independently of the prosecuting officers in St. Louis. Wilson defeated this.

On Christmas day, 1875, the President charged Wilson with attempting to indict Orville Grant and Fred Grant. In the course of the conversation, the President informed Wilson of his belief in Babcock's entire innocence, and denounced Henderson and Dyer for refusing to send original documents to the military court.

June 26, 1876, Wilson was invited to a conference at the White House. The President protested against receiving the testimony of accomplices. He said there was altogether too much of that thing. The President referred to the case of Roddis, a Milwaukee ganger, who had been nolle prossed. The President asked Wilson all about Everest—his return from Europe; where he was; whether he was to be granted immunity; what it was expected to prove by him; and what he knew about sending a letter to Babcock by Joyce containing $500. Wilson said Everest had not been promised immunity. The President said: "Major, when I said 'Let no guilty man escape,' I meant it, but not that nine should escape and one be convicted." Wilson replied: "Mr. President we are not counting heads; we are trying to break up unlawful combinations against the revenue, and to discover those who organized them, and I know no other way to do this except by getting inside of the ring." Secretary Chandler was present in the room during this interview. Wilson offered to satisfy the President further. The President replied that is was not worth while—there was too much of it. Supervisor Tutton had been there that day, fresh from Chicago, influencing the President. Wilson sent Bristow to the President with documents to counteract Tutton's representations. Bristow did so. Wilson then produced his instructions as to the use of informers comprehended in the dispatch to Tutton in Chicago, Jan. 14, 1875, published some time afterwards. The President then expressed himself satisfied with the conduct of Wilson and Bristow. Babcock subsequently came to Wilson, showing that he had complete knowledge of the entire conversation between Wilson and the President about Everest.

Wilson complained to Bristow that all information given the President about Babcock's case was immediately conveyed to Babcock, and asked what right Babcock had more than any other accused person to a knowledge of the case against him.

Jan. 10, in an interview with Attorney General Pierrepont, the latter acknowledged to Wilson that the circular-letter of instructions to United States District Attorneys relative to the testimony of accomplices was written at the direction of the President. This was to have been kept secret, and was not to have been interpreted as it read, but Storrs, Babcock's counsel, obtained it and gave it to the Chicago Times. Upon the publication of this letter Wilson told Bristow that the profound crisis in the contest with the thieves had come—that it was evident that the President meant to bring about a conflict and a change of policy. Wilson told Secretary Bristow that he must take immediate steps to have an understanding with the President and Attorney General. Bristow did so. Wilson declined to state what these steps were.

Dyer told Wilson that Pierrepont informed him that the circular-letter was written by order of the President himself. The result of using this circular-letter was that Bristow, Feb. 12, decided to leave the Cabinet. The personal relations between himself and the President were almost broken off. Bristow and Wilson both learned from many sources that the President had determined, at the close of the Babcock trial, to dismiss them both. One of the sources was Gen. J. D. Webster, of Chicago, whose letter upon that subject Wilson read. The letter was dated Chicago, Feb. 16.

Webster learned of Gen. Hurlbut, then in the West, that Bristow was to be removed at the termination of the Babcock trial. The letter contains expressions of the strongest friendship for Wilson and Bristow. Similar information came to Wilson through J. B. Henderson and others. Bristow and Wilson then both prepared their resignations. This was Feb. 24, the day Babcock was acquitted. On Feb. 27, three days later, evidence was placed in the President's hands showing that Gen. Babcock and Horace Porter lost $40,000 in the Black Friday Gould conspiracy, through Jay Cooke & Co.; that Asa Birn Gardiner, President of the Chicago military court, was trustee to adjust their losses; that the presentation of these facts to the President was the real cause of Babcock's removal, and that the President, having determined to remove Babcock for this cause, became reconciled to Bristow and Wilson.

Question by Mr. Plaisted—State more fully what the relations of this were to the retention of Mr. Bristow in the Cabinet?

Mr. Wilson—Because the President, for the first time, comprehended in all its significance the fact that he had been betrayed by Babcock, and that, if he had betrayed him in the Black Friday conspiracy, he was also capable of betraying him in the whisky frauds, and he became convinced that the prosecution against Babcock had had its justification.

Wilson does not appear to have become fully reconciled with the President, for later the President charges that his office is the rendezvous of hostile newspaper men. Wilson demands the names of his accusers from the President. They are refused.

Wilson produced the following telegram, discovered during the Babcock trial:

> ST. LOUIS, Feb. 9.
> To Delome, No. 166 Forsyth street, New York:
> Can you produce evidence against Wilson for big money?
> J. T. PORTER.

Porter was the dismissed secret-service agent working for the defense.

Wilson's resignation immediately followed Bristow's. The President was coldly polite in taking leave of him, and said that he now hoped for peace and quiet. Wilson said that those who had accused him to the President were Farwell, Logan, Spencer, Hurlbut and Sargent of California, besides some discharged employes. Wilson thought the President could not sympathise with the prosecuting officers because he honestly believed Babcock innocent.

THE President has nominated Henry R. French, of Massachusetts, for Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, vice Budnam, resigned.

POLITICAL.

THE Republicans of Arkansas have placed in nomination the following ticket for State offices: Governor, A. W. Bishop; Secretary of State, W. L. Copeland, colored; Treasurer, A. C. Rogers; Auditor, J. R. Berry; Attorney General, H. A. Pierce; Land Commissioner, R. W. McDonald; School Superintendent, K. C. Corbin, colored; Chancellor, Lafayette Gregg; Chancery Clerk, J. T. White, colored.

THE President has nominated Oscar Holt for Collector of Internal Revenue in the Second District of Louisiana; Thomas G. Putnam for United States Attorney for Colorado, and Charles C. Tompkins for United States Marshal for Colorado.

A. H. COLQUITT has been nominated for Governor by the Democrats of Georgia.... Hon. Godlove S. Orth has addressed a letter to the Chairman of the Indiana Republican State Committee announcing his declination as the Republican candidate for Governor. His reason for this step is stated to be the belief that that he would be unable to command the united support of the Republicans of Indiana, and that his withdrawal will prove for the best interests of the party.... At a meeting in New York last week the National Executive Council, appointed by the Indianapolis Convention (Independent or Greenback party), in discharge of the duty imposed by the convention to consult with Peter Cooper and leading greenback men of the Union, nominated Samuel F. Carey, of Ohio, for the Vice Presidency. Carey accepts the nomination.... The Democrats of the Fifth Indiana District have renominated Mr. Holman for Congress.

CHARLES M. CROSWELL, whom the Republicans of Michigan have nominated for Governor, has been Speaker of the Michigan Legislature, President of the State Senate, and was President of the State Constitutional Convention of 1867.

GENERAL.

ALL the cavalry now on duty in Southern Kansas, Texas, and the Indian Territory has been ordered to join Gen. Terry or Gen. Crook, and will leave for their destination at once.

PRESIDENT GRANT, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, has issued a proclamation declaring and proclaiming the fact that the fundamental conditions imposed by Congress on the State of Colorado to entitle that State to admission to the Union have been ratified and accepted, and that the admission of said State into the Union is now complete.... The following is a copy of the message of the President to the Senate on the Hamburg affair:

> To the Senate of the United States: In response to a resolution of the Senate, July 20, calling upon the President to communicate to the Senate, if in his opinion not incompatible with public interest, any information in regard to the slaughter of American citizens at Hamburg, S. C., I have the honor to submit the following inclosures: [Here follow a number of papers relative to the Hamburg massacre.]
> The President says: These inclosures embrace all the information in my possession touching the late disgraceful and brutal slaughter of unoffending men at the town of Hamburg, S. C. My letter to Gov. Chamberlain contains all the comments I wish to make on the subject. As allusion is made in the letter to the condition of other States, and particularly to Louisiana and Mississippi, I have added to the inclosures letters and testimony in regard to the lawless condition of a portion of the people of the latter State. In regard to Louisiana affairs, murders and massacres of innocent men for opinion's sake, or on account of color, have been of too recent date and too frequent occurrence to require recapitulation or testimony here. All are familiar with their horrible details, the only wonder being that so many justify them or apologize for them. But recently a committee of the Senate of the United States visited the State of Mississippi to take testimony on the subject of frauds and violence in elections. Their report has not been made public, but I await its forthcoming with a feeling of confidence that it will fully sustain all that I have stated in relation to fraud and violence in the State of Mississippi.

THE passage of the bill in Congress providing for the coinage of $20,000,000 of subsidiary silver coin for American circulation has arrested the fall in the value of silver in Europe, and caused it to advance from 49 pence per ounce to 50½ pence per ounce.

FOREIGN.

A BERLIN special states that Austria seems determined to annex Bosnia. Count Andrassy admits the necessity of the policy..... The cable continues to furnish accounts of terrible massacres by the Turks in Bosnia. "Three hundred Christians were tortured and drowned in the villages of Pervan and Fomar. Twelve women were cut to pieces at Pavics. Sixty children were stoned to death at Rathlovo. One hundred and eighty girls were violated and murdered at Sokolovo. Three thousand Christians were massacred at Pryedor."

ACCOUNTS of the recent battle between Turks and Montenegrins at Trebigne state that the former lost Selim Pasha killed, and Osman Pasha taken prisoner; two Colonels, three Lieutenant Colonels, seven Majors, and from 5,000 to 6,000 men. Two battalions of infantry and one of chasseurs were destroyed, to the last man. All the battalions, which were engaged suffered. The number of Turkish inferior officers killed is enormous. The pursuit was continued to the walls of Bilek. Corpses were thick in the road before the citadel.... In the British House of Commons, the other day, John O'Connor Power, Member for County Mayo moved that, in the opinion of the House, the time had come for pardoning the Fenians. The motion, after debate, was rejected—117 to 51.

A CIRCUS visited Halifax, N. S., the other day, and while passing through the streets the clerks of the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Provincial Treasurer's office locked the doors and went off to see the procession. On returning, they discovered that thieves had entered in their absence and robbed the bank of $17,500, and the Treasurer's office of $1,000 and valuable papers.... A Constantinople correspondent of the Paris Gaulois says: "Mecca has placed 200,000 Arabian troops at the disposition of the Turkish Government, and some of these forces are already awaiting orders to start. The Bashi-Bazouks are not to be compared in ferocity with Syelbeks. The latter at Smyrna slew all the people in the streets. The town is in an indescribable state of terror.".... A London dispatch announces that the American horse Preakness won the Brighton cup by a walk-over.

A CABLE dispatch says 9,000 men and twelve Krupp cannon have left Egypt for the Porte, and 11,000 more men and twenty-four Krupp guns will soon be dispatched, to complete the contingent which the Khedive is going to furnish the Sultan.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, July 28.—Senate.—Ingalls, from the Committee on Pensions, reported, with amendments, the House bill granting a pension to the widow of the late Gen. Custer, and to his father and mother. Placed on the calendar. The amendments reduce the pension to the widow from $50 to $30 per month, and strike out the name of the father, so as to grant pensions to the widow and mother only.... Frelinghuysen, from the conference committee on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, reported that the committee had been unable to agree. After a long debate a new conference was agreed to.... The River and Harbor Appropriation bill was then taken up and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report the bill so that the total amount appropriated shall not exceed $5,000,000.... The amendments of the House to the bill providing for the completion of the Washington monument were agreed to and the bill passed.... Thurman gave notice that at the earliest opportunity he would ask the Senate to take up and consider the motion submitted by him some time ago to reconsider the vote by which the bill in reference to counting the vote for President and Vice President was passed.... The Senate then resumed consideration of the bill in regard to the sale of Osage Indian lands, pending the discussion of which the Senate adjourned.

House.—The House took up the Virginia contested-election case of Goode (Dem.) vs. Platt (Rep.) and decided, by a vote of 105 to 87, to retain Goode in his seat.... Randall, from the conference committee on the Military Academy bill, submitted the report of the committee on said bill, which was adopted.... The House then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs. After a speech by Mr. Lewis in support of the majority report, the matter went over without action, and the House adjourned.

SATURDAY, July 29.—Senate.—The Senate was not in session.

House.—Hill called up the bill which was passed by both houses, extending the time for the redemption of lands sold for direct taxes, to have it amended so as to exclude the possibility of its being construed to affect the National Cemetery. The bill was so amended and passed.... The evening session lasted till 10 o'clock, and was for general debate. A large number of speeches were made, including one by Morrison, Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, on his Tariff bill, which he said would not be pressed at the present session.

MONDAY, July 31.—Senate.—The River and Harbor bill was reported back to the Senate. It appropriates, in the aggregate, $5,000,000.... The resolution prohibiting the supply of special metallic cartridges to hostile Indians was passed.... A bill was passed authorizing an increase of the cavalry forces of the army, and appropriating $1,634,700 for that purpose. .... The House bill to continue until the 10th of August the act to provide temporarily for the expenses of the Government was passed. The Senate then went into secret session for the purpose of considering the articles of impeachment.

House.—Consideration was resumed of the reports of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and Whitthorne advocated the majority report. The minority resolution was rejected—yeas, 59; nays, 115. ....Under the call of States, a number of bills were introduced and referred.... The Speaker laid before the House a message from the President, pointing out some of the defects in the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, in making adequate provision for some branches of the civil service and none at all for other branches. He did not feel warranted in vetoing an absolutely necessary appropriation bill, but in signing it he deemed it his duty to show where the responsibility belonged for whatever embarrassment might arise in the public service. Randall said that he "had no objection to the President putting in as many objections as he saw fit if he would only sign the bills reducing the expenses of the Government, and assist the House in its great effort in that direction. The President in some of his statements shows a lack of information. He finds fault without any reason whatever. For one I accept the issue presented by the President, and I am willing that the people shall have the opportunity of judging between his dictum and the action of both branches of Congress after close examination." Hale defended the action of the President. The communication was referred to the Appropriation Committee.

TUESDAY, Aug. 1.—Senate.—The Chair laid before the Senate a message from the President in answer to the resolution of July 20, transmitting copies of the correspondence between himself and Gov. Chamberlain, and other reports in regard to the recent trouble at Hamburg, S. C. The President, in concluding his message, alludes to the disturbance in the South, and says that he awaits the forthcoming report of the Committee which recently investigated the Mississippi affair, feeling confident that it will sustain all that he has said about fraud and violence in that State. Ordered printed, and laid on the table.... Also, a letter from the Secretary of War, in answer to the resolution of July 24, transmitting a report in regard to the number of employes in that department, from 1859 to 1875, inclusive. Ordered printed, and laid on the table.... The Chair announced a new conference committee on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bills—Messrs. Sargent, Boutwell, and Norwood.... A joint resolution, providing for the restoration of the writing of the original Declaration of Independence, was passed.... The Belknap trial was resumed, and at noon the Senate began to vote upon the articles of impeachment. Upon the first article of impeachment 35 Senators voted guilty, 25 not guilty for want of jurisdiction. Those who voted guilty were: Bayard, Booth, Cameron (Pa.), Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Edmunds, Gordon, Hamilton, Harvey, Hitchcock, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, McDonald, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Oglesby, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, Withers. Those voting in the negative were: Anthony, Allison, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron (Wis.), Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Jones (Nev.), Logan, McMillan, Paddock, Patterson, Spencer, West, Windom, Wright. Jones, of Florida, declined to vote, on the ground that the Senate had no jurisdiction. Those absent or not voting were: Alcorn, Bogy, Burnside, Clayton, English, Johnston, Jones (Fla.), Maxey, Morton, Sharon. The presiding officer announced that two-thirds had not voted guilty, and therefore the respondent was acquitted of the charge in the first article. On the second article, thirty-six Senators voted "guilty," and twenty-five "not guilty." Many who did not answer on the first roll-call voted "guilty" on the second article. Those Senators who voted "not guilty" repeated their reason for doing so, "want of jurisdiction." Upon the third and fourth articles the vote stood as above, 36 voting guilty and 25 not guilty. Before roll-call on the fifth article was finished, Morton, who had been detained on account of a severe fall this morning, came in and voted guilty, making the vote on that article 37 guilty and 25 not guilty. Two-thirds of the Senate not having voted in favor of sustaining the articles of impeachment, it was ordered that a judgment of acquittal be entered, and the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment adjourned sine die.

House.—Glover, the Chairman of the committee on the real-estate pool, submitted a majority report, with the following resolution, which be asked to have adopted: "Resolved, That this report and the accompanying testimony, together with the letters of George M. Robeson, addressed to the committee, be printed and referred to the Judiciary Committee, and that the said committee be instructed to inquire into said alleged violations of the law, and ascertain the liability of George M. Robeson for such alleged acts, and make such a report to the House as the facts and the law may justify, and in compliance with these instructions the said committee shall have authority to take additional testimony." Pratt submitted the views of the minority, signed by Messrs. Pratt and Smith, of Pennsylvania, with the following resolution: "Resolved, That the House finds no cause of complaint or censure attaching to George M. Robeson, growing out of his official relations and transactions with the firm of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., of London, and the temporary special agents of the Navy Department." The majority resolution was agreed to, and the matter referred to the Judiciary Committee.... Randall, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill appropriating $237,586 for payment of indebtedness incurred in the construction of the New York Post-office building. This was followed by a sharp political discussion between Randall and Conger, at the conclusion of which the bill was passed.

WEDNESDAY, Aug. 2.—Senate.—Cameron (Wis.), from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported back the claim of William K. Sebastian, a United States Senator from Arkansas, who was expelled in 1861 for alleged disloyalty, with a resolution rescinding the resolution expelling him from the Senate, and authorizing the payment of his salary from the date of his expulsion to the time of his death to his heirs.... The Senate devoted most of the day to the consideration of the River and Harbor Appropriation bill.... Boutwell reported a bill from the select committee on civil service, providing that on and after the date, which is left blank, the existing pension agencies shall be discontinued, and all duties imposed by law or regulations on the several pension agents shall thereafter be performed by the Treasurer of the United States at Washington.... The substitute for the House bill granting a pension to E. M. Hansell, a messenger in the State Department, who was injured defending the late Secretary Seward from the assassin Payne, was passed. The substitute awards $2,000.

House.—Action on the Silver bill was again postponed by the filibustering tactics of the opponents of the measure. Mutchler made a unanimous report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department in the Insane Asylum investigation, and majority and minority reports of the same committee in regard to the survey of public lands were also made. All ordered printed and recommitted.... The bill to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department was taken up, and Cook, who had charge of the bill, yielded the floor to Lamar, who proceeded to make an elaborate speech on the condition and needs of the South. He spoke about two hours (his time being extended on motion of Mr. Garfield), and commanded throughout his whole speech the close and interested attention of the House.

THURSDAY, Aug. 3.—Senate.—Logan introduced a bill for the issue of silver coin, and to make the silver dollar a legal-tender.... The bill to limit and fix the Signal Service was amended and passed.... The River and Harbor Appropriation bill was taken up and passed. It appropriates, in the aggregate, $5,000,000.... The Senate ordered the printing of 10,000 extra copies of the President's message.

House.—The House was the scene of an exciting personal debate, growing out of a bitter attack upon Blaine by Proctor Knott. The Judiciary Committee had presented a unanimous report upon Blaine's resolution directing an investigation of his charge that Knott had suppressed the Caldwell dispatch. The committee were united in exonerating him, and so reported. To the surprise of everybody, Knott took the floor and reviewed the Blaine matter, indulging in remarks which the friends of the latter deemed highly unjust and grossly objectionable. Frye, Hale and McCrary, of the committee, in turn reviewed his remarks with a severity seldom reached in debate. The majority of the Democratic side appeared to regard the arraignment as entirely just, and, to give expression to this belief, Hurd stated that, after the most remarkable speech of Knott, with the concurrence of seven other members of the committee, he asked to withdraw the report. The Republican members of the committee thereupon withdrew their names from the report, and it was recommitted.... Mr. Singleton, from the conference committee on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, reported that the committee failed to agree. The report was adopted and a new conference committee appointed. ...A resolution was adopted providing for an adjournment on Monday, Aug. 7.

THE RESUMPTION ACT.

A Copy of Its Provisions.

For the benefit of those who have either never read it or forgotten its provisions, we herewith print the Sherman Resumption act of January, 1875:

CHAPTER 15. An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required as rapidly as practicable to cause to be coined at the mints of the United States silver coins of the denominations of 10, 25, and 50 cents, of standard value, and to issue them in redemption of an equal number and amount of fractional currency of similar denominations, or, at his discretion, he may issue such silver coins through the mints, the sub-treasuries, public depositories, and postoffices of the United States, and upon such issue he is hereby authorized and required to redeem an equal amount of such fractional currency until the whole amount of such fractional currency outstanding shall be redeemed.

SECTION 2. That so much of Section 3,524 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as provides for a charge of one-fifth of 1 per centum for converting standard gold bullion into coin is hereby repealed, and hereafter no charge shall be made for that service.

SEC. 3. That Section 5,177 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, limiting the aggregate amount of circulating notes of national banking associations be and is hereby repealed, and each existing banking association may increase its circulating notes in accordance with existing law without respect to said aggregate limit; and new banking associations may be organized in accordance with existing law without respect to said aggregate limit; and the provisions of law for the withdrawal and redistribution of national-bank currency among the several States and Territories are hereby repealed, and whenever and so often as circulating notes shall be issued to any such banking association, so increasing its capital or circulating notes, or so newly organized as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem the legal-tender United States notes in excess of $300,000,000 to the amount of 80 per centum of the sum of national bank notes issued to any such banking association as aforesaid, and to continue such redemption as such circulating notes are issued until there shall be outstanding the sum of $300,000,000 of such legal-tender United States notes, and no more. And on and after the 1st day of January, Anno Domini 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem in coin the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding, on their presentation for redemption at the office of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in the city of New York in sums of not less than $50. And to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required, he is authorized to use any surplus revenues from time to time in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par in coin, either of the descriptions of bonds of the United States described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled, "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt" with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions, to the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect, and to use the proceeds thereof for the purposes aforesaid. And all provisions of law inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The Devastation of Property.

The year 1857 witnessed failures in this country to the amount of $291,750,000, which is larger than the failures of any one year in the present depression. But counting the failures of 1857 and of the three following years we have a total of $630,000,000, while, if we add the failures of 1873-4-5-6, the sum total is $885,000,000, or $225,000,000 more than in the period of 1857. Again, the crisis of 1857 was spread over the whole country, North and South alike. In 1873, the South had not recovered from the destructive agencies of the war, and it probably has not suffered from the crisis itself as severely, in proportion, as in 1857. But the whole country has suffered a vastly lower deep of financial misfortune, from its long continuation. If we reckon the past five years, the insolvencies of the country amount to more than one thousand millions, or the equivalent of one-fourth of the assessed valuation of all the personal property in the country in 1870, and one-tenth of all the real estate. If we reckon the total loss by bankruptcy to be $600,000,000, and the depreciation of other property to be 20 per cent., one-fourth of the valuation of the property of the country in 1870 has been wiped out. Some of this destruction of property—as in the case of all forms of credit—is absolute. The notes gone to protest, and settled at 25 cents on the dollar, the railroad bonds subscribed for at par, and now in all degrees of depreciation, the second and third mortgages, which have been foreclosed out of existence, have all been absolutely destroyed, so far as they have become worthless. The loss on mills, houses, lands, is merely a destruction by their depreciation, a destruction of values, not of things.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

CUMBERLAND FALLS, the Niagara of Kentucky, have a perpendicular descent of sixty-seven feet, and the roar of the water can be heard at a distance of twelve miles.

A SAD PICNIC.

Five Young Ladies Drowned While Boating.

[From the St. Joseph (Mo.) Herald.]

The city was thrown into a state of intense excitement Sunday afternoon by the prevalence of a rumor upon the streets that an appalling catastrophe had occurred at Lake Contrary, five miles south of here. Five young girls had been drowned, it was said. Shortly after, the arrival of messengers from the scene of the disaster confirmed the terrible rumor. Yesterday there was a private picnic at Fredericksburg, situated on the lake, composed mostly of German families. They left the city at an early hour in the morning, arriving at the picnic grounds in good season, and abandoned themselves to the pleasures common to such occasions. About 12 o'clock Mr. Otto Gross took five young ladies into a skiff for a row. They were Clara Kratt, Sophia S. Seitz, Rosa Muinch, Matilda Zimmer, and Matilda Gross. The party rowed up and down the lake for two hours, never at any time putting more than seventy-five yards from shore. The party were returning from a boat ride, and were perhaps fifty yards from shore, when the girls commenced reaching and pulling at pond lilies, that grow abundantly in that part of the lake. While thus engaged the boat capsized, and its human load was precipitated into the water. The water was twelve feet deep, and in a moment's time the six persons were out of sight. Gross was an excellent swimmer, and upon rising to the surface exerted every effort to save his companions. His first thought was his little daughter, and it was but the work of a moment to clutch her and put her hands on the side of the still-floating boat, telling her to hold fast. In a like manner all the girls were brought safely to the boat, but such was their fright that they all scrambled to get in, thereby tipping the boat again on one side, and, losing their holds, they sank for the second time. Again Gross seized his little child as she came to the surface, and was swimming to the boat with her, when suddenly one of the other drowning girls clutched him about the neck from behind, and dragged him down. Instantaneously with parting with his child Mr. Gross was seized with cramps in the legs, and it was only by almost superhuman exertions that he regained the surface of the water. From that moment until he found himself on shore he says he does not recollect what transpired. He was blinded by water, and the cramps in his limbs prevented him from making any further efforts to rescue his unfortunate companions. Gross was saved by a party who, having been warned by the screams of the female witnesses of the catastrophe, rushed to the shore, jumped into a skiff, and hastened to the rescue of the drowning persons. They arrived in time to save Gross, but too late to save the girls. The bodies of the victims were soon recovered and taken ashore in a boat.

Crops in the Northwest.

A letter from Sioux City, Iowa, says: The wheat harvest in Northern Nebraska, Southern Dakota, and Northwestern Iowa, has fairly commenced. The weather is favorable and the prospect fair for saving the crop in good condition. The yield per acre is, on an average, about 20 per cent. greater than last year, and a majority of the crop will grade number one. The grasshoppers have, as yet, done no damage, except in the extreme eastern part of Dakota and Southern Minnesota, and a strip about thirty miles long by twenty wide, in the northern part of this State, on the line of the Sioux City and St. Paul railroad. The damage there is principally to corn.

Subject for a Poem.

She, a sentimental widow, observing some sea-gulls flying about the vessel, remarks, "What a charming subject for a poem—a swallow lost at sea!" He, just recovering from a severe attack of sea-sickness, replies, looking at the subject from his point of view, "Yes, madam; but there are so many swallows lost at sea!" She chooses a more sympathetic listener during the remainder of the trip.

THE feat of crossing the English channel in a canoe has been accomplished by Lieut. Colville, of the Grenadier Guards, who started from Dover at 3 o'clock in the morning and paddled into the harbor at Calais at 9:30, doing about thirty miles zigzag across the channel in six hours and a half.

THE Omro, Wis., glass factory will manufacture 1,600 boxes of glass per month, worth $5,600, over $60,000 per year.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

A Midsummer Song.

Oh, father's gone to market town; he was up before the day,
And Jamie's after robins, and the man is making hay,
And whistling down the hollow goes the boy that minds the mill,
While mother from the kitchen door is calling with a will—
"Polly!—Polly!—The cows are in the corn!
Oh, where's Polly?"

From all the misty morning air there comes a summer sound—
A murmur as of waters from skies, and trees, and ground.
The birds they sing upon the wing, the pigeons bill and coo,
And over hill and hollow rings again the loud halloo—
"Polly!—Polly!—The cows are in the corn!
Oh, where's Polly?"

Above the trees the honey-bees swarm by with buzz and boom,
And in the field and garden a hundred flowers bloom.
Within the farmer's meadow a brown-eyed daisy blows,
And down at the edge of the hollow a red and thorny rose.
But Polly!—Polly!—The cows are in the corn!
Oh, where's Polly?

How strange at such a time of day the mill should stop its clatter!
The farmer's wife is listening now, and wonders what's the matter.
Oh, wild the birds are singing in the wood and on the hill,
While whistling up the hollow goes the boy that minds the mill.
But Polly!—Polly!—The cows are in the corn!
Oh, where's Polly?

Around the House.

Abundant rain has made the hay crop in Eastern Vermont the best for many years.

In the harvest-field exercise all the prudence you can in drinking large draughts of cold water.—Des Moines Register.

The seed of sunflowers is the most healthy feed that can be given to horses in winter and spring; half a pint a day keeps them in health and spirited, with sleek coats, and more animated than any other feed. It prevents "heaves" and some other diseases.—Maryland Farmer.

Blue-grass seed is too often spoiled by being gathered and packed when too damp. To keep it must be well sun-dried after it is stripped from the stems. In Kentucky the seed is generally stripped by hand in the field. The seed is very small, and its vitality cannot be preserved as long as timothy or clover seed.

Dr. Worcester, of Massachusetts, employs carbolate of lime for currant worms, and says he finds it less costly, fully as efficacious, and not as dangerous as hellebore. He sprinkles it over the bushes when the worms first appear. Neither the foliage nor the fruit is injured, and the worms are soon destroyed.

Judge Davenport, of Bandera, Tex., gives these figures to show the profits of sheep raising there: May 25, '74, bought 1,449 sheep for $2,898; herding cost $216; salting, $47.50; total expense, $3,161. Have on hand 3,180 sheep worth $6,360; sold wool last year for $1,362. Total profits, $8,342,25; net profits, $5,180,75.

It is not too late even now to sow a strip of land to turnips for stock next winter. They make an excellent regulation in the diet of stock, and break up the monotony of winter feeding. The best way is to sow in drills, and leave the turnips at the first hoeing a foot apart in the rows. Swedes or beets soon cover the ground under cultivation and require little hand labor.

It is not a bad idea which somebody has suggested, that of introducing sheep upon newly-cleared land to keep down the sprouts and wild weeds until they die out and a better class of forage plants is introduced. There is scarcely a doubt that sheep may be employed for this purpose with profit, provided a farmer has facilities for keeping a flock at other seasons when the new pasture does not furnish the requisite amount of food.

One way of fighting the cabbage-butterfly is to search for its eggs (on the underside of the blades) at the proper season and destroy them; another is to employ children with nets to catch the butterflies; and a third to lay boards, elevated a few inches above the ground, between the cabbage rows, with a view of luring the worms to select such places for their chrysalis locations and thus securing their destruction.

Being of rather a speculative turn of mind, I tried a little experiment with a few cobs, by pouring over them a small amount of coal oil, and then put them in the cook stove to see what the effect would be. I was entirely satisfied that I had produced an excellent fuel. They furnish a kindling cheaper than, and equally as good as the patented articles sold in cities. Farmers who have to haul wood long distances, and then prepare it for use in the busy seasons of the year, will find this hint of value. I think it would be better to let the cobs lay awhile after pouring the oil over them, before using.—Prairie Farmer.

About the House.

Johnny Cake.—One pint of sour milk, a small teaspoonful of baking soda, a tablespoonful each of sugar and butter, a half teacup of Graham flour, and corn meal to make a stiff batter. Bake half an hour in a quick oven.

"M. L. C." wishes to find what will take away freckles. Some physicians say it is a sort of disease of the skin. Purify the blood. A wash of sour milk with scraped horseradish, will help remove them, but the face must be protected from the sun or they will come back. Never use chemicals.

Mangy Cats.—Often these household pets become mangy when they are old. A carbolic acid bath is a sure cure, and feeding the animal with fresh beef. You must bind the cat's paws so that it may not scratch you, and look out for its teeth, as its horror of the acid is extreme. A diet of fresh beef and milk will often cure the cat without the wash, if it is scurvy. Let the creature roll in the dirt whenever it will.

Summer Sandwiches.—Take half a pound of butter, three tablespoonfuls of mixed mustard, three tablespoonfuls of nice sweet oil, a little white or red pepper, a little salt and the yelk of an egg; braid these together very smoothly, and let it cool. Chop very fine some tongue and ham. Cut the bread thin; spread over this the meat, then the bread, and press it together very hard. Trim off the edges, that the sandwiches may all be one size.

The sirloin or porterhouse steak is the only proper one for broiling. The gridiron should be perfectly clean and smooth, and the fire hot. Never salt or season a steak while cooking, but watch constantly, and when one side is sufficiently cooked, turn and broil the other. Have ready a hot platter, well sprinkled with salt and pepper, also a liberal allowance of pieces of butter; on this lay the steak from the gridiron; then upon the steak sprinkle more salt and pepper and place more butter. Serve hot.

Blackberry Wine.—The following is said to be an excellent recipe for the manufacture of superior wine from blackberries. Measure your blackberries and bruise them, to every gallon adding one quart of boiling water; let the mixture stand twenty-four hours, stirring occasionally; then strain off the liquor into a cask, to every gallon adding two pounds of sugar; cork tight and let stand till the following October, and you will have wine ready for use without any further straining or boiling, that will make lips smack as they never smacked under similar influence before.

Humors of the Texas Bar.

A man and brother was on trial at La Grange, Texas, before Judge Barden, charged with horse-stealing. He was a diminutive African, very black, and about 25 years old. The case was rather hard against him. The first witness in his behalf was another colored man, black as the ace of spades, with shiny face, very fat, over six feet high, and pompous in speech and manner. His testimony was straight for the defendant. The District Attorney thought he was lying, and commenced the cross-examination, to show the interest of the witness, by asking him:

"Witness, you say you have known the defendant a long time. Is he any relation of yours?"

"Yes, sah."

"What relation?"

The witness, drawing himself up to his full height, and looking the District Attorney square in the face, promptly replied, "I'm his niece, sah."

And, while the Court, jury and audience laughed, the "brother" thought everything was right.

Another case before the same Judge occurred at Corpus Christi. It was a gaming case. The State had placed on the stand a keen, shrewd darkey named Sam West to prove that the defendant at the time and place alleged had been gambling. West was up to that kind of sport himself; admitted he was there and at the table; and though watching the game a long time, was unable to tell whether the defendant actually gambled or not. The District Attorney tried in vain to get the whole truth out of Sam. Finally the Judge took him in hand. Sam would not swear a man played cards or put his money down on a card unless he actually saw him do it, and here his memory failed him as to the act of the defendant. At length this colloquy occurred:

Judge—"Well, Sam, you say you never know a thing takes place unless you see it."

Sam—Yes, sah."

Judge—"Suppose you heard a horse neigh out in the yard, but did not see it, would you not know a horse was there?"

Sam—"No, sah."

Judge—"Why not?"

Sam—"No, sah, I would not know it was a horse, sah. It might be a mare, sah!"

Sam had the laugh on the Judge that time, but it was only a little time afterward that the Judge sent him to the penitentiary for burglary.—Harper's Drawer.

A Snake Sucking a Cow.

Do snakes suck cows? This question is affirmatively answered by the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, which states that a cow belonging to Deputy Sheriff Farrow was some days ago forced to submit to the milking process by a snake that procured milk fresh from the natural fount. When the cow came home her teat was bleeding, her bag was almost dry, and the print of the snake on the cow's leg, where he wrapped himself around and climbed up, could be plainly seen. It is supposed that the reptile was of the species known as the "chicken snake;" these are big black, speckled snakes, sometimes five feet long, which are known to have a penchant for sucking cows. It is said that a cow, after being sucked by a snake, will go right straight back to it the next day, to be sucked again.

Sitting Bull's Victims.

An officer connected with Gen. Terry's command sends to the New York Herald an authentic list of the killed and wounded in the battle of the Little Horn, of which the following is a recapitulation:

Officers killed	14
Acting Assistant Surgeon	1
Soldiers	233
Citizens	2
Guides	2
Total killed	252

A Grand Idea.

Some sanguine persons in Montreal have organized a society known as the "North American Union," whose object is said to be the "confederation of this continent of North America in one grand constitutional whole from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Arctic circle to the Isthmus of Panama."

This anecdote is told of Dr. Samuel Johnson and his wife previous to their marriage: He said to her that he very much wished to marry her, but there were three obstacles. First, he was of very humble origin; second, he had no money; third he had an uncle that was hanged. In reply, she said she honored no man more or less because of his parentage; second she had no money herself; and third, although she had had no relatives hanged, she had twenty who deserved to be, and she wished they were.

Peter Keiber is an Illinois man who is disgusted with hard money. He carried a silver quarter in his pocket for fifteen years, and on trying to pass it a few days ago found it was a counterfeit.

COMING ELECTIONS.

When Congressmen and State Officers will Next be Chosen Throughout the Union.

[From the New York Times.]

Below we present a list of the dates of the elections next to be held in the several States. Various incorrect statements respecting them have been printed in some of the papers, and none of the political almanacs that we have seen gives a correct list. Especial effort has been made to secure accuracy in the following. Most uncertainty prevails respecting the election of the members of the next Congress. By the new Apportionment bill it was provided that Representatives should hereafter be chosen on the same day throughout the Union, that day being the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November in 1876, and in every second year thereafter. But the Forty-third Congress so modified this law that it does not apply, unless supplemented by action of the Legislature of the State, to any State that has not yet changed its day of election, and whose constitution must be amended in order to effect a change in the day of the election of State officers.

It will be seen that the States in which elections will be held prior to the Presidential contest, with their several dates, are these: Aug. 7, Alabama; Sept. 4, Arkansas; Sept. 5, Vermont; Sept. 11, Maine; Oct. 4, Georgia; Oct. 10, Colorado, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia; Nov. 6, Louisiana.

Alabama will elect State officers on Monday, Aug. 7; Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Arkansas will elect State officers on Monday, Sept. 4; Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

California will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be chosen in September, 1879.

Colorado will elect State officers and Congressman on Tuesday, Oct. 10.

Connecticut will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Delaware will elect Congressman on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be elected in November, 1878.

Florida will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Georgia will elect Governor on Wednesday, Oct. 4; Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Illinois will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Indiana will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Oct. 10.

Iowa will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Kansas will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Kentucky will elect county officials and Congressman in the Fifth District, to fill vacancy, on Monday, Aug. 7; Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be chosen on the first Monday in August, 1879.

Louisiana will elect State officers and Congressmen on Monday, Nov. 6. Five proposed amendments to the constitution of the State will be voted upon at the same time.

Maine will elect Governor and Congressmen Monday, Sept. 11.

Maryland will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be chosen in November, 1879.

Massachusetts will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Michigan will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. Three proposed amendments to the constitution of the State will be voted upon on the same day.

Minnesota will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be chosen in November, 1877.

Mississippi will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be chosen in November, 1877.

Missouri will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Nebraska will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Nevada will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be chosen in November, 1878.

New Hampshire will elect Governor and Congressmen on Tuesday, March 13, 1877.

New Jersey will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be elected in November, 1877.

New York will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. Two proposed amendments to the constitution of the State will be voted upon on the same day.

North Carolina will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. Certain proposed amendments to the constitution of the State will be voted upon on the same day.

Ohio will elect minor State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Oct. 10. The regular election for Governor will next occur in October, 1877.

Oregon will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. The next election of Governor will occur in June, 1878.

Pennsylvania will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be chosen in November, 1878.

Rhode Island will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7; State officers on Wednesday, April 4, 1877.

South Carolina will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Tennessee will elect Governor and Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Texas will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be chosen in November, 1877.

Vermont will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Sept. 5.

Virginia will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be chosen in November, 1877.

West Virginia will elect State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday, Oct. 10.

Wisconsin will elect Congressmen on Tuesday, Nov. 7. State officers will next be chosen in November, 1877.

Proud of His Funeral.

Standing one day upon a street corner in a Western city, my attention was attracted by a passing funeral procession. The deceased, judging from the long line of carriages and the multitude of Irish following the hearse, must have been "a foine ould Irish gintleman," and having a curiosity to know on whose account, this great parade was being made, I asked of an Irishman standing near,

"Who is dead?"

"Indade, sur," he replied, "I dun know; but whoever he be, be jabers and he may well be proud of his funeral."—Harper's Drawer.

Suicide Mania.

A suicidal mania is prevalent just now and it takes very odd shapes. One desperate man jumped head-foremost into a red-hot furnace, another placed his head on a railroad track so as to have it neatly decapitated, and a third hung himself amid the rare exotics of his conservatory. The strangest part of the matter is that every new mode of death instantly finds imitators. The Turkish Sultan's mode of exit by means of scissors had more than one imitator, and it may confidently be expected that death will be sought in other green-houses. The madmen and fools are not all dead yet.

AFRICAN EXPLORATION.

Stanley and His Expedition Heard From—Five Interesting Letters from the Intrepid Explorer.

The London Daily Telegraph, of July 26, announces the receipt of five letters from Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer. The first letter bears date of July 29, 1875, and was written at Mayhyga island, Lake Victoria-Niyanza, and describes the voyage from King Mtesa's territory, at the northern end of Lake Victoria-Niyanza. In the course this voyage Stanley and party narrowly escaped massacre by the savage and treacherous natives of Bumbirch, a large island on the western side of the lake. The natives were beaten off after a severe fight, and the party arrived safely in camp, after encountering heavy storms. The second letter was written from Dumo, in Uganda, dated Aug. 15, 1875. Here the explorer established a camp on the main land within access of the lake. From Mayhyga Stanley made an expedition across the lake to Ukereme island at its southern extremity, from whence he recrossed the lake again toward the region of Uganda, while the expedition was being transported in canoes. During the return voyage Stanley inflicted severe punishment upon the treacherous savages of Bumbirch for the attack made upon his expedition, mentioned in first letter. The third letter is from Kawanga, on the frontiers of Unyoro, dated Jan. 18, 1876. The letter describes the march of the gallant explorer from Mtesa's capital across the country to the eastern shore of the Albert Niyanza. The march was made at the head of a large army, composed of Stanley's force and spearmen of Uganda. The three letters contain particulars of the highest geographical and ethnological value. Stanley twice traversed the country of Kabbarega and visited Niyanza. This land exploration explains why Gessi, of Gordon's force, who sailed on the Albert Niyanza in April last, heard nothing of the expedition. In the heretofore unknown regions lying between Lakes Victoria and Albert Niyanza is a remarkable mountain, Gambaragara, which Stanley thoroughly explored, and discovered among its high uplands a pale-face tribe forming a different race of people to the black-skinned denizens of the plains. Stanley christens the large inlet of Albert Niyanza, on which he encamped with his army, Beatrice Gulf, in honor of the Princess of England.

The fourth letter, dated March 26, is from Kanfurro, and relates the story and final departure from Uganda and the exploration of Kageera river, which flows into the lake on its west side. It further describes the exploration of Capt. Speke's lake, Windermore, and the hot springs of Karagwe. Stanley forwards a sketch map showing the hitherto unmapped portion of Victoria Niyanza. The fifth letter is dated from Ubagwe, in Unyamwe, April 24, fifteen days' march from Ujiji, and gives further details of explorations of the Inter-Lacustrine region, and Stanley's southward march toward Ujiji. From Ujiji Stanley proposed to revisit Albert Niyanza, by way of Lake Tanganyika, and make a thorough exploration of the former basin. He is amply supplied with men and means sufficient to enable him to solve the problem still left open by his undaunted courage, and splendid gifts as a traveler. His white friend, Frank Pocock is well, and his own health unimpaired.

The Bulgarian Massacre.

[Constantinople Cor. London Daily News.]

As to the accuracy of all the plain facts there can be no doubt. In Constantinople nobody hesitates to believe that many thousands of innocent men, women, and children have been slaughtered, that at least sixty villages have been utterly destroyed, that the most terrible scenes have been committed, and that a district among the most fertile in the empire has been ruined for many years to come. I have never pretended that the statistics of death and plunder could be given with anything like accuracy. In an indiscriminate destruction of lives and property only the broad facts are possible. In many cases, perhaps in most, there is a great tendency toward exaggeration. But I have taken the lower number rather than the higher, and have dismissed many stories which are probably well founded, but exaggerated. In the statements I have made there is, I believe, no exaggeration. The allegations made in my last letter of the villages destroyed were definite. If any one is denied, the issue becomes one of fact, and I will prove it or admit that I have been misinformed. Till then it is idle to talk about exaggeration. * * * I have spoken to Turks who put the number of killed at 20,000. I have met with officials connected with the various embassies which have had special information, and have heard virtually the same account from all. Nowhere, to my knowledge, has the estimate of the killed—the great majority of whom are on all hands believed to be innocent—been put lower than 12,000. I have spoken with merchants who have had private letters telling the same tale. The Bulgarian Exarch has made substantially the same statements to the Porte in an official paper. From all sources comes a compact body of testimony showing that crimes have been committed on a scale which Europe has not known for many years. Turkey has been telling Europe for years that she has arrived at a state of civilization where she ought to be recognized as within the pale of international laws, that the capitulations ought to be abolished, and that she ought no longer to be treated as a semi-barbarous power. The facts I have mentioned are sufficient comment on her request.

The Ohio courts have decided that an agreement on the part of a railway company with a telegraph company that it will not permit its right of way to be used for telegraph purposes by another company is against public policy and beyond the power of a railway company to make. The case goes to the court of last resort in the State.

THE NEW WORLD'S FAIR.

State Exhibits—View of the Soils, Ores and Products of the Majority of the States—Some of the Large States Absent.

Among the State exhibits at the fair, Oregon has an attractive display—the result of several years' preparation. She has many samples of her magnificent forests, and several bunches of shingles are shown, averaging 11 inches in width, which came from a tree that produced 100,000. Wool is presented as a staple crop, embracing the various long wools and that from the American merino. Another great staple is fruit. Nicely dried specimens of this are seen, including apples, pears, plums, apricots and cherries. In connection with them are dried vegetables, not excepting cabbage. A new article is condensed cider, which on being diluted with water is ready for use. There are large stocks of canned salmon. The fisheries are 17 in number, and bring in an annual revenue of $3,000,000, gold. The Oregonians claim to show the best wheat at the Exhibition, but this will be disputed. There is no doubt, however, but that the quality is excellent. Oats are remarkably fine, so are flax and rye, the climate and soil being well suited to them. The Oregon corn is not remarkable. The whole exhibit is decidedly creditable, and it ought to do the State much good.

The show of Washington Territory is not extensive, but the grains of all kinds are fine and well arranged. They are shown both in the sheaf and in the grain. Much of what is peculiar in Oregon is common of this Territory.

CALIFORNIA'S SPECIMENS.

The California State exhibit is not so complete as it should have been; still it is highly suggestive. There are specimens of alabaster, marbles, garnets, etc.; salt, of which three carloads are shipped daily, and, of course, ores of the precious metals and of quicksilver.

California makes the largest show of silk cocoons in the whole Exhibition. Egypt comes next. Worms are seen at work here on the leaves, and other processes are presented. In several sections the planting of mulberries is in progress. Eggs are exported to France at present, but it is yet problematical whether silk culture as a whole will become extensive in California, though many are sanguine. The number of native woods shown is 250, some of which are highly valuable. We all know that California excels all other States in wheat growing, and the samples shown prove that the quality is rarely excelled. Corn is not so much depended upon as oats and barley. The samples of beet sugar are good. Two factories of this article have now been running several years, and their condition may be gathered from the fact that they are extending their plantings from year to year, and that none of their stock is on the market. The labor employed is Chinese.

KANSAS AND COLORADO.

Kansas and Colorado have a single building, which is the largest of any of the State structures. Kansas products are almost entirely agricultural, though there are samples of coal, gypsum, and soils, and specimens of birds and insects. The display of wheat, oats, corn, and other grain, both in the sheaf and measure, is large, varied, and tasteful. Wreaths and rays of wheat are shown on the walls. An Independence bell is made of straw and grain, and corn is exhibited in many striking ways. Attendants are on hand to make statements in regard to the yield of grain, methods of cultivation, and prices of land, while circulars are distributed freely. In addition a volume of State reports may be had, giving complete statistics of every county in the State, by means of letter-press, diagrams, and tables, whereby a vast amount of information is imparted. The agricultural department of the State of Kansas is conducted in a manner worthy of being imitated by every other State.

Colorado defers making an agricultural display until after harvest, but specimens of the wool of the plains can be seen. The mineral exhibit is nearly complete, and it is the best made by any State. One block of coal, weighing over 15,000 pounds, from Trinidad, is near the main entrance. It makes good coke, and it has great value, since hitherto large quantities of coke have been shipped from Pittsburgh. The gold and silver mines, well known to be of value, and which are worked constantly, night and day, show fine specimens.

WESTERN GRAIN STATES.

Iowa has space among the several States in Agricultural Hall. She shows in large glass tubes seven feet high specimens or sections of soil from many counties, which is the most complete of anything in the Exhibition. The richness and depth of this soil must attract great attention. There are 30 varieties of grapes, 160 of woods, 80 of small grains, 300 of apples and pears, 65 of corn, 200 of garden vegetable seeds. The show of apples is remarkable, since it was supposed a few years ago that this fruit could not be grown in Iowa. A new variety, known as the "Weathy," has valuable qualities for cold and severe climates. It is of good size, it keeps well, has high color, perfects in January, and it has the remarkable quality of taking root from layers. It originated in Minnesota, and three of the first trees sold for $2,000 each. In appearance it resembles the Red Astrachan, but it is a better apple. In addition Iowa has model plows and other agricultural implements.

Illinois does not make as good a show as she should have done, but some things are noticeable. There is a full line of small grains and grasses, also vegetable seeds, some flax twine, coal, a single cheese, State reports, and the like. The Agricultural College has samples of corn grown in every State of the Union, and also on latitudes as high as corn can be grown, viz., in remote regions of British America. The corn grown on the verge of the tropics is infested with insects. This collection includes 300 varieties, and it is the best ever made.

Wisconsin has fine samples of timber, shingles, grain of all kinds, wheat in particular; tobacco and seed oil.

Indiana exhibits sections of forest trees, of which black walnut is conspicuous, and there is no better display of hard woods on the ground, and there is some wagon work. There are all kinds of grain in good shape, tobacco, and native nuts.

Michigan presents her magnificent pine lumber, samples of Norton Virginia wine, maple sugar, the general run of cereals, native grapes, and soils and minerals from various sections.

Nebraska has a tasteful exhibit of the cereals grown in the State; kaolin or potter's clay, peat, coal, woods, and in particular, salt from the saline basin, now yielding twenty tons a day, and capable of producing 10,000 tons, by solar evaporation. Southeastern Nebraska embraces about twenty counties, which is excelled by no other for corn.

THE EAST.

Connecticut has a tasteful pyramid of grain, wool in the fleece, tobacco, potatoes, and some other products.

New Hampshire has a fair show of cereals, including corn, maple sugar and sirup, potatoes, forest woods, wagon work, wooden ware, and two large stuffed hogs which weighed, when alive, about 1,300 pounds. These attract great attention. There is also an old-time plow, extremely useful as a study by those who wish to note the progress made during fifty years in the plow manufacture.

New Jersey seems to have begun making an exhibit and then stopped, leaving the space unoccupied. A private company make a beautiful display of cranberries.

Massachusetts has nice cases of grain, a good many specimens of granite and some of marble, manufactured articles of food, and a valuable series of charts illustrating farm productions in the various sections; also, farm values, agricultural societies, and the various breeds of domestic animals, as they have increased or diminished. Essex county makes a separate exhibit of fish products and of marine manufactures connected with the fisheries, which is complete and highly instructive.

SOME RARE EXHIBITS.

Ohio has 100 samples of wool of remarkably good quality, samples of corn of astonishing excellence, and of the various small grains. Some of the counties make special displays. Ohio has a large collection of aboriginal antiquities in the annex to the Main Building, such as the general public never had an opportunity to see before. So also have several other Western States, and especial attention is hereby called to them. At the Indiana State Headquarters are specimens of coal in large masses, and the quality has especial significance.

Tennessee has a large tent in which the exhibited many varieties of iron ore, and among geological specimens blocks of that elegant marble of which the United States Treasury is built.

West Virginia makes her exhibits in an elegant pavilion in the rear of Machinery hall. There are many kinds of coal, iron ore, specimens of useful woods, and of wood-work; petroleum, the great staple of the State; wool, another staple; building stone, photographs of school buildings, and works of school pupils. Everything is excellently well-arranged and managed. The number of visitors who registered their names during the month of June was 45,000.

Arkansas has a large circular pavilion, and the whole management and display indicate taste, judgment, and business tact. Among the woods is cypress, the only sample on the ground. There are good specimens of grain and grapes, and cotton by the bale; and it is to be noted that the bale of cotton which took the prize recently at St. Louis, and which is to be found in Agricultural hall, as coming from Memphis, Tenn., was grown in Arkansas. There are crystals and gems from the Hot Springs; hone stones of great value, called "Novaculite," from the same place; lead and silver ores, such as have yielded over 800 ounces silver to the ton; ocher clay of brilliant red; several kinds of leather; brooms made by the blind; Norton Virginia wine, kaolin, gypsum and zinc.

It will be noted that some of the large States make no exhibit—even Pennsylvania and New York are absent.

All Sorts.

They have a Mexican circus at Tucson, Arizona, this summer. It is held in a corral, and the prices of admission are $1 for a place in the shade and 50 cents in the sun. Each one to furnish his own seat. Three horses and four men compose the whole outfit, and they make lots of money.

An eminent physician says that sweet oil is not only an antidote to the bite of a rattlesnake, but "will cure poison of any kind, both on man and beast." The patient must take a spoonful of it internally and bathe the wound, for a cure. To cure a horse it takes eight times as much as for a man. A pint of whisky is also good for "snakebite."

A funny episode occurred recently in California. A mock monitor was anchored off Alcatraz, a mile from the fort. This was fired at from the men-of-war. Ten shots were fired before the monitor was struck. The firing after that was wild. The combined volleys from the men-of-war and the batteries having failed to even hit the fire-boat, to say nothing of demolishing it, a brave and daring hero was sent out in a tug to set on fire.

Wanted—A wife who can handle a broom
To brush down the cobwebs and sweep up the room;
Can make decent bread that a fellow can eat,
Not the horrible compound you everywhere meet;
Who knows how to boil, to fry, and to roast,
Make a good cup of tea and a platter of toast;
A woman that washes, cooks, irons, and stitches,
And sews up the rips in a fellow's old clothes,
And makes her own garments—an item, too which is
So horrid expensive, as every one knows
A common-sense creature, and still with
To teach and to guide—exalted, refined sort of an angel and housemaid combined.

The Republicans of the lower house of Congress tried the other day to break a quorum of that body to defeat a resolution to allow investigating committees to report at any time. They were brought back to the House by the sergant-at-arms and a ludicrous scene occurred as they in turn gave reasons for absence.

Is it not about time for the Democrats of DeKalb county to organize for the campaign? There is] altogether too much "don't care" shown all around, and for one we are tired of it. What we want, and what we will have is a red-hot campaign. Will the Chairman of the Central Committee call a meeting of the candidates and their friends? There is no time to be fooled away.

The Plymouth Democrat says: "The crops throughout the county are looking most excellent. Quite a number of farmers have threshed their winter wheat, which yields more than was expected. The yield is better than it has been for years. No one county of land in the North-west is so uniformly prosperous.

The Senate committee on Mississippi affairs have prepared a campaign document in the most approved bloody shirt style. If Morton has not started West he will get in the usual motion to print a hundred thousand for distribution. The document declares that the Mississippi government is not legal, but graciously permits the president to recognize its defacto existence for the preservation of the public peace.

Pack comes up to the bar and denies any knowledge of the extravagance of the house of representatives, of the fancy soaps, the perfumed stationery, brandy, ice claret and cologne. Pack also denies that Zach Chandler ever drank anything stronger than hotel coffee. Pack has an eye for salary but a poor eye for smaller speculations. A man who can defend Zach Chandler's private character and boldly rob the treasury of $5,000 and have cheek enought to defend it on grounds of economy is, of all others, the kind to ignore such small things as brandy, cologne, lemonade and ice claret.

The Indianapolis Sentinel says: "A few weeks ago the Journal of this city failing to discover a single vulnerable act in the political career of the Hon. J. D. Williams, our candidate for governor published a gross exparte statement of two petty buisness transactions, imputing dishonorable dealing to the honest old farmer. The Sentinel properly characterized the disreputable attact of the Journal at the time, and now comes the Vincennes Sun, and refuses in detail the absurd stories. The article will be found in another column of the Sentinel to day.

It is an instructive circumstance that the chief means of warfare employed by the Republicans in the present campaign is personal abuse of the Democratic candidates. Here, for instance, is an enquiry which we received from a young man in a large establishment of this city:

"Please instruct what truth is there about the million dollar steal said to be commited by Mr. Tilden several years ago? Our manager, who is a Republican by birth, who was for Blaine's nomination under all circumstances, and who is now for Hayes anyhow canvasses this assertion wherever an oportunity offers and this is the only point he has to make against Mr. Tilden."

We answer our young friend that there is no truth in it all. It is a pure lie. Mr. Tilden never stole anything in his life, and never let anobody steal if he could help it.—New York Sun.

The Teaching of Reading.

There can be but little question that a child may be taught to read glibly enough to satisfy the demands of teachers and school officers, and yet be left with little or no desire to read for self-improvement. Just here lies the difficulty connected with our teaching of reading in the schools.

The learning to read has two objects The first is utterance. The second is the acquisition of knowledge. To obtain the former object, the child is taught to distinguish and pronounce the words, and to utter them as they appear in sentences, or, as it is sometimes called, connected discourse. As a part of this, he is taught the management of the voice in pauses, emphasis, and the other graces that give effectiveness to delivery.

Now, if the teacher proposes this as the work to be done, or settles in her own mind that it is the only work that can be done, and that therefore, she will not attempt anything further, that is one thing. Such a course is the result of deliberation. It may be wrong and short-sighted, but it has the merit of clearness of purpose, so far as it goes. If moreover, we agreed with this view of the school work, there would be no need of further discussion. On the contrary however, it falls as we believe far short of the possibilities in the school-room, and it entirely ignores the greater object of the teaching of reading namely the acquisition of knowledge. We say "entirely" because if reading be taught in school solely, or mainly, to enable a child to learn its lessons in Geography, Grammar, or other studies, it is the school-work that is uppermost in such an arrangement, and it is precisely this very subordination of reading to the mechanical and compulsory buisness of the school-room that we wish in some way or other to break. There sooner or later be found a way to train our children in school to a liking for a good and entertaining book. To keep a child rubbing on the grindstone of his thumbed Reader, or associating the printed page with the not always well-beloved text book is dangerous to a taste for reading, because it tends to produce disgust in the minds of a very large majority of school-children. And it is for this majority that we plead, not of course for the few, who, for inborn tastes or from what is quite as influential, the surroundings of a happy, intelligent, and reading family circle, acquire a habit of reading good and interesting books. These are saved by nature, and by circumstances, not by the school-room, but well nigh in spite of it, as things now stand. The others, without such gifts or opportunities wait to be trained in the school room, and are dumb because they know not the great need that is in them.

A very good commencement may be made with the Reader, provided it is made use of in a large way, and the teacher is not tied down to that most baneful practice of limiting instruction to a paltry number of prescribed lessons After the elocutionary part of the training has been attended to in a given lesson, that is to say, the simpler matters of the pronunciation of new words, or of the new combinations of words, and the lesson has been read once by the pupils, it ought to be the buisness of the teacher to go over paragraph by paragraph, to ascertain whether the children have any true conception of the meaning. Very few entertaining reading lessons are without whole bundles of suggestions in every paragraph. To make use of these in framing questions, and in imparting familiar information, or, better than all, in stirring the imagination and curiosity of the children, shows the skillfulness, and versatility of the teacher. If any one will try this for herself, by preparation before the lesson begins, then afterwards by giving scope to her inquiries, and talk before the class she may possibly be surprised at the difficulties that lie before her, but if, through patience and determination, she compels herself to persist, she will be rewarded by finding the difficulties gradually disappear.—When they have disappeared she will find that she has got into a newer life, from which she would not step back if she could.

An employee at the Stave Factory of C. Beugont & Co., by the name of Ed. Reider, had two of his fingers terribly mangled last Monday, while sawing bolts with a buzz saw.

Joe. Goldsmith, living South of town is in the County Jail. He is insane, the cause of which resulted from religion, at least we should think so to judge from his conversation.

Judge Tousley, of Noble Co., gave us a call to-day. The Judge will try on the Independent ticket for another term in the "legal chair." He has a fine ability and many friends.

A large number of handsome dwelling houses are being built in different parts of the city. They are nearly all of the better quality of houses and some of them approach to real elegance.

Our big brother tried a trapaze performance around a belt in Clark's saw mill. A peeled nose and his left hand in a sling, was the result. 'Tis a lesson you should heed, try, try, again.

A fearful calamity is reported near Coldwater, Mich., a few days ago, by the drowning of nine persons who were in a pleasure boat. The boat was overloaded, and capsized.

In Japan every one who cuts down a tree is required to plant one in its stead and we who are cutting down our wood with reckless improvidence proposes to teach these heathens the art of thrift.

Money is very scarce. If you ask a man that has plenty of it, to lend you a little, he says, "I will shave notes, but can't lend for less than 25 per cent. interest.

M. L. Duck, of Auburn, was in town on Monday and Tuesday of this week, and like all good people, gave the "Globe" office a call. He reports business in that city a little on the stand still just now.—[North Manchester Globe.

The greenbackers of Illinois may score one for the campaign. Their ticket was generally adopted by the later democratic convention at Springfield.

It is a remarkable fact this campaign that three-fourths of the German voters of the county are in favor of Tilden and Hendricks. There never was such unanimity among them before.

We notice the papers are full of slander against Mr. Forepaugh and his men, for the row at Kendallville. We learn from parties that know Forepaugh's men had nothing to do with it and that he offered every fair means in power for their capture. "Give the devil his dues."

The little daughter of Mr. & Mrs. I. Pearce, living in the north part of the city, aged 2 yrs, 8 months and 7 days, died last Friday. Brain fever was supposed to be the cause of her death.

We have had quite a number of calls from the belles of this place and surrounding country this week. Don't know the cause of attraction unless it is the fellow don't look like us, but is from the same family, just the same.

The Universalists will have a basket meeting at Simmons' grove, on Sunday next, Rev. Crosley, of Fort Wayne, and N. Crary and others, will be present. Friends are invited. Train reaches here in time for services.

A gentleman in the east part of the county writes us. The Courier still continues to be the favorite paper of the county, and is so regarded here, irrespective of party feeling.

After this week Mr. Mays will write up the Courier. Ain't we glad, though Weamer can't go for us then. He'll have to "go for" the editor. We feel like a new borne babe over this lucky strike.

We went a hunting the other day—hunted all day to see something. We got a shot at Garrett, and never used "lock stock or barrel." You may think that's funny, but nevertheless its true.

Two fellows met at Fluke's corner last night and one says, "How's your Jane?" He pulled down the rim of his hat and says: "Don't you forget it." The fellow walked off just as though he wouldn't.

Remember, fellow-citizens, that the men who are now asking you to vote for Gov. Hayes are the very same persons who, four years ago, were telling you how necessary it was to elect the present incumbent.

Gov. Rutherford B. Hayes, Republican candidate for president approved an act of the Ohio Legislature which takes $5,000,000 from the tax-payers and adds it to the emoluments of country officers. Hayes is a reformer to the "manor born."

Some of our democratic papers have a picture of a man's head and shoulders at the top of their columns. It is labeled "Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks," but bears about as much resemblance as a bed-bug does to a turtle.

It was left for a republican senate to cut down the pensions voted the heirs of the brave Custer and his followers, after having locked horns with the house against cutting down that of a large number of civil office holders.

Remember, that the Republican platform endorses Grant's administration; that Hayes endorses the Republican platform; and that, as a natural consequence, one term of Hayes is but a third term of Grant. And who wants a third term of Grant?

Miss. Rena Abbott, of Waterloo, was lately married to Mr. Moore, an employee on the Saginaw Railroad. The couple have the best wishes of the Courier and all acquaintances thereof. May they live long, and in the language of Rip Van Winkle, prosper.

Miller & Casebeer are on the war path again. Their stock invoiced much larger than was expected. Our readers will be glad to know that the cheapest stock in the county is again open for trading.

They have a curious way of deciding law suits in North Siam. Both parties are put under cold water, and the one staying the longest wins the suit. In this country both parties are thrust into hot water, and the one that stands it the longest also wins.

We would'nt have come out on Bro. Weamer this week but we understand that he's going to give it to us. We hate to go and ask him, and have nothing else to do but to "go in on our muss.', Well, what's the difference. He's a Hayes man and to strike him on the cheek with a fence rail it would never leave an impression.

The next annual meeting of the Christian Church, of DeKalb County, will meet at Butler, August 25th, 1876, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over Sabbath. Rev. Wm. Dowling, of Kenton, O., will be the chief speaker, other ministers will be present. All are invited.

Some of our contemporaries inform their readers that the corn crop is likely to be simply enormous. Our opinion is that they have not been far from home, or have neglected to investigate the matter. From our own observation, and what information we predict not more than a half a crop of corn throughout the country.

Bro. Weamer thinks we come down too hard on him last week. If we did, it was certainly his own fault. He has been using personal items about us for several weeks and we held back thinking he would show a little respect. Can he expect to abuse us and not hear one word from us in self defence? It may be that he thinks so, but we are of a different opinion. He kept getting a little stronger and stronger each week until we got disgusted. We hope he will use a little better judgment hereafter, and crowd any one to "hoop him up" when they don't want to.

Young Ladies Social.

The young ladies social was entertained at Pleasant Lake last Friday. There was quite a crowd in attendance several boarding the train at Waterloo. Mr. Simmons has the grove in splendid condition, so that most any one can be sure of enjoyment if they anticipate a trip there.

We believe it would be a move in the right direction if our town Council would publish their "doings." If our people know not the ways of truth, how are they expected to walk therein. We would publish the proceedings of each meeting—if not lengthy—free of charge, than have them shut up in a closet. Trot 'm out, gentlemen, let's know what you are doing.

A boy about 17 years of age by the name of Jackson Wonderly, was sentenced to 7 years imprisonment in the penitentiary at Defiance, Ohio, about a week ago, for the murder of his father. The old man ought to have willed him something. If he had have lived ten years longer, he would only had the satisfaction of seeing what a "hellion" of a boy he raised. The friends of the boy, should urged him to play with the hind hoof of a mule.

What has become of our local correspondents? They should be more prompt in the future. The local items from the different parts of the county is not a minor feature of the Courier, and are always read with interest. Now as the campaign is about to open up, we would like to have our friends "dish 'its up" some "red-hot" items. We all like fun in a newspaper and a little help from each one will accomplish this desire.

Everybody says that Weamer is going for us this week, and all we have to say is:

Our varied days pass on and on,
Our hopes fade unfulfilled away,
And things which seem the life of life
Are taken from us every day;
And yet though all the busy streets
The crowd of pleasure seeking throng,
The puppets play, the showman calls,
And gossips chat the whole day long,
And so the world goes on!

A man in the South part of town came home drunk Monday afternoon and tore 'round generally, knocking his wife down with a chair, cutting her severely about the head and face, and a general stampede of the children to the street. He threatened to butcher them or burn the house down. Neighbors came running from all directions, as the report was that he was killing the woman. No arrest, because, because. M.

Our friends will please take notice that those ordering advertising will be held responsible for the pay. And that there may be no mistake concerning campaign printing we shall say right here the pay is expected on delivery of the work. We are willing to contribute our share but we don't feel ourself in a condition to do all the campaign printing for nothing. We don't think it ought to be expected.

"A party of rascals are traveling the country over getting farmers to sign their names to printed contracts for a new patent steaming apparatus for cooking food for stock. The farmers are appointed agents for certain territory, and agree to sell four machines in four years, which agreement they think they are singing, but which in reality turns out to be nothing more or less than a promissory note of from one to three hundred dollars. Keep the shot gun loaded and in a convenient place."

How to Succeed.

Boys the world is wide and the owner is God. If you wish to be somebody. "pitch in." The brave always have friends. Where others have gone you can go. If the old track don't suit, make a new one; somebody will walk in it. Success is never obtained in a country like this, without an effort. If you fail once, try again—if you fall down, get up again—if it's dark strike a light—if you are in the shade move around, for if there is shade on one side, there is sunshine on the other. It takes longer to skin an elephant than a mouse, but then the skin is worth something. Never be content with doing what another has done—excel him. Deserve success and it will come.

Take time boys—don't hurry too fast. Go slow, especially till you know the road, or become acquainted with your team. Mind your own buisness; don't stop to club whiffets—don't stop to retail gossip—but go on minding your own businees, leaving the question of reward of life, happiness and heaven to God.

You are learning a trade, that is a good thing to have; it is better than gold—brings a larger premium, the trade must be perfect—no silver plated affair. Determine in your mind to be a good workman, or let the job out. Learning a trade is different from eating mush and milk—mehcanical education does not slip down without chewing. Never slight your work; never. Every job you do is a sign. Poor signs are against success. People always speak well of a boy who minds his own buisness and who seems disposed to be somebody in time. This is a queer world; many people are watching us, help always comes when, and from whom, we least expect. Confidence is the safe in which men often deposit rich treasures; and as you prove worthy so will your reward of success be. There is a rich reward in success, which none but those who strive can ever enjoy.

BROKE OUT!

THREE PRISONERS ESCAPED FROM THE COUNTY JAIL.

$75. Reward is Offered for their Return.

Last Tuesday evening between six and seven o'clock three prisoners escaped from the county jail. The manner in which they managed the affair was well done, cutting off two bars on the lower row of cells. It is not known what implements they had in their possession to complete their desire. Without a doubt they have been working secretly for some time to accomplish it. They walked leisury past Ford & Parent's livery stable, in rear of the jail, and went Eastward, as is generally supposed Mr. Berry seen them come out of the jail but supposed they were visitors. Several others saw them but had not the least suspicion that they were "jail birds" at large. We had placed a great deal of confidence in our new jail and had formed an idea that no "guilty man could escape." Joe Goldsmith, insane, says he laughed at them when they were crawling through the hole. Sheriff Meese offers $75.00 for the return of the three men.

THE FLOOD OF YEARS.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

A mighty Hand, from an exhaustless urn,
Pours forth the never-ending Flood of Years
Among the nations. How the rushing waves
Bear all before them! On their foremost edge,
And there alone, is Life; the Present there
Tosses and foams and fills the air with roar
Of mingled noises. They are they who toil,
And they who strive, and they who feast, and they
Who hurry to and fro. The sturdy hind—
Woodman and delver with the spade—are there,
And busy artisan beside his bench,
And pallid student with his written roll.
A moment on the mounting billow seen—
The flood sweeps over them, and they are gone.
There groups of revelers, whose brows are twined
With roses, ride the topmost swell awhile,
And, as they raise their flowing cups to touch
The clinking brim to brim, are whirled beneath
The waves, and disappear. I hear the jar
Of beaten drums, and thunders that break forth
From cannon, where the advancing billow sends
Up to the sight long files of armed men,
That hurry to the charge through flame and smoke.
The torrent bears them under, whelmed and hid,
Slayer and slain, in heaps of bloody foam.
Down go the steed and rider; the plumed chief
Sinks with his followers; the head that wears
The imperial diadem goes down beside
The felon's with cropped ear and branded cheek.
A funeral train—the torrent sweeps away
Bearers and bier and mourners. By the bed
Of one who dies men gather sorrowing,
And women weep aloud; the flood rolls on:
The wail is stifled, and the sobbing group
Borne under. Hark to that shrill, sudden shout—
The cry of an applauding multitude
Swayed by some loud-tongued orator who wields
The living mass, as if he were its soul.
The waters choke the shout, and all is still.
Lo, next, a kneeling crowd, and one who spreads
The hands in prayer; the inguling wave o'ertakes
And swallows them and him. A sculptor wields
The chisel, and the stricken marble grows
To beauty; at his easel, eager-eyed,
A painter stands, and sunshine, at his touch
Gathers upon the canvas, and life glows;
A poet, as he paces to and fro,
Murmurs his sounding lines. Awhile they ride
The advancing billow, till its tossing crest
Strikes them and flings them under while their tasks
Are yet unfinished. See a mother smile
On her young babe that smiles to her again—
The torrent wrests it from her arms; she shrieks
And weeps, and midst her tears is carried down.
A beam like that of moonlight turns the spray
To glistening pearls; two lovers, hand in hand,
Rise on the billowy swell, and fondly look
Into each others' eyes. The rushing flood
Flings them apart; the youth goes down; the maid, With hands outstretched in vain, and streaming eyes,
Waits for the next high wave to follow him.
An aged man succeeds; his bending form
Sinks slowly; mingling with the sullen stream
Gleam the white locks, and then are seen no more.
Lo, wider grows the stream; a sea-like flood
Saps earth's walled cities; massive palaces
Crumble before it; fortresses and towers
Dissolve in the swift waters; populous realms,
Swept by the torrent, see their ancient tribes
Engulfed and lost, their very languages
Stifled and never to be uttered more.
I pause and turn my eyes, and, looking back,
Where that tumultuous flood has passed, I see
The silent Ocean of the Past, a waste
Of waters weltering over graves, its shores
Strewn with the wreck of fleets, where mast and hull
Drop away piecemeal; battlemented walls
Frown idly, green with moss, and temples stand
Unroofed, forsaken by the worshipers.
There lie memorial stones, whence time has gnawed
The graven legends, thrones of kings o'erturned,
The broken altars of forgotten gods,
Foundations of old cities and long streets
Where never fall of human foot is heard
Upon the desolate pavement. I behold
Dim glimmerings of lost jewels far within
The sleeping waters, diamond, sardonyx,
Ruby and topaz, pearl and chrysolite,
Once glittering at the banquet on fair brows
That long ago were dust; and all around,
Strewn on the waters of that silent sea,
Are withering bridal wreaths, and glossy locks
Shorn from fair brows by loving hands, and scroll
O'erwritten—haply with fond words of love
And vows of friendship—and fair pages flung
Fresh from the printer's engine. There they lie
A moment, and then sink away from sight.
I look, and the quick tears are in my eyes,
For I behold, in every one of these,
A blighted hope, a separate history
Of human sorrow, telling of dear ties
Suddenly broken, dreams of happiness
Dissolved in air, and happy days too brief,
That sorrowfully ended, and I think
How painfully must the poor heart have beat
In bosoms without number, as the blow
Was struck that slew their hope or broke their peace.
Sadly I turn, and look before, where yet
The Flood must pass, and I behold a mist
Where swarm dissolving forms, the brood of Hope,
Divinely fair, that rest on banks of flowers
Or wander among rainbows, fading soon
And reappearing, haply giving place
To shapes of grisly aspect, such as Fear
Molds from the idle air; where serpents lift
The head to strike, and skeletons stretch forth
The bony arm in menace. Further on
A belt of darkness seems to bar the way,
Long, low and distant, where the Life that Is Touches the Life to Come. The Flood of Years
Rolls toward it, near and nearer. It must pass
That dismal barrier. What is there beyond?
Hear what the wise and good have said. Beyond
That belt of darkness still the years roll on
More gently, but with not less mighty sweep.
They gather up again and softly bear
All the sweet lives that late were overwhelmed
And lost to sight—all that in them was good,
Noble, and truly great and worthy of love—
The lives of infants and ingenuous youths,
Sages and saintly women who have made
Their households happy—all are raised and borne
By that great current in its onward sweep,
Wandering and rippling with caressing waves
Around green islands, fragrant with the breath
Of flowers that never wither. So they pass
From stage to stage, along the shining course
Of that fair river broadening like a sea.
As its smooth eddies curl along their way,
They bring old friends together; hands are clasped
In joy unspeakable; the mother's arms
Again are folded round the child she loved
And lost. Old sorrows are forgotten now,
Or but remembered to make sweet the hour
That overpays them; wounded hearts that bled
Or broke are healed forever. In the room
Of this grief-shadowed Present there shall be
A Present in whose reign no grief shall gnaw
The heart, and never shall a tender tie
Be broken—in whose reign the eternal Change
That waits on growth and action shall proceed
With everlasting Concord hand in hand.

—Scribner for August.

CHASED BY THE SIOUX.

[Capt. John F. Finerty, an old Chicago journalist, now accompanying Gen. Crook's expedition against the Sioux savages, sends to the Chicago Times the following thrilling story of Indian adventure:]

The day after Crook's party returned from their hunt, the General, expecting the wagon train every moment, determined to send out a reconnoitering party along the base of the mountain, northwest, to discover where the Indians were and to take a general observation of the country. Lieut. Frederick Sibley, of E company, Second Cavalry, with 25 picked men drawn from the regiment, was detailed to accompany the scouts, Frank Grouard and Baptiste Pourier, on the reconnoissance. John Becker, a mule-packer who had some experience as a guide, was also of the party. The scouts had ventured forward some twenty miles two nights before, but saw Indians and returned. An officer came around to my tent on the morning of July 6 and informed me of the plan. He said the party were going in the direction of the Little Big Horn river, southwest, and if no Indians were discovered they would proceed still further. As I was sent out here to see the country and not to dry-rot around camps, I made up my mind to go with Sibley, who is a fine young officer and a son of the late Col. Sibley, of Chicago. I obtained Crook's permission, which he appeared rather reluctant to give, and was ready to start with the party mustered at noon. Each of us carried 100 rounds of ammunition and enough provender to last a week. The scouts led us to camp on Big Goose creek, but thirteen miles from Camp Cloud Peak, where we remained until night. When evening had sufficiently advanced, our little party, 30 men all told, moved forward for the most part on the old Fort C. F. Smith road, Grouard keeping a sharp lookout from every vantage point ahead. The full moon rose upon us by 8 o'clock, and we continued our ride along the foot of the mountain until 2 o'clock that morning. Then we halted at a point seven miles from the Little Big Horn, in Montana, and fully forty miles from our permanent camp, half-corraled our horses, and slept until daylight, our pickets keeping watch from the bluffs above our encampment. At 4:30 o'clock on the morning of Friday, July 7, we were again in the saddle, pressing on toward where the scouts supposed the Indian village to be. Reaching the foot of a rocky mound, Grouard told us to halt while he took observations. By this time we had moved about four miles from our late bivouac. We observed Grouard's movements with some interest, as we knew we were in the enemy's country, and might encounter Indians at any moment. Scarcely had the scout taken a first look from the crest of the ridge, when a peculiar motion of his hand summoned Baptiste to his side. Both left their ponies below the bluff, and observed the country from between the rocks on the summit. A minute afterward they had mounted their horses, and came galloping back to us. "Quick, for your lives," cried Grouard. We mounted immediately and followed him. He led us among hills of red sandstone, the footstool of the mountains, and we were obliged to make our horses leap down on rocky ledges as much as six or seven feet to follow his course. Within fifteen minutes we reached a hill sufficiently large to conceal our horses, while those of us who were furnished with glasses, namely, Grouard, Pourier, Lieut. Sibley, and myself, went into the rocks, and waited to see what was coming. "What did you see, Frank?" asked Sibley of the scout. "Only Sitting Bull's war party," Frank replied. "Knew they were up here without coming at all." We did not have long to wait for the confirmation of his words. Almost at the same instant groups of mounted savages appeared on every hill north and east of us. Every moment increased the numbers, until they seemed to cover the country far and wide. "They have not seen us yet," said the scout. "Unless some of them hit upon the trail we are comparatively safe."

Gradually the right flank of the Indians approached the ground over which we had come that morning and the previous night. We watched their movements with breathless interest. Suddenly an Indian attired in a red blanket halted, looked for a moment at the earth, and began to ride around in a circle. "Now look out," said Grouard, "that fellow has found our trail and they will be after us in five minutes."

"What are we going to do?" asked the young officer.

"Well, we have but one chance of escape," said Grouard, "let us lead our horses into the mountains and try to cross them. Meanwhile prepare for the worst."

Then we left the rocks and went down among the soldiers. Lieut. Sibley said to them: "Men, the Indians have discovered us. We will have to do some fighting. If we can make an honorable escape, all together, we shall do it. If retreat is impossible, let no man surrender. Die in your tracks for the Indians show no mercy."

"All right, sir," said the men; and the whole party followed the scouts and the officer up the steep mountain side, which at that point was steep to a discouraging extent. The Indians must have seen us—they were scarcely more than a mile distant—for hundreds of them had halted and appeared to be in consultation. We continued our retreat until we struck an old Sioux trail on the first ridge. "This path leads to the snowy ridge," said Grouard. "If we can reach there without being overtaken or cut off, our chances are pretty fair." Most of the road was rather good, and we proceeded in a northwestern direction at a brisk trot. Having gone five miles, and seeing no Indians on our track, Grouard concluded that they had abandoned the pursuit or else did not care about attacking us in the hills. The horses were badly used up, and many of the men were suffering from hunger. So we halted to make some coffee and to allow our animals to recuperate. This occupied about an hour, when we again mounted and set forward. We crossed the main branch of Tongue river, flowing through the mountains, and were in full view of the snowy range. The same splendid scenery that I had observed when out with Crook's party was visible on every side. The trail led through natural parks, open spaces bordered by rocks and pine trees on the mountain sides. Here the country was comparatively open. Suddenly John Becker, the packer, and a soldier rode up, exclaiming, "The Indians! the Indians!" Grouard looked over his shoulder and saw some of the red devils riding on our right flank. We had reached a plain on the mountain range, timber on our left, timber on our front, and rocks and timber on our right, at about 200 yards' distance. "Keep to the left along the woods," said the scout. Scarce were the words uttered when from the rocks there came a ringing volley. The Indians had fired upon us, and had struck my horse and two others. Fortunately the scoundrels fired too low, miscalculating the distance, and not a man was wounded. Our animals, after the manner of American horses, stampeded and nearly dashed out our brains against the trees on our left. The savages gave us three more volleys, wounding more of our horses before we got the beasts tied to the timber. We gave them a volley back to keep them in check, and then formed a circular skirmish line in the woods. We could see the Indian leader, dressed in what appeared to be white buckskin, directing the movements of his men. Grouard recognized him. He is a Cheyenne, called White Antelope, famed for his enterprise and skill. The Cheyennes and Sioux are firm allies, and always fight together. White Antelope led one charge against us, but one fire sent himself and his warriors back in quick time. Then the Indians laid low in the rocks and kept up an incessant fire on our position, filling the trees around us with lead. Not a man of us ever expected to leave that spot alive. They evidently aimed at our horses, thinking that by killing them all means of escape would be cut off from us.

Meanwhile their numbers continued to increase. The open slopes swarmed with Indians, and we could hear their savage, encouraging yells to each other. Cheyennes and Sioux were mixed together and appeared to be in great glee. They had evidently recognized Grouard, whom they mortally hate, for they called out to him in Sioux, "Standing Bear (the name they gave him), do you think that there are no men but yours in this country?" We reserved our fire until an Indian showed himself. They were prodigal of their ammunition, and fired wildly. But they were fast surrounding us. We had fought them and kept them at bay for two hours, from half-past 11 until half-past 1 o'clock, but they were twenty to our one, and we knew that unless a special Providence interposed we could never carry our lives away with us. We were looking death full in the face, and so close that we could feel his cold breath upon our foreheads, and his icy grip upon our hearts. "No surrender," was the word passed from man to man. Each one of us would have blown out his own brains rather than fall alive into Indian hands. A disabling wound would have been the same as death. I had often wondered how a man felt when he saw inevitable, sudden doom before him. I know it now, for I had no idea of escape, and could not have suffered more if an Indian knife or bullet had pierced my heart. So it was with all of us. It is one thing to face death in the midst of excitement. It is quite another thing to meet him in almost cold blood, with the prospect of your dishonored carcass being first mutilated and then left to feed the fox and the vulture. After a man once sees the skull and cross-bones as our party saw it on the afternoon of July 7, no subsequent glimpse of grim mortality can possibly impress him in the same manner.

Well, the eternal shadows were fast closing around us; and the bullets were hitting nearer every moment, and the Indian yell was growing stronger and fiercer, when a hand was laid on my shoulder, and a soldier named Rufus, my neighbor on the skirmish line, said, "The rest are retiring. Lieut. Sibley tells us to do the same." I quietly withdrew from the friendly pine tree which had kept at least a dozen bullets from making havoc of my body. "Go to your saddle-bags and take all your ammunition," said Sibley, as I passed him. "We are going to abandon the horses. The Indians are all around us, and we must take to the rocks on foot. It is our only chance."

I did as directed, but felt a pang at leaving my noble beast, which was bleeding from a wound in the side. We dared not shoot our horses, for that would discover our movement to the enemy. Grouard advised this proceeding. With a celerity which was only possible to men struggling for life, and to escape a dreadful fate, our party obeyed their orders, and, in Indian file, retired through the wood and fallen trees in our rear, toward the east, firing a volley and some scattering shots before we moved out, to make the Indians believe we were still in position. Our horses were evidently visible to the savages—a circumstance that facilitated our escape. We ran for a mile through the forest, waded Tongue river (the headwaters) up to our waists, and gained the rocks of the mountain ridge, where no Indian pony could follow us, when we heard five or six scattering volleys in succession. It was the final fire of the Indians before they made their charge at our "late corral" to get our scalps. "We are safe for the present," said Grouard, with a grim smile, "but let us lose no time in putting more rocks between us and the White Antelope." We followed his advice with a feeling of thankfulness which only men in such trials ever know. How astonished the Indians must have been when they ran in upon the maimed horses and did not get a single scalp.

Even under such circumstances as we were placed in, we had a little laugh at their expense. But we had escaped one danger only to encounter another. Fully forty-five miles of mountain, rock, and forest lay between us and Crook's camp. We could not carry a single particle of food, and had to throw away everything superfluous in the way of clothing. With at least 500 Indians behind us and uncounted precipices before us, we found our rifles and 100 rounds of ammunition each a sufficient load to carry. The brave Grouard, the ablest of scouts, conducted our retreat, and we marched, climbed, and tumbled over places that at other times would have been impossible to us, until midnight. Then we halted under an immense pile of rocks on the top of a mountain, and there witnessed one of the most terrible wind-storms that can be imagined.

Long before dawn we were again stumbling through the rocks and forests, and at daylight reached the tremendous canon cut in the mountain by what is called the eastern fork of Tongue river. Most of our men were too exhausted to make the descent of the canon, so Grouard led us through an open valley down by the river, on the left bank, for two miles as hard as we could go, for if discovered there by the savages we could only halt and die together. Fortune favored us, and we made the right bank of the stream unobserved, being then about twenty-five miles from Crook's headquarters. In our front were the plains of the eastern slope, full of hostile Indians, while our only avenue of escape was to climb over the tremendous precipice which formed the right side of the canon. But the dauntless Grouard was equal to the crisis. He scaled this gigantic wall diagonally, and led us along a mere squirrel path not more than a foot wide, with an abyss 500 feet below, and a sheer wall of rock 200 feet high above us. After an hour's herculean toil we gained the crest, and saw the point of the mountain, about twenty miles distant, where lay our camp. This, as may be imagined, was a blissful vision, but we were half dead with fatigue, and some of us were almost famine-stricken. Yet the indefatigable Grouard would not stop until we reached the eastern foot-hills, where we made a dive into the valley to obtain water, our only refreshment on that hard, rugged road. Scarcely had we slaked our thirst when Grouard led us up the hills again, and we had barely reached the timber when, around the rocks, at the point we had doubled shortly before, appeared another strong party of Sioux. This made us desperate. Every man examined his rifle and looked to his ammunition. We all felt that life would be too dearly purchased by further flight, and following the example of the brave young Sibley and the two gallant scouts, we took up our position among the rocks on the knoll we had reached, determined to sell our lives as dearly as possible. "Finerty," said Sibley to me, "we are in hard luck, but, d—n them, we'll show the red scoundrels how white men can die. Boys (turning to the soldiers), we have a good position; let every shot dispose of an Indian."

At that moment not a man among us felt any inclination to get away. Desperation and revenge had usurped the place of the animal instinct to preserve our lives. In such moments mind is superior to matter, and soul to the nerves.

But we were spared the ordeal. The Sioux failed to observe us, as, very fortunately, they did not advance high enough to find our trail, but kept eastward on the lower branch of Tongue river. Thoroughly worn out, we all fell asleep, excepting the tireless scouts, and awoke at dark somewhat refreshed. Not a man of us, Sioux or no Sioux, could endure the mountain journey longer, so we took our thirty jaded, hunted lives in our hands and struck along the valley, actually wading Big Goose creek up to our arm-pits, at 3 o'clock Sunday morning, the water being cold as the mountain snow could make it. Two men, Sergeant Cornwell and Private Collins, were too exhausted to cross, so they hid in the brush until we sent two companies of cavalry after them, when we reached camp. After crossing Big Goose we were nearly a dozen miles from our camp on Little Goose creek, and you may judge how badly we were used up, when it took four hours to make six miles. The rocks had skinned our feet and starvation had weakened our frames. Only a few were vigorous enough to push on. At 5 o'clock we saw a few more Indians, but we took no pains to conceal ourselves further. They evidently mistook us for a camp outguard, and, being only a handful, kept away. At 7 o'clock we met some cavalry out hunting, and we sent into camp for horses, as most of the men could walk no further. Capts. De Wees and Rowelle, of the Second Cavalry, came out to us with led horses, and we reached camp at 10 o'clock Monday morning amid congratulations from every side. The men who remained at Goose creek were brought in some hours later. Thus, after passing through incredible danger and great privation, every man out of thirty, unwounded as by a miracle, found himself safe in Camp Cloud Peak, surrounded by comrades. For conducting this retreat with such consummate success, Frank Grouard deserves the highest place among the scouts of the American continent.

The oldest of our Indian fighters, including Col. Royall, concur in saying that escape from danger so imminent and appalling in a manner so successful is unparalleled in the history of Indian warfare.

Cremation in South Carolina.

A strange and solemn event has recently occurred in this county, which carries the mind back to those ancient days when the remains of the dead were disposed of by cineration. The subject of this remarkable funeral ceremony was Mr. Henry Berry, an aged and a highly respectable citizen of this county, whose rare tact, industry and economy, honestly exercised, enabled him to amass a very large property. Many years ago, in attempting to remove the remains of a beloved relative from the spot where they had lain for some time, he encountered a sight which created in his mind an unconquerable aversion to being buried, and to such an extent did this prejudice possess him in after life that he enjoined it upon his heirs, on pain of disinheriting them, to see that his body was burned after death. He was careful to designate the spot where the ceremony should take place, and the lightwood trees that should be used as fuel on the occasion.

The old gentleman, after lingering for many months, died on Sunday, the 9th inst., and on the following Tuesday his strange desire respecting the disposition of his remains was carried out to the letter. The funeral service of the church of which he had once been a member was read, and an appropriate discourse delivered by the pastor on the Monday evening previous. The next morning his remains, incased in nothing but a square box, which, by his directions, had been handsomely lined inside and incased outside with black velvet, and ornamented with trimmings, were borne to the spot which he himself had selected for the purpose. Here three large lightwood logs, each nearly two feet in diameter, cut from the very same trees he had indicated, were placed alongside on the ground, and upon these logs the box was deposited. Lightwood pieces of sufficient length and thickness were then piled upon the logs and around the coffin until the latter was hidden from view. The lightwood was then piled in cross layers until the pyre reached a height of seven or eight feet. A torch was then applied at different corners of the pile, and in a few minutes the raging fire resembled the burning of a large building, the flames leaping many feet in the air, and sending hundreds of feet higher a vast column of pitch-black smoke that was seen for many miles around. It is said that the fire died out without entirely consuming the remains, and had to be replenished before the cremation was complete. It was the old gentleman's express desire that his ashes should disappear amid the flame and smoke, or be mingled with the soil underneath the pyre, and so no precautions were taken to preserve them. The burning began at 8 o'clock in the morning, and was finished in six hours. It was witnessed by upward of a hundred persons. Mr. Berry resided at Berry's Cross Roads, a locality that took its name from him. It is about 14 miles from this place.

Thus was the injunction, "Ashes to ashes," carried out under conditions that made it impossible to fulfill the other precepts, "Earth to earth, and dust to dust."—Charleston News and Courier.

WESTON, the pedestrian, has had a varied experience in Europe. Owing to able management he was financially successful at the outset in England. The profits of his first exhibition are said to have been from $10,000 to $15,000, and he was for a time the chief subject of talk in London. Then his best performances were outdone in a contest of amateurs, and he was advised that his harvest of money was over; but he persists in walking more. His business manager has parted company with him, and he is likely to lose all he has made.

CUSTER'S LAST FIGHT.

Story of the Only Survivor—The Daring of Custer—Beset on Every Side, but Fighting to the Last While Wounded—Burial of the Dead.

An officer high in command, attached to the expedition operating against the Indians, sends to the New York Herald the following interesting communication:

The officers and men of Custer's command were buried on the 28th of June, where they fell, Col. Reno, with the survivors of the Seventh Cavalry Regiment, performing the last sad rites over the bodies of their dead comrades. The scene was sad in the extreme, and many of the men shed tears while laying away to rest a beloved comrade.

Custer was buried among his officers, and many crowded forward for a long, last look at the well-known form and features of the great cavalry leader. He seemed only sleeping, and a perfect calm was on the face and a smile about the lips, as if he were bidding his friends a pleasant good-by. All the officers' graves were marked by hollow sticks, sunk deep in the ground, containing the names of the dead. It was known the Indians would remove any surface marks placed over the graves, but it is not believed they will disturb the bodies, and they can easily be indentified by means of the sticks at any time friends may wish to remove them East. The Indian dead were not disturbed, and it is not at all likely they will molest our dead, as they are very superstitious about such things and take great care of the dead.

The Crow Indian Curly is believed to be the only survivor of the 250 men who went into action with Custer. He is very clear in his knowledge of the fight, and has made a statement. He says he went down with the other Crows and went into action with Custer. The General, he says, kept down the river on the north bank four miles, after Reno had crossed to the south side above. Custer's object was to cut off the Indians. He thought Reno would drive down the valley and at the same time attack the village on two sides, he believing Reno would take it at the upper end, while he (Custer) would go in at the lower end. Custer had to go further down the river and further away from Reno than he wished on account of the steep bank along the north side; but at last he found a fork and dashed for it. The Indians met him and poured in a heavy fire from across the narrow river. Custer dismounted to fight on foot, but could not get his skirmishers over the stream. Meantime hundreds of Indians, on foot and on ponies, poured over the river, which was only about three feet deep, and filled the ravines on each side of Custer's men. Custer then fell back to some high ground behind him and seized the ravines in his immediate vicinity. The Indians completely surrounded Custer, and poured in a terrible fire on all sides. They charged Custer on foot in vast numbers, but were again and again driven back. The fight began about 2 o'clock, and lasted, Curly says, almost until the sun went down over the hills. The men fought desperately, and after the ammunition in their belts was exhausted went to their saddle-bags, got more, and continued the fight. Curly says more Indians were killed than Custer had men. He also says the big chief (Custer) lived until nearly all his men had been killed and wounded, and went about encouraging his soldiers to fight on. He got shot in the left side and sat down, with his pistol in his hand. Another shot struck Custer in the breast and he fell over. The last officer killed was a man who rode a white horse (believed to be Lieut. Cook, Adjutant of the Seventh, as Lieuts. Cook and Calhoun were the only officers who rode white horses, and Lieut. Calhoun was found dead on the skirmish line, near the ford, and probably fell early in the action). Curly says when he saw Custer was hopelessly surrounded he watched his opportunity, got a Sioux blanket, put it on and worked up a ravine, and when the Sioux charged he got among them and they did not know him from one of their own men. There were some mounted Sioux, and seeing one fall Curly ran to him, mounted his pony and galloped down, as if going toward the white men, but went up a ravine and got away. He says as he rode off he saw, when nearly a mile from the battle-field, a dozen or more soldiers in a ravine fighting with Sioux all around them. He thinks all were killed, as they were outnumbered five to one, and apparently dismounted. These men were no doubt part of the thirty-five missing men reported in the official dispatches of Gen. Terry. Curly says he saw one cavalry soldier who had got away. He was well mounted, but shot through both hips, and Curly thinks he died of his wounds, starved to death in the bad lands, or more likely his trail was followed and he was killed by the Sioux. Curly did not leave Custer until the battle was nearly over, and he describes it as desperate in the extreme. He is quite sure the Indians had more killed than Custer had white men with him, and says the soldiers fought on until the last man fell. The other Crow Indians in the battle were killed.

The Centennial Live-Stock Display.

It is officially announced by the Centennial Bureau of Agriculture that the live-stock display will be held in the months of September, October and November, and that the periods devoted to each group would be as follows: Group 29, horses, mules and asses, from September 1 to 14; group 30, horned cattle, Sept. 21 to Oct. 4; groups 31 and 32, sheep, goats and swine, from Oct. 10 to 18; group 33, dogs, from Sept. 4 to 8; group 34, poultry, from Oct. 27 to Nov. 6. Entries will close on the 10th of August. The system of awards for live stock will be the same as that adopted for the other departments of the Exhibition. Burnet Landreth, chief of Bureau of Agriculture, says that animals possessing points of excellence will be reported upon according to their inherent and comparative merits, and that exhibitors whose stock is recommended by the judges for an award will receive a special report and the diploma and bronze medal of the United States Centennial Commission. The judges in each group will also make a general report upon the development and present characteristics of each breed, especial reference being made to animals of superior merit.—New York Post.

OUR SUMMER FRIENDS.

BY JOHN BROUGHAM.

As the bee is to the rose
While the honey treasure flows,
Singing gentle songs of love
To each blossom in the grove,
Pausing only in its flight
Where the sweets of life are brigh
All unwilling to depart
Till he reached the very heart,
And when all the luscious store
Is exhausted, sings no more—
As the bee is to the rose
While the honey treasure flows
Are summer friends.

As the shadows to the boat
On a changeful lake afloat,
When the lake is in repose,
Like another boat it shows,
And all fortune elevates
O'er the surface imitates.
But a ripple on its breast
Shadow trembles with unrest,
And when tempests gather round
Can no longer there be found—
As the shadow to the boat
On the changeful lake afloat
Are summer friends.

Sheep.

Sheep-raising and wool-growing is a business not less affected by the existing close times than other leading industries. In the far West, along the Pacific coast, the shepherd's trade is especially affected, the animals bringing in flocks less than a dollar apiece, and their wool yielding but a very small return for the labor of raising, clipping and sending to market. The present number of sheep in the United States is estimated at 37,000,000 head. The number dressed for mutton each year averages about 7,000,000 head.

South America is far ahead of North America in the sheep product, Brazil alone having nearly double the number held in the United States. But Great Britain is the greatest sheep country in the world, in proportion to its cultivated land, there being as many head of sheep upon the British islands as in the entire United States and Territories, from which that country realizes $150,000,000 annually.

An Extraordinary Cow.

The region about Oxford depot, Orange county, N. Y., is undoubtedly the land of milk and honey. I believe the fact is generally conceded, but I wish to show the account of one small cow belonging to Samuel Marvin, a farmer of that section, who keeps a dairy of thirty-five cows, all bought out of Western droves. Said cow is called the "Brag Heifer." She calved January 6, 1875, and from that time the total weight of her milk for one year was 6 tons 882 pounds. During the winter months she was fed one scoopful of soaked wheat bran and two and a half quarts of meal each morning, and a scoopful of brewers' grains and two and a half quarts of meal each evening, and all the hay she would eat; and when on grass she was fed two quarts of meal every day.—Correspondence Turf, Field and Farm.

A LIVE CARGO.

Shipping Chinese—How the Women are Taken Aboard.

[From the San Francisco Morning Call.]

The steamer at Hong Kong lies at anchor in the bay, after she has received her cargo. The regular Chinese coolie passengers are given to understand that they must be ready to go on board at an early hour in the morning. At about 3 o'clock a. m. the embarkation begins, the coolies being brought out to the ship from the shore in lighters, which usually carry from 400 to 600 persons. When the lighters come alongside, a gangway is made, and along this the coolies pass in single file, each having in his hand a ticket with which he has been provided, which he exhibits. As soon as all are on board the anchor is weighed and the ship steams out of the harbor.

But before all this, which is regular, has occurred, and under the cover of the darkness of night, small boats, or "sampans," as they are called in China, move silently off from the shore, each containing from five to ten Chinese females of the lowest order. These women do not pass aboard the ship by any gang plank, but they are put through a port, which has been left conveniently open for this purpose. They are received on board by some officer of the ship, who has provided a secret hiding-place for them; and, before the gray twilight of morning appears, everything about the ship has a remarkably regular appearance. Just before the ship reaches Yokohama, on her way to San Francisco, all the Chinese passengers, except the women, are mustered on the main deck, and are made to pass through a narrow gangway, only wide enough for one to pass at a time. Their passage tickets are taken up, and another ticket furnished each one, to show that he will be all right when disembarked at San Francisco. While this inspection is in progress upon the main deck, two of the ship's officers go into the steerage and make a search to ascertain if there are any stowaways on board. If any are found they are put ashore at Yokohama; but no instance has ever been known where a female stowaway was put ashore, except after the arrival of the steamer at San Francisco.

After the ship has arrived at this port, opportunities are given to the owners of these women to smuggle them ashore. This is done by the connivance of some officer of the ship, and possibly of some subordinate Custom House officer.

The New York Man and the Sitting Hen.

A New York man who is spending the hot weather season with a family on Pine street was asked by the lady of the house if he would take a hen off the nest, as it wanted to sit, and she didn't want it to.

"Certainly," said he, and immediately started to the barn where the hens were kept, to crush out the maternal prospects of this particular one.

He went straight for the nest to lift her off, and reached out his hand for that purpose, but immediately drew it back again and tucked it up under the other arm and squeezed it a little, while he drew up his lips as if about to whistle something. Then he stood there and stared at the hen, and she lifted up her head and stared back at him, winking her eyes with singular velocity.

"Get off, won't you?" said he, after a pause.

She made no response. He drew out his hand and looked at a red spot on one of the knuckles, and then put the knuckle in his mouth to cool it, looking all the while at the hen, and wondering how on earth she moved so quickly. The longer he eyed her the less inclined he felt to touch her, and finally he climbed up a post to a beam which ran over the nest, and, working his way out till he got just above the hen, took off his hat and shook it at her and advised her to "get." But she only looked up at him one eye at a time and clucked ominously. He told her if she didn't leave he'd come down there and kick her through the barn, but immediately gave up the bloodthirsty design when he reflected that it was a dumb animal and couldn't reason like a human being.

Then he happened to think of his trousers, which were white linen, and rubbed his fingers on the beam to find them full of brick dust, which led him to work his body around to look at his pants, and while making this very natural move he suddenly slipped, made a plunge to renew his hold, shrieked for help, slipped again, and then came down on top of the hen, smashing them both to the floor, upsetting a barrel, and filled the air with dust, feathers, hen noises and shrieks.

When the family reached the barn, the unfortunate man, looking something like a circus poster on legs, had got on his feet, and was turning round and rubbing his head in an abstracted manner, and every time he turned, an omelet on a white linen base came to view, while the hen stood up in the farthest corner on one leg with a look of mingled astonishment and reproach upon her countenance.—Danbury News.

Public Suicide of a Widow in China.

The overland China mail gives an account of a strange suicide which was lately committed at Fuh-chow Foo. It seems that a young lady, an inhabitant of that city, who had the misfortune to be left a widow while yet in her teens, was urged by some injudicious relatives to enter again into the bonds of wedlock. The thought thus suggested of supplying the place of her late husband was so repugnant to her feelings that, in order to escape from the persecution of her advisers, she determined to "ascend to heaven on the back of a stork," or, in other words, publicly to commit suicide.

Having arrived at this determination, a day was fixed for the ceremony. Early on the fatal morning the lady, dressed as the Queen of Heaven and surrounded by a large following of admiring relatives and friends, started from her late husband's house in a sedan chair for the scene of her self-inflicted death. By the way she visited her parents to bid them farewell, and stopped occasionally on the way to taste the viands which were placed at intervals by the side of the road, as at a funeral. On arriving at an open space at the back of the Hai-chaou Temple she mounted on a scaffolding which had been erected for the purpose, and, having bowed to the vast crowd which had assembled to witness the proceedings, she cried with a loud voice, "Heaven and earth! and my friends! I am quite satisfied to die in this manner."

Having said this, she stepped on to a chair on the platform and thrust her head through the noose of a red cord, which hung suspended from a crossbeam above her. At the same moment a red cloth was placed over her head and face, and then, without the least hesitation, she jumped off the chair. Death was almost instantaneous, and she expired without the least apparent struggle.

Unfortunately the effects of this young lady's self-devotion did not end with her life, for so deep an impression did her conduct make on some boys who had witnessed the spectacle that they amused themselves on the following day by making believe to follow her example. By a misadventure, while one of them was adjusting the rope round his neck, his playmates ran off, and on their return they found that he likewise had "ascended to heaven on the back of a stork."—Pall Mall Gazette.

An Ugly Plaything.

A 4-year-old son of one Riley, living on the old Milford and Oswego turnpike, in Blooming Grove township, this county, came into the house on Saturday last, carrying a rattlesnake. He had one hand clasped tightly about its neck, and the other about its rattles. The mother of the child was terrified, and screamed to the boy to throw the snake on the floor, which he did. It coiled up in a second, and filled the room with the din of its rattles. Mrs. Riley seized the broom, and soon dispatched the serpent. Her little boy cried over the death of his venomous plaything, and said there was more where he got that, and he would go after another one.

Mrs. Riley summoned her husband from an adjoining field. He asked the child to show him where he got the snake. He led the way into the scrub oaks about a quarter of a mile from the road, to a small ledge of rock, in which there were many fissures. There, basking in the sun, the farmer saw dozens of rattle snakes. He took his child in his arm and hurried away from the spot. Procuring the assistance of a hired man, the two, armed with flails, returned to the den. They attacked the serpents, threshing right and left. For five minutes the contest waged, the noise made by the rattles of the snakes being almost deafening. Riley and his man killed twenty-one of the reptiles, and many escaped into the fissures in the rock. Riley's little boy had wandered alone to this dangerous place, and had captured the snake and taken it home. It was two feet and a half long, and had seven rattles.—*Milford (Pa.) Cor. The Campaign Opened.

If you had been around the big Great Western freight depot on Atwater street, at noon yesterday you would have seen the campaign opened. Said a man sitting on a door step to a man leaning against a lamp post:

"What do you think hof the nomination hof 'Aze?"

"I think he ought to eat you," was the reply. "His name isn't Aze any more than your name is Mud."

"Then wot is hit?"

"The right name of the Cincinnati candidate is Hazen Wheeler."

"Hi guess not."

"I guess you are a fool."

"Hi guess there's hother fools haround 'ere, too."

That was the commencement of a rough and tumble fight which covered half a block and destroyed the peace of mind of half a score of men. They might have been fighting yet had not an old man with gray hair announced that both were wrong. He said he had seen the names of the candidates on a flag up town and that they were "Whaze and Heeler."—Free Press.

Longevity of Philadelphians.

The Philadelphia Ledger says that during the first six months of 1876 the deaths contained in the obituary columns of that paper of persons who had lived to or beyond the advanced age of 80 years numbered 380, of whom 138 were men and 242 women. During the corresponding half year of 1875, the deaths were similarly recorded of 155 men and 231 women, a total of 386. During the half year just closed, these records give the usual proof of the observation that more women live to the ripe age of 80 than men, the female octogenarians outnumbering the males by a large percentage. A further analysis also shows that the females were the longest-lived, as the women who lived beyond 90 are much more numerous than the men. Of the number enumerated by the Ledger, Ann Gourley, Ann M'Mullen Floyd, Daniel Bastable and Margaret D. Boggs were over 100 years old; Annia Fareira, 101; and Bernard Duffy, good old fellow, 107.

Female Fire Company.

Whoever heard of a fire brigade manned exclusively by women? There is one at Wellesley College, Massachusetts, for it is believed that, however incombustible the college building may be, the students should be taught how to put out fires in their own homes, and be trained to presence of mind, to familiarity with the thought of what is to be done in case of fire, and to a full realization of the most important fact that any fire can be put out at the beginning. Twenty hand-pumps are distributed throughout the building, each supplemented by six pails filled with water. Every pump has its Captain and company of six girls, one of whom is Lieutenant, and all the companies are drilled at convenient opportunities in handling the pumps, in forming lines, and in passing the pails. The whole organization is officered by a Superintendent and Secretary.

Perfectly Harmless.

A Londoner who lately crossed from Canada to Ogdensburg asked his hack-driver as to the population and form of government of Ogdensburg. On being informed that it was an incorporated city, the chief executive officer of which was a Mayor, he inquired, "And does the Mayor wear the insignia of office?" "Insignia—what's that?" asked the astonished hackman. "Why, a chain about his neck," exclaimed the cockney. "O, bless you, no," responded the other; "he's perfectly harmless, and goes about loose."

ANTI-SLANG SOCIETY.

Heroic Efforts of Young Ladies to Suppress the American Language.

[From the Wheeling Intelligencer.]

The "Reform Club" is the title of a new organization in the West End, organized by young ladies for the purpose of discouraging the use of slang phrases in conversation. At a recent meeting, while a member was addressing the society, she inadvertently made use of the expression "awful nice," and was called to order by a sister member for transgressing the rules.

"In what way have I transgressed?" asked the speaker, blushing deeply.

"You said it would be 'awful nice' to admit young gentlemen to our deliberations," replied the other.

"Well, wouldn't it be?" returned the speaker; "you know you said yourself no longer ago than yesterday that —"

"Yes, I know; but you said 'awful nice.' That's slang."

"Well," said the speaker, tartly, "if you are going to be so awful nice about it, perhaps it is! but I wouldn't say anything if I were you. Didn't you tell Sally Spriggins this morning, to pull down her basque?"

"No, I didn't," retorted the other, her face growing crimson; "and Sallie Spriggins will say I didn't. She won't go back on me."

"This is a nice racket you are giving us," cried the President, after rapping both speakers to order. "Let us ask, what is the object of this society?"

"To discourage slang," cried a dozen voices.

"Kerect," said the President, "go on with the funeral."

A member rose to explain that she had been fined at the last meeting for saying "awful nice" herself, but she hadn't the "stamps to pay it now—would settle, however, in the sweet by and by."

"That'll be all right," said the President, "pay when you have the ducats."

Another member asked if a young lady could say "old splendid" without subjecting herself to a fine.

"You bet she can't," said the President, who was the original founder of the society, and, therefore, appealed to when any nice question was to be decided.

"Then," said the speaker, "I move that Miranda Pew come down with the dust, for I heard her say that her beau was 'just old splendid.'"

Miranda's face was in a blaze as she cried:

"Well, if my beau was such an old hair pin as your fellow is I wouldn't say it."

"Shoot the chinning!" cried the President, "will you never tumble?"

But the confusion was too great to be allayed. Miranda's blood was up; some sided with her, and amid the Babel that followed could be heard such explanations as "dry up," "nice blackberry you are," "wipe off your chin," "hire a hall," etc., when a motion to adjourn was carried by a majority.

In Season.

Tom Harvard kept a gun-shop in the town of Riverside. Tom was a first-class workman, but distressingly dilatory in the dispatch of business. He would meet his patrons with a positive promise, which he would renew month after month, until at length his shop became an armory of unfinished rifles and fowling-pieces. One day his neighbor Smith, who had suffered repeatedly by Tom's habit of procrastination, entered his shop. "Tom," said he, "I want you to make a gun for my little boy—a small, well-finished piece, and as light in the barrel as will be consistent with safety."

"O, yes," said Tom. "I will make it immediately. You shall have it at once. But, by-the-way, how old is the boy?" "Well, as to that," replied Smith, "the boy is not born yet, but I thought I had better get the gun under way."

True Love.

It's an advantage, says the Brooklyn Argus, to beguile your neighbor's servant girl into your own service. A servant girl stores up family secrets as a camel stores up water—for future use. A South Brooklyn domestic recently left the employment of a master and mistress whose domestic relations had long defied the scrutiny of the neighborhood, and moved into a family across the way. One of the first questions which the new mistress asked her was in reference to her late employer.

"Are you sure that they love each other, Mary?"

"O, yis, marm," answered the Irish angel, proud of an opportunity to open her reservoir; "it's swater than honey they are to one another—they do be using the same tooth-brush."

A New Theory of the Custer Retreat.

A new theory of the fight of Gen. Custer's command with the savages on the Little Big Horn is advanced by J. B. Omohundro, more generally known as Texas Jack. He thinks that Gen. Custer must have fallen at the first fire, at the ford, or at least in the first few moments of the firing, and that he was carried off by his men when they retreated. He thinks that the troops retreated as if panic-stricken, going in the direction opposite from that in which Reno was, and dividing into two parties. It is his opinion that had Custer been able to direct the movement of his command, it would have cut its way directly back in a single body toward the other part of the regiment, instead of going from it.—New York Tribune.

A Wooden State.

A model in wood of the State of New Hampshire has been constructed, and is on exhibition at Concord. It is 15 feet in length, while the vertical scale is 1,000 feet to an inch, five times greater than the horizontal scale, in order to make the smaller elevation noticeable. The model is to be colored to show the geology of the State, and will also have township lines, streams, railroads, etc., marked upon it, and will be put in the museum of the Agricultural College at Harvard.

The famous draft horse belonging to the Studebaker Brothers' Manufacturing Company, of South Bend, died recently. It was considered the best draft horse in the State. The heaviest weight ever pulled by it was 5,550 pounds, exclusive of the wagon.

Twenty-four Widows.

Mrs. Gen. Crittenden, of Washington city, mother of Lieut. Crittenden, who was slain with Custer in the massacre of the Little Big Horn, has received a letter from Fort Rice from the widow of one of the officers who perished in the battle. The letter, after a tender expression of condolence with Mrs. Crittenden in her bereavement, describes the scene of anguish at Fort Rice as soon as the boat arrived with the news of the fight. When the awful tidings were disclosed the air was rent, says the writer, with the lamentations and shrieks of twenty-four widows, many of them with wailing children at their skirts. Some of the women thus suddenly afflicted are without money to leave the place where they parted with their husbands for the last time on earth, and others again are without home or place of shelter to go to when they can get away.

A little daughter of the Rev. Andrew Mackie, of Trinity Church, Peru, Ind., kicked her father on the shin, one day last week, and on Sunday he was compelled to sit while "dispensing with the gospel," as Mrs. Partington would say.

At our request Cragin & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., have promised to send any of our readers gratis (on receipt of fifteen cents to pay postage) a sample of Dobbins' Electric Soap to try. Send at once.

The "Housekeeper" of Our Health.

The liver is the great depurating or blood cleansing organ of the system. Set the great housekeeper of our health at work, and the foul corruptions which gender in the blood and rot out, as it were, the machinery of life, are gradually expelled from the system. For this purpose Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with small daily doses of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor, from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch, or eruption. Great, eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence. Virulent blood poisons that lurk in the system are by them robbed of their terrors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted use the most tainted system may be completely renovated and built up anew. Enlarged glands, tumors, and swellings dwindle away and disappear under the influence of their great resolvents. Sold by all dealers in medicines.

"Claude, a child about 3 years old, was greatly afflicted with sores on his legs and feet, so that he could not wear his shoes and stockings. Had a great deal of trouble with him. Had tried many remedies ineffectually. At last we tried the Golden Medical Discovery, and in about three weeks he was entirely cured, his sores were all healed, and health much improved. Respectfully yours, J. W. Boyer.

Chill-Cure!—Safe and Sure.—Dr. Wilhoft's Tonic is curative and protective. It will cure Chills and protect from further attacks. Its reputation is established. Its composition is simple and scientific. It contains no poison. It acts promptly, and its effects are permanent. It is cheap, because it saves doctors' bills. It is harmless, speedy in action, and delightful in its effects. Try it and prove all that's said. G. R. Finlay & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

For sale by all Druggists.

Pimples on the face, rough skin, chapped hands, saltrheum, and all cutaneous affections cured, the skin made soft and smooth, by the use of Juniper Tar Soap. That made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, is the only kind that can be relied on, as there are many imitations, made from common tar, which are worthless.

Malaria, or poisonous air, is the cause of all forms of Ague, Chill Fever, etc. Shallenberger's Antidote destroys this poison in the system, and cures every case promptly. One dose stops the chills, and a perfect cure follows. All this for one dollar.

Henry K. Bond, of Jefferson, Me., was cured of spitting blood, soreness, and weakness of the stomach by the use of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment internally.

Vegetine has never failed to effect a cure of all mercurial diseases.

Many who are suffering from the effects of the warm weather and are debilitated, are advised by physicians to take moderate amounts of whisky two or three times during the day. In a little while those who adopt this advice frequently increase the number of "drinks," and in time become confirmed inebriates. A beverage which will not create thirst for intoxicating liquors, and which is intended especially for the benefit of debilitated persons, whether at home or abroad, is Dr. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic. Containing the juices of many medicinal herbs, this preparation does not create an appetite for the intoxicating cup. The nourishing and the life-supporting properties of many valuable natural productions contained in it, and well known to medical men, have a most strengthening influence. A single bottle of the Tonic will demonstrate its valuable qualities. For debility arising from sickness, over exertion, or from any cause whatever, a wine-glassful of Sea Weed Tonic taken after meals will strengthen the stomach and create an appetite for wholesome food. To all who are about leaving their homes, we desire to say that the excellent effects of Dr. Schenck's seasonable remedies, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, are particularly evident when taken by those who are injuriously affected by a change of water and diet. No person should leave home without taking a supply of these safeguards along. For sale by all Druggists.

Public Report

—OF A—

POLICEMAN.

I have not enjoyed good health for several years past, yet have not allowed it to interfere with my labor. Every one knows the [illegible] convenience of being obliged to labor when the body, from debility, almost refuses to perform its daily task. [illegible] VEGETINE [illegible]

HEARTFELT PRAYER.

St. Paul, Aug. 28, 1874.

H. R. Stevens, Esq.:

Dear Sir—I should be wanting in gratitude, if I failed to acknowledge what the VEGETINE has done for me. I was attacked about [illegible] months since with Bronchitis, which settled into Consumption. I had night sweats and fever chills; was distressed for breath, and frequently spit blood; was emaciated, very weak, and so low that my friends thought my case hopeless. I was advised to make a trial of the VEGETINE, which, under the providence of God, has cured me. That He may bless the use of your medicine to others, as He has to me, and that His divine grace may attend you, is the heartfelt prayer of your admiring, humble servant, BENJAMIN PETTINGILL.

P. S.—Mine is but one among the many cures your medicine has effected in this place. B. P.

Recommend it Heartily.

South Boston, Feb. 7, 1870.

Mr. Stevens:

Dear Sir—I have taken several bottles of your VEGETINE and am convinced it is a valuable remedy for Dyspepsia, Kidney Complaint, and General Debility of the system.

I can heartily recommend it to all suffering from the above complaints.

Yours respectfully,

Mrs. MONROE PARKER, 386 Athens street.

"THE VIBRATOR"

1000 SOLD LAST SEASON WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION.

This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of Grain, so inevitable with other styles of Thresher, can be SAVED by these Improved Machines, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1876, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, while others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz: our Improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

All Goods Retailed at Wholesale Pric

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. The impor has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and whol sale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prune Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these inter mediatem profits. No middlemen with us. The Two Parties. Their Financial Record.

The voters of Indiana will not have much trouble in making up their minds as to the position of the two great political parties on the supject of finance. There is a consistant record on this subject' in the votes on the financial measures in Congress, in the national platforms of the parties, and in letters of acceptance of the candidates for the presidency. The Contraction and Resumption Bill of Sherman, the paternity of which is claimed by Morton, who says that he labored for six years to have a day for resumption fixed, was a Republican party measure. It was voted for and passed by a Republican Congress, signed by a Republican president. It was pending before Congress a long while, and upon every vote and upon the final passage it was voted against by the Democrats. It was declared in Congress again and again that it was a party measure, and that the party would stand by it and take no step backward. Upon the assembling of the present Democratic House, among the first bills offered were several by Democrats in favor of a repeal of the Sherman measure. Again and again during the winter, spring and summer has the subject come up in one shops or another, testing the sense of the House upon this question, and invariably there were found enough Republicans against the measure to prevent its coming to direct vote.

While it is true that there were some Democrats voting against repeal, put a large per cent, of the Democratic vote was for it, while but a very short per cent, of Republicans voted with them. In the final vote by which the repeal passed the House, of the 106 ayes there were only 11 Republicans, while of the 86 nays 57 were Rnpublicans, showing that nearly four fifths of the Democrats voted for repeal and one fifth against it, while more than five-sixths of the Republicans opposed it to one-sixth favoring the repeal.

The platforms of the two parties are explicit on this subject, at least the Democratic platform demands repeal while the Republican platform says nothing about it, leaving the country to conclude that the party adheres to their record, and will take no step backward.

The letters of acceptance likewise define the states of the candidates in harmony with the record of the respective parties in Congress and their conventons. The letters of Tilden and Hendricks both demand a repeal of the resumption clause of the Sherman bill, while Hayes and Wheeler adhere to the Republican policy of forcing resumption with nothing to pay with, and without making any rational preparation for it.

This showing must command the earnest attention of all the voters of the country, who have opposed the ruinous system of contraction that has brought distress and buisness oppression everywhere. They can only find relief through the Democrttic party, and they will vote accordingly.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C. Aug. 6, 1876.

DEAR COURIER—The Resumption Act repealed, the school question forever settled, and the Republicans down in the mouth, is the result of the work of the Democratic House, for the last week. The first in order was the amendment to the constitution proposed by Blaine, which was amended, and now reads as follows:

"No State Courts make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the public schools, or derived from any public fund therefore, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect or denomination; nor shall any money so raised or lands so devoted be divided between religious sects or denomination. This article shall not vest, enlarge, or diminish legislative power in the Congress."

There were but five dissenting votes in the House on its passage, showing conclusively that the Democracy have been and are now in favor of our great public school intrests What will Ohio do now, that they cannot carry this question into their campaigns. Had the Democrats been in power last Congress and had passed this amendment, Hayes would never have been elected Governor, nor nominated for president, a very small hinge upon which to aspire to that office, yet about the only claim he had in fact.

The next in order was the repeal of the odious Resumption Act, a creature of Radical misrule, which was opposing our people, destroying our energies and paralizing our industries. Thank God, that has been removed by a Democratic House. That in itself should be sufficient reward for the people in placing it in power. Kasson, of Iowa, the leader of the Republicans, now since Blaine is gone, fought streunously against it, but it was not a good day for Kasson, but for the people, and the right prevailed. This is in accordance with the principles of the Democratic party as set forth in the St. Louis platform. While the party is, and has always been in favor of a hard currency, it does not propose to bring this about by bankrupting the country. Let us return to it as soon as we can, but not over the wreck and ruin of our business interests. It has really had great influence in prostrating the business of the country. See the imfeverish condition of things on every hand. Small Villages, and thriving towns once alive and bustling with business, are now dead and inactive. The poor can hardly get sufficient to, support his family. There is no demand for work and yet many are begging for it. The business man stands out in the morning with but little encouragement that the evening will bring him his merited reward. The mechanic goes to work with a heavy heart, fearing a reduction in wages or a total discharge. The farmer, he who is regarded at all times as independent, feels the depressing influence and gathers his harvest and looks longingly forward for better times. A year or two ago it was thought the terrible condition of affairs had reached their lowest limit, and that they could grow no worse. But hope after hope has died away, and a constant stream of pain and hard times has followed instead, still crushing the oppressed people down to still greater want and misery. Bad legislation and a corrupt administration have brought about this state of things, and there can be no charge until this great source of our evils is changed by the will of the people.

The letters of acceptance of Tilden and Hendricks are flatteringly received here. I judge not only from the expressions made on all sides, but also from the tone of the papers here. The "Republican," the most radical sheet I ever read, says: "Tilden's letter has been long-a-coming, and it will take a longer time to read it," and that is the hardest thing it could bring itself to utter. The "Chronicle" is dumb, and this may be regarded as complimentary as they indulge in the vilest abuse where they can.

Tildens letters have a hearty ring, a statesmanlike breath, a fullness of detail, an arressive tone, and a decided and definite policy, in all which respects it differs from the timid and faltering letter of Mr. Hayes.

The entire accord of the two letters gives additional power in the campaign It was thought by our enemies that Hendricks views would not harmonize with Tilden, and they have been disappointed. The Democrats are united, the Resumption act has been repealed, in the House, and we march to victory.

The "bloody shirt" is bound to wave again, as I can see desperate efforts is being made to hold on to the issues of war, and thereby ignore the great object of reform, for if they acknowledge that reform is necessary, they must necessarily admit a corrupt administration. A grand flourish will be made, then, to influence the soldiers vote. The Republican platform presages this. It says:

"The pledges which the nation has given to our soldiers and soldiers must be fulfilled; a greatful people will always hold those who periled their lives for the country's preservation in the kindest remembrance."

Well, now, let us look how this question stands with the two Houses. The Democratic House passed the soldiers bounty bill some two months ago, and it has been lying in the Senate ever since, where it will finally be buried. This bill provides that every soldier shall receive 8⅓ dollars a month for every month he served, whether for a short or long time, all bounties already paid to be deducted. The object of this bill is to reward the veteran soldiers as well as those who enlisted late in the war. And yet a Republican Senate has ignored this claim of the soldier, and this is the way they hold them in "grateful remembrance." Again, the House passed a bill giving the widow of the gallant Custer a pension of $50 per month. The Senate kindly cut it down to $30 per month, and this is they way they keep their pledges. How long will the soldiers be hoodwinked by such pledges as these. Come down here and go through these departments and see how many soldiers you will find in easy employment in comparison with the whole number. I was told by a captain and a Republican, who was in the department, that out of 6,000 employees, there was not a thousand genuine soldiers to be found among them. And where female clerks are employed hundreds of them never had a relation in the union army. The whole service is so debased that any pretty young lady with good form and stylish ways can much more readily get a position than a deserving union widow who may have a family to support. Why this is so, is easily conjectured. I was told of a case the other day. In one of the departments it was necessary to cut down the number of clerks. A poor widow, of a union soldier, with four children was discharged, while a handsome young lady, whose father was a rebel was retained because she had "friends." The Republican love for the soldiers is the [illegible] practiced in this city. Judge Holman has used his influence to get more union soldiers positions than any radical in Congress. Yet they will plant the "bloody shirt" talk about rebels and their love for the soldiers. Out upon such hypocritical, contemptible pretensions.

I had the pleasure of visiting a garden concert the other evening, at one of the "bon ton" families in the suburbs. I received an invitation through Mr. Ely, of New York, as a member of the press no plebeans being admitted. The reigning "lionne" this season is Senorita Cervantes, an exceedingly beautiful Spanish lady, who plays marvelously on the harp; she gave a concert, a short time since, under the auspices of Madam Mantella, which was a very delightful and eminently successful affair. As the fair musician, in her robe of white satin, frosted over with lace, sat at her harp, sweeping storms or whispers of music from its strings, at her will, she looked like the romance of the ancient Spain. Her jewels were very elegant, and one portion of them—her sleeve-loops—quaint and unique in the extreme; they were made of the medals bestowed upon her by foreign societies, and in the center of them burned a great diamond, that gleamed and palpitated with every movement of the "linda Senorita." There were over a thousand guests. The Army and Navy were admirably represented, and the scene with its hundred pretty features was perfect. Gay decorations, tiny flags, small flags, medium sized buntings and great banners rose and fell in the air, the sparkle of bright eyes, the hum of mirthful voices, the glitter of gems, the evening light caught the reflection in every shade from the rich toilettes, and the Summer sunshine filtering through the trees, darting its golden spears into the gathering shadows and bringing the whole bright picture out in bold relief on a gold background of its own.

They do not have many of these affairs but when they do, they get them up without regard to cost. While I looked upon the beautiful scene I could not but remember that hundreds of poor fellows were truging their weary way along the streets, perhaps their families in want for something to eat, while all this indulgence of luxury was going on. The thought was painful.

I think this will be my last letter for this session, and I am glad of it, not that the task of writing them has been irksome, for I will be more than repaid if I have in the least entertained but because I want to get out of this city into God's own country. And then I want to see Bro. Weamer so bad.

SONG OF THE TURTLE AND FLAMINGO.

BY JAMES T. FIELDS.

A lively young turtle lived down by the banks
Of a dark-rolling stream called the Jingo,
And one summer day, as he went out to lay,
Fell in love with a charming flamingo—
An enormously genteel flamingo!
An expansively crimson flamingo!
A beautiful, bounding flamingo!

Spake the turtle in tones like a delicate wheeze:
"To the water I've oft seen you in go,
And your form has impressed itself deep on my shell,
You perfectly modeled flamingo!
You uncommonly brilliant flamingo!
You tremendously 'A one' flamingo!
You inex-pres-si-ble flamingo!

To be sure I'm a turtle, and you are a belle,
And my language is not your fine lingo;
But smile on me, tall one, and be my bright flame,
You miraculous, wondrous flamingo!
You blazingly beauteous flamingo!
You turtle-absorbing flamingo!
You inflammably gorgeous flamingo!"

Then the proud bird blushed redder than ever before,
And that was quite un-nec-ces-sa-ry,
And she stood on one leg and looked out of one eye,
The position of things for to vary—
This aquatical, musing flamingo!
This dreamy, uncertain flamingo!
This embarrassing, harassing flamingo!

Then she cried to the quadruped, greatly amazed;
"Why your passion toward me do you hurtle?
I'm an ornithological wonder of grace,
And you're an illogical turtle!
A waddling, impossible turtle!
A low-minded, grass-eating turtle!
A highly improbable turtle!"

Then the turtle sneaked off with his nose to the ground,
And never more looked at the lasses;
And falling asleep, while indulging his grief,
Was gobbled up whole by Agassiz—
The peripatetic Agassiz!
The turtle-dissecting Agassiz!
The illustrious, industrious Agassiz!

Go with me to Cambridge some cool, pleasant day,
And the skeleton-lover I'll show you;
He's in a hard case, but he'll look in your face,
Pretending (the rogue!) he don't know you!
Oh, the deeply deceptive young turtle!
The double-faced, glassy-cased turtle!
The green, but a very mock-turtle!

WARNED OF A WARNING.

If the reader who has this page before his eyes be one of those who will believe only what they understand, or who—because some impostors, pretending to deal with the supernatural, have been exposed—treat with ridicule the idea that spirits can or will interpose in the affairs of mortals here below, let him skip the whole article, and go on to the next. He will have a very good dime's worth without it. To the more tolerant I would explain that I tell this tale as it was told to me, suppressing real names and altering the scene, according to a promise I have made. I will not attempt to account for anything. The main facts were narrated by a person sane in mind and strong of body—a man of singularly truthful disposition. The sequel I witnessed with my own eyes, so you may be quite sure that you will not come across the old familiar "dodge" of making wonders turn out to be "the baseless fabric of a vision."

In the year 1864, when I first met Frank Conroy, he was a handsome, brave, simple-minded boy. Eleven years later I saw him again. He was a great deal bigger, but very little changed. The same dark-brown curly hair with a glint of red in it, the same laughing blue eyes, the same almost-girlish smile, the same contempt for all that was mean or cruel; only he didn't burst out crying now when touched by such things. He stood six-feet-one in his rowing shoes, and I would just as soon have a mule kick me as feel the full weight of his arm. A gentle giant, this Frank Conroy, with fair abilities, good prospects, a happy home, troops of friends, and the sweetest girl in Virginia loving him with all her heart. This was Annie Annesley, the only daughter of a planter whose fortunes had survived the ravages of the civil war, and who lived in a grand old house on the James river, some fifty miles above Richmond. Her mother had died when she was a child. Annie was petite, of course, or she would not have had big Frank at her tiny feet; and there was a roundness and softness about the lower part of her face which appeared to be of the wax-doll order until you had taken in her eyes and brow. I say "taken in," because they grew upon you. She was not a reigning belle, however. Frank snapped her up as soon as she came out—that was one reason. She did not consider dancing the German as the end and object of existence; and she carried too many guns for the beaux of the period—that was another. There were ups and downs, in and outs, in the characters of this pair which favored the forging of an excellent weld when the great hammer-man, Love, should place them, all aglow, on his anvil. At first big Frank was indolent, little Annie ambitious; he was realistic, she romantic; he somewhat too easy-going to keep off foes, she somewhat too given to cynicism to gain friends. In a short time they began to rub off each others' angles, and to fill up each others' deficiencies. He was 21, and she 18, and they were to be married as soon as he had taken his degree.

In all sorts of athletic contests and exercises he had already graduated with the highest honors. In public little Annie rather discouraged these pursuits, but her heart glowed with delight when the Harvard boat dashed first under the string, and No. 3, the Captain, was carried out of it in triumph. She tore her pretty lace handkerchief into shreds during the first laps of the three-mile foot-race, as the runner who wore her colors on his great heaving chest appeared only fifth in the contest. She couldn't bear to see him beaten; and when at last he put on his spurt and went through his men like a rocket, her heart beat faster than his own. At the time when this account commences he was in training for another great boat-race, and reading hard too; for your rowing man can be a good book-worker if he please.

Now staying on a visit at the home of your betrothed is both useful and charming; useful, because it gives you an insight into her character which is not to be gained out in society; and charming—well, there is no need to elaborate that cause. But it does not conduce to close study. St. Anthony himself could not keep his eyes on his book when the Father of Evil took the shape of a pretty woman—to whom, by-the-by, he was not engaged; so how can you expect that a warm-hearted young fellow from Harvard could work in the presence of his lady-love? Why did he not lock himself up in his room? He did, but what was the use? If she went about singing, as was her wont, he listened, and Plato might reason as he pleased unattended to. If she was silent, he (big Frank, not Plato) wondered what she was doing, and Orestes raved in vain. The only chance for work was when she went away from house and grounds visiting some neighbors; and this, when she knew the consequences, she did as often as she could. She was proud of her lover, and wanted him to take a good degree.

These absences generally lasted till luncheon-time; but one day she came down to breakfast in her riding-habit, and told him she was going to see the Melvilles. Seeing the Melvilles meant a ride, out and home, of two-and-twenty miles.

"Mayn't I go with you?" he asked.

"No, sir. You have been shamefully idle lately; besides, I have lots of things to say to Janey" (her chief bride-maid elect), "and you would be in the way. You need not expect to see me again till dinner," she replied.

Seven o'clock was their usual dinner-time. Frank improved the shining hours—read till noon, then he took a brisk walk till 2, then he read till 5, then, like a wise man, he put away his books, and packed up what he had learned into his brain.

It was autumn, when the twilight comes soon and quickly deepens into night. The time slipped away, as it will do when one's mind is busy, and when Annie came into the room, dressed for the evening, he was quite surprised.

"Back again so soon! and dressed already!" he exclaimed, rising to greet her; but she moved away from him toward the window, and stood there silent, gazing into the rapidly deepening twilight.

"Frank dear," she said, after a pause, "I want to warn you about something."

"All right; go on," he replied, again advancing.

"No, do not come near me. Stay where you are. Do not be surprised if some day you see a lady in your room."

"A lady!"

"Who will be there," she continued, not heeding his interruption, "for no light purpose. If she should speak to you, take good heed of what she says, for—for the sake of her who loves you."

"Why not say 'for my sake?'"

"Well, then, for my sake."

"And who is this mysterious counselor?"

"Never mind."

"Oh, but I do mind. If there is anything I hate, it is the idea of any one coming between you and me. When I have something to say to you, I say it right out, and I want you to do the same. Is this person a friend?"

"A great friend."

"Then introduce us, and let us all three talk it over, whatever it is; or, better still, hear what she has to say, and tell me yourself."

"We can not always manage that such things as these should come exactly as we wish," she answered, in a low, sad voice.

"No; but don't you think, Annie, that my receiving a lady in my room is not as good an arrangement as could be made?"

"I told you not to be surprised if she came. I did not say positively that she would come."

"If she does come, it will be with your consent?"

"She could not do so without."

"Then you won't be jealous?" he asked, without a smile.

"There will be no cause for jealousy."

"You seem to be in a very strange humor to-day, dear."

"Why do you think that?"

"Your voice and manner are changed. Are you ill, darling? Is—"

"Stay where you are," she again interrupted, motioning him back to his seat. "This will pass. Let us say no more on the subject. Give me your solemn promise that you will not say another word about it—only remember."

"Well, dear, I think that is the very best thing I can do, for really—"

"Promise."

"I promise—there! And now—"

"No, you shall not move. Let me go. I will come down again in a few minutes. Be a good boy, Frank, and let me have my way."

He turned round, half vexed, to put away his notes, and when he looked up again she was gone.

He kept his promise, and he had his reward. Annie was even more than usually bright and loving all the rest of that evening. The next day passed as usual, and on the next but one there was a picnic, which would not have ended as pleasantly as it began but for big Frank. Returning by the light of the moon, the negro coachman (who had taken more champagne heel-taps than conduced to careful driving) managed to put the two off wheels of the carriage which contained the Annesley party into the ditch at a turn in the road where the horses could not get a straight pull at it, and ten miles from home! Frank just lifted the whole thing out bodily—Annie and all; for (as he said with one of his cheery laughs) "You don't weigh any thing." Then he drove them home, leaving Sambo to sober himself by a walk.

"I wonder if Samson was much stronger than you are?" said Annie, as he kissed her good-night, looking up, full of love and pride, into his handsome face.

"Poor old Samson! His strength did not do him much good, after all," he laughed.

"Oh, Frank! It saved his country, and helped him to a glorious end. I think there is nothing in history so splendid as the retribution he worked on his persecutors—crushing them in the hour of triumph, with the temple of their false gods."

"The muff! he should have gone outside and pushed," said prosaic Frank.

When he opened the door of the room he found that the lamp was alight. This was unusual, for he always had lit it himself. There were French windows on two sides of this chamber opening into the gallery. Two faced him as he entered; the other pair were hidden by the bed and its mosquito bar. They were all wide open; for he loved fresh air, and laughed colds to scorn. It was almost as light as day. The full moon filled the veranda with its soft, silvery beams, and the dark evergreens below were ablaze with fire-flies; a night which tempts one to do anything but go to bed. Frank took off his coat and boots, made himself comfortable in the rocking-chair, filled a big pipe with perique, and thought he would read a little, as he had passed an idle day. As he rose to get his book he heard a gentle tap at the Venetian blinds outside. Flying moths, blundering after a light, as is their wont, make such noises; so he did not notice it. After a moment or two it was repeated louder, and a woman's voice said,

"May I come in?"

Now by this time he had forgotten all about the visit he might possibly receive, but was not surprised when a lady walked in without waiting for an answer. It does not take long to say "May I come in?" yet as she spoke those few words the whole of his conversation with Annie on the day before yesterday came back to his mind.

"You are not surprised at this invasion?" asked his visitor. She was apparently about 30 years of age; tall, slight, and elegantly dressed. A lace-edged handkerchief was loosely knotted round her throat, and in her hand she carried a common palmetto fan. She spoke in that sub-tone of assertion which a well-bred woman of her age has generally acquired without knowing how, and shoddy folk labor after in vain all their lives. Grant that a stranger could adopt this mode of presenting herself—and had not Annie told him that she might?—and nothing could be more natural.

Frank replied that he was not a bit surprised, and advanced his best chair, which she declined.

"No, thanks," she said, leaning one hand against the side of the window space, and fanning herself. "I won't come in any farther. Do you sit down and listen to what I have to say. I won't keep you long. Oh! you may smoke. I don't mind that in the least. But I insist! I will not say a word till you have made four good puffs. That is right. One—two—three—four; now for it."

Frank began to feel that he must have known this lady for several years, so completely did she put him at his ease.

"Don't you think," she continued, "that when a man is engaged to be married, it is high time for him to leave off playing like a boy?"

"Certainly it is."

"That's right. All the running and rowing and jumping is well enough in its way. It makes boys men; but it makes men just a little bit coarse—at least that is my view."

"May I ask if Annie shares that opinion?"

"Let us leave her out of this discussion. She knows nothing about it."

"And yet she prepared me for this—pleasure," said Frank, dryly.

"Never mind. I repeat, she knows nothing about my present object. If she did, I am afraid she would not much assist me, for she is proud of her great athlete. I am old enough to be her mother, and" (with a bright smile) "am not in love with you, so I can talk sense. Now, really, what is there worth winning that you have not already won? Why risk defeat?"

"I am not afraid of that."

"The confidence of the man! Well, I'll put it another way. Why not give some one else a chance? Do you think it is fair to monopolize all the glory and silver cups? You greedy giant!"

This shot went home. Frank despised "pot-hunters." Was he a pot-hunter himself?

"There, I see you are coming round," his visitor resumed, pursuing her advantage. "Promise me that you will stick to your books like a good boy, take a splendid degree, and give up rowing and all that sort of thing, once and forever."

"Would it be indiscreet to inquire whom I have been so fortunate as to inspire with such a deep interest in my affairs?"

"Ah! do not be sarcastic. You can not tell how it pains me," she said. He looked up, and felt a power of tender, sad pleading which quite subdued his impulse to resent her interference. "I have no right, I know," she continued, "to ask this promise for myself. I am nothing to you; but I love Annie—oh! how fondly! I plead for her, and this I say, solemnly, Frank Conroy; if your affection be as deep as she deserves it should be, you will not hesitate. Man, man, what is success in a game, that you should prefer it to the happiness of the woman you love?"

"You seem in earnest."

"I am in earnest."

"Well, I'll talk it over with her."

"Think it over by yourself first," said his visitor, after a pause, during which she seemed to be struggling with something she wished to add, and dared not. "And if you can not resolve—as I pray you may—then you can tell her what has passed to-night. Good-by. God bless and guide you!" She kissed her hand to him, and passed out into the bright moonlight.

"I ought to have thanked her, anyhow," he mused, when she had gone. "What an unmannerly dog she'll think me! She's not far wrong. I ought to give other fellows a turn, and I'm not sure whether a lighter man at No. 3—Well, I'll sleep on it. Who the deuce can she be?"

Who the deuce can she be? was the question which filled his mind when he woke—much earlier than usual—in the morning, and diligent inquiries made of all the servants about failed to satisfy it.

Should he ask Annie? No; he was a little piqued with Annie. It was absurd to suppose that these two were not in concert. And how unfair to make him promise not to speak of what should pass, and then send this person to lecture him! True, he had "this person's" permission to talk it over with Annie if he could not make up his mind to follow her advice; but he had done so, and there was an end of that part of the case. He had made a sacrifice much against the grain, and therefore—man like—he hedged by getting cross with a woman.

He wandered about from his room to another, fretting, fidgeting, unsettled. He tried to read. He opened one book, and it was too heavy; another, and it was too flippant. He went out into the garden, and the chirruping of the birds annoyed him. He returned to the house and made for Mr. Annesley's study. His host was an early riser, and he wanted some one to talk to. Mr. Annesley was not down yet. On his table lay a black leather case, with silver clasps, that Frank had not noticed before. He undid the clasps and opened it. It contained a photograph of the woman who had visited him the night before.

"Now I can find out all about you," he chuckled, "without breaking any promise." As he gazed at the picture, and took in its details, a recollection arose which puzzled him. Man as he was, he remembered that his visitor's dress, though of costly materials and in excellent taste, was made in a fashion which had long since gone out. The dress of the picture was in the same style. How was this? As he mused, Annie tripped in, gay and bright as ever, and he laid a soft little hand on his shoulder.

"Up so early?" she cried gayly. Then, as she saw what he held, her face became suddenly sad.

"Whose likeness is this?" he asked, not noticing the change.

"Poor, dear mamma's," she replied, with a sob. Then his heart gave a great bound, and a cold, sickening stupor fell upon him.

"Annie, dear," he said, when, after a mighty effort, he regained some command over his suspense (she, poor child, only thought he was sharing her sorrow, which the sight of that loved and long-lost face had awakened), "you must give me back my promise."

"What promise?"

"That I made you the day you rode over to see the Melvilles."

"I don't remember your promising anything that day. What was it?"

"To remind you would be half breaking it. Surely you can not have forgotten?"

"Let me see. You read me 'How Santa Claus came to Simpson's Bar' out of Bret Harte, and pretended that it did not make you cry."

"That was after dinner."

"In the morning you and papa were talking about fishing, and I listened."

"It was not in the morning or in the evening that I made you that promise, Annie. It was in the twilight, when you returned from your ride."

"Why, Frank! I went straight up to my room. It was so late I had hardly time to change my things. I never saw you from the time you mounted me at 11 o'clock, till when we met at dinner. What are you dreaming about? Oh, Frank darling! what is the matter? Are you ill?"

Again the cold, sickening stupor ran through him, and he fell forward over the table, speechless.

I, who tell this story, was a surgeon in the navy, and spending a short leave of absence as a visitor in the house where the scenes I have attempted to describe took place. Annie's shrieks called her father, who called me, and, between us, we restored poor Frank to consciousness. I did not like the look of this seizure, but said nothing. No one consulted me. Still I watched him closely, and at breakfast, when the mail-bag came in, and he read his correspondence, I noticed that he received a second shock.

That afternoon he called me into his own room, and told me what had happened to him, almost as it is worded here. He had evidence (acquired since morning) which proved beyond the possibility of doubt that Annie was miles away from the house when what he took for her spoke to him in the library. I heard him out, and made the usual reply. He had been dreaming—his nerves were out of order.

"They are now," he said; "but suppose any one had asked you about them the day before yesterday, what would you have said?"

Had I been obliged to reply, I must have admitted that a less nervous person, in the sense of being likely to give way to delusions, could hardly be found, but he did not wait for an answer, and went on:

"As for dreaming, that is—excuse me, doctor—absurd. I was wide-awake on Tuesday evening, and I did not go to bed for an hour at least after my visitor left me on Thursday night. Now let us consider the surroundings. I was warned of a warning! Warned in the kindest, gentlest manner. Why? If I had been unprepared for the second manifestation, it would have startled, shocked me. Why was I—a hale, strong man, as you and all the rest thought me—to be guarded against a shock? Why was I to be turned from pursuits which you and all the rest would have said yesterday had made me so hale and so strong, by supernatural means? Read that."

He handed me a letter—the one he had read at breakfast. It was from the Secretary of a life-insurance company, thanking him for the preference he had shown the society, but declining his proposal.

"The week before last," he continued, "I was examined by their medical officer—as a matter of form, they said. He measured me round the chest, and tapped and stethoscoped me, and this is the result."

"Insurance companies have all sorts of crotchets—" I began.

"Doctor," he interrupted, quietly taking off his coat and vest, and slipping the brace off his left shoulder, "you know as well as I do what it means. There is something wrong—awfully wrong—here" (placing his hand on his heart). "That is why I was warned against a surprise; that is why my poor darling's dead mother conjured me to avoid violent sports; that is why the insurance company rejected me; that is why I confide in you. Now tell me the truth."

I placed my ear to his side, and took three different soundings. Then I told him, as carelessly as I could, that I had no stethoscope with me, and he was too agitated just then for a fair examination. "I'll see if I can't borrow some tools," I said, "and see you to-morrow morning, when you will be more composed."

"As you will," he replied; "but you are mistaken about composure. I shall never be more composed than I am at this moment."

"How can you say so, after your attack only a few hours ago?" I asked.

"That is all over. I know all now."

"Tush!" I sneered, trying to get out of my difficulty by appearing impatient. "You know absolutely nothing."

"All right, doctor," he said, with one of his bright smiles, and resuming his coat; "I admit it. I don't know how I breathe or how I swallow. I don't know how I was born or what will happen to make me die. I don't know why I wink an eye when a grain of dust comes along in the air. But I do breathe and swallow. I have been born and I shall die; and somehow the grain of dust will be caught on my eyelash. I don't know why these visitations have come to me; but they have come, doctor, and for a reason. Look me in the face, and tell me that I have a sound heart."

I could not do it.

"So farewell," he went on, cheerfully, "a long farewell to all the old fun. 'Othello's occupation's gone.'"

"And he will settle down into a quiet married man," I added, to humor him; but his face darkened.

"Do you think I am justified—" he began. "But you shall answer me that to-morrow."

"I hope you have not said anything about this to Miss Annesley?" I asked, after a pause.

"God forbid!"

"But she must have guessed that something was wrong when you spoke to her about that promise."

"Perhaps she did for the moment, but my fainting fit—I couldn't help it, doctor—put it out of her mind. If she returns to the subject, I shall get round it somehow. Of course I may rely upon your silence."

"Are you two going to waste all the day up there?" cried Annie, from the garden. "Come down, Frank; I want you to help me cut some flowers."

He joined her, and I stood watching them from the gallery. To-morrow I would tell him what I knew too well already. There was indeed something awfully wrong with his heart. And who would have thought it, to look at him? He seemed the very picture of health; but the last ten minutes of the foot-race, the last fifty strokes of the oar, when the spirit forced the flesh to more than mortal doing, had done their silent work. I should have to tell him to be very, very careful. I should be able to comfort him by saying that men as badly off as he was had made old bones, and died in their beds, at last, of something else. I stood rehearsing how this was to be told when I heard Annie's voice again.

"No, not that one; it's too full blown. There is a lovely bud a little higher up. No, no, you stupid great fellow; there, to your right."

They were standing under a climbing rose bush, and she was pointing to a spot about a yard over his head. Standing on tiptoe, he could just touch the stem of the coveted flower, but not hold it, and of course it bobbed from his fingers.

"If you jump you can catch it," said Annie.

As she spoke he sprang, seized the rose (which was pulled down by his weight), and fell against the fence upon which the bush was trained.

"Oh, how awkward you are to-day," Annie cried. "Well, why don't you break it off and give it to me?"

The next moment he slid to the ground at her feet—DEAD!

The champion athlete of his day was killed in a struggle with a rose-bud.—Harper's Bazar.

A Terrible Thunderbolt.

The Greeley (Col.) Tribune gives the following particulars of a terrible casualty by lightning: Last Sunday afternoon about 3:30 o'clock, lightning struck Mr. Gifford's ranch house, nearly thirty miles down the Platte, on the north shore. Mr. Gifford had gone from the house on horseback, leaving Mr. Humphrey, aged about 25, Mrs. Humphrey, aged 22, and a hired man named Alonzo Woodson, aged 22, from Missouri. A storm was coming up, and when near Mr. Girardeau's place, about a mile distant, he heard a terrible crash, and looking back he saw the house on fire. He went back immediately, and Mr. Girardeau followed so soon as he saddled a horse, and he reached the place in time to give assistance. The house was now all in a flame and no one could enter, but the siding was torn off, and, the smoke escaping, Mr. Humphrey and his wife were discovered on a lounge covered with flame. It would appear that they had been startled by previous thunder claps, and that she, as is natural to women, was frightened, and he had put his left arm around her as if to protect her, and so firmly were the muscles of his arm fixed in death that it was necessary to bring them both out of the house together, and they were buried together, a separation being impossible. Mr. Woodson was found in the back room. All were burned black, and in places red, and almost beyond recognition, but an imprint was made by the embroidery of her chemise on her breast, which was burned but little, and a lock of her long hair was preserved and given to her friends, having probably fallen on his arm, and this arm was but little burned. His legs were burned off up to his knees.

The Present War Long in Contemplation by the Sioux.

The present war has been in contemplation by the Sioux for a long time. Charles Jones, of Washington city, states that in 1872 he was in charge of the Flathead tribe of Indians in Montana. In the spring of that year, two of the tribe having spent the winter in Sitting Bull's camp hunting buffaloes, returned to the Flathead agency and called upon Mr. Jones, giving much interesting detail in regard to the intentions of the Sioux. Among other things they said that runners had been dispatched to all the neighboring tribes, inviting their attendance at a general council for the purpose of declaring war against the whites. Sitting Bull, who was then and there directing these movements, had with him a very talented white man, a Mexican, whom the Indians know by the name of Frank, who was a desperate fellow, and conversant with the English, Spanish, French and German languages, besides speaking, in addition, all the various dialects of the Sioux. Everything seen and subsequently related by the two Indians indicated war on an extensive scale. Frank, the white man alluded to, had quite a lot of manuscript papers taken by Sitting Bull from the whites on various occasions, and was then acting as a kind of private secretary to him, and had great influence over him in all his movements and determinations. This man is believed to be one of the white men, if not the principal one, who assisted Sitting Bull in his operations during the Custer massacre, and is supposed to be the presiding genius over the movements on the field.

It is given on the authority of a New Orleans paper that there is in that city a hog with its ears so far back that he cannot hear himself squeal.

THE NIGHT-WIND.

BY THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH.

At a lonely inn among the pines
I sit alone in the firelight's glow,
Losing myself in the backlog's mines,
And hearing the night-wind come and go.

And now it threatens, and now it grieves,
Pleads at the lintel, or slams a blind;
Now it prowls, sullen, about the eaves—
This protean, bitter autumn wind.

Fiercely it swoops on the doorside yew,
As a vulture drops upon its prey;
And now in the throat of the sooty flue
I hear it howl, like a beast at bay.

Now it flies shrieking across the downs,
And now, like a ghost, it whispers me
Of people starving to death in towns,
And of wrecks a thousand leagues at sea.

WASHINGTON A FARMER.

Letter to His Farm Manager.

DECEMBER 10, 1799.

From the various plans suggested by you at different times for cropping the farms, which I propose to retain in my own hands, in the year 1800, and with a reduced force of laborers on them and the operations necessary to carry them into effect; comparing these with the best reflection I have been able to make on the subject, and considering, moreover, the exhausted state of my arable fields, and how important it is to adopt some system by which the evil may be arrested, and the fields in some measure restored by a rotation of crops, which will not press hard upon them, while sufficient intervals are allowed for improvement; I have digested the following instructions for my managers, and for the government of my overseers, and request that they may be strictly and pointedly attended to and executed, as far as the measures therein required will admit.

A system closely pursued, although it may not in all its parts be the best that could be devised, is attended with innumerable advantages. The conductor of the business, in this case, can never be in any dilemma in his proceedings. The overseers, and even the laborers, know what is to be done, and what they are capable of doing, in ordinary seasons. The force to be employed may be in due proportion to the work which is to be performed, and a reasonable and tolerably accurate estimate may be made of the product. But when no plan is fixed, when directions flow from day to day, the business becomes a mere chaos, frequently shifting, and sometimes at a stand, for want of knowing what to do, or the manner of doing it. Thus it occasions a waste of time, which is of more importance than is generally imagined.

Nothing can so effectually obviate the evil as an established system, made known to all who are actors in it, that all may be enabled thereby to do their parts to advantage. This gives ease to the principal conductors of the business, and is more satisfactory to the persons who immediately overlook it, less harassing to the laborers, as well as more beneficial to the employer.

Under this view of the subject, the principal service which you can render me is to explain to the overseers (who will be furnished with duplicates) the plan, in all its parts, which is hereafter detailed; to hear their ideas with respect to the order in which the different sorts of works therein pointed out shall succeed each other, for the purpose of carrying it on to the best advantage; to correct any erroneous projects they may seem disposed to adopt; and then to see that they adhere strictly to whatever may be resolved on, and that they are always (except when otherwise permitted) on their farms and with their people. The work, under such circumstances, will go on smoothly; and that the stock may be well fed, littered, and taken care of according to directions, it will be necessary to inspect the conduct of the overseers in this particular, and those also whose immediate business it is to attend upon them, with a watchful eye, otherwise, and generally in severe weather, when attention and care are most needed, they will be most neglected.

Economy in all things is as commendable in the manager as it is beneficial and desirable to the employer; and, on a farm, it shows itself in nothing more evidently, or more essentially, than in not suffering the provender to be wasted, but, on the contrary, in taking care that every atom of it be used to the best advantage; and, likewise, in not permitting the ploughs, harness, and other implements of husbandry, and the gears belonging to them, to be unnecessarily exposed, trodden under foot, run over by carts and abused in other respects. More good is derived from attending to the minutiæ of a farm than strikes people at first view; and examining the farm-yard fences, and looking into the fields to see that nothing is there except what ought to be there, are oftentimes the means of producing more good, at least of avoiding more evil, than can be accomplished by riding from one working party or overseer to another. I have mentioned these things not only because they have occurred to me, but because, although apparently trifles, they prove far otherwise in the result.

The account for the present quarter must be made final, as an entire new scene will take place afterward. In doing this, advertise in the Alexandria paper for the claims of every kind and nature whatsoever against me to be brought to you by the 1st of January, that I may wipe them off, and begin on a fresh score. All balances in my favor must either be received, or reduced to specialties, that there may be no disputes hereafter.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

To James Alexander, Manager of the Farms

The Origin of the Franco-German War.

M. Gambetta has provoked a discussion that has revealed to the world the truth about the origin of the Franco-German war of 1870. Gambetta said that the Bonapartists declared war on the strength of fabricated papers, and from the new evidence given the statement would seem to be a true one, albeit somewhat exaggerated. It will be remembered that the cause of war was declared to have been an insult given by the King of Prussia to the French Ambassador, M. Benedetti, at Ems, the news of which was, it was said, telegraphed to all the capitals of Europe by Count Bismarck. It has long been known that the story of an insult, however it was originated, was a fabrication, for M. Benedetti himself said, after the war, "There was neither insulter nor insulted at Ems." Still, it has been held that if Bismarck circulated a report that there was an insult, or if the French Cabinet had reason to believe that the report might be true, France was justified in declaring war. Now, it appears from a letter written by M. de Keratry, Secretary of the committee of the Corps Legislatif which was charged with inquiry into the situation, and which advised war, that the only papers submitted to the committee were two dispatches forwarded by the French Ambassador at Berne and another French diplomatist, which repeated the account of the insult publicly offered at Ems to M. Benedetti. This account, the Duc de Gramont informed the committee, had been forwarded as a circular by Count Bismarck to all the foreign courts, and had been communicated to the two French agents by diplomatic indiscretions which could not safely be revealed. M. Talhouet, the reporter of the committee, assured the Chamber that the committee had seen the dispatches of four or five French Ambassadors to different courts, and that they reproduced in almost identical terms the document forwarded by Prussia, as M. Ollivier had stated to the European powers. But it is now proved that the dispatch did not emanate from Bismarck, but from an agency without authority or responsibility. Moreover, it is now known that the Government withheld from the committee two dispatches from M. Benedetti himself that would have proved the story of an insult untrue. So it appears that there was no insult, that the Cabinet knew there had been none, that the story did not emanate from Count Bismarck, and that the Ministry led the country into war on the strength of an untraceable rumor which they knew to be false.

Some Wonderful Indian Mounds in Iowa.

[From the Columbus Junction (Iowa) Herald.]

The Toolesboro mounds are situated near the mouth of the Iowa river, on a high bluff, which commands a grand eastward view. The low, smooth bottom lands, the numerous tree-covered islands in the mouth of the Iowa, the broad, shining waters of the Mississippi, and on the Illinois side the church spires of New Boston and Keithsburg, with a background of undulating sand prairie farms, a picture that needs only the stroke of a painter's brush or poet's measure and rhyme to make it as famous as the scenes on the Hudson or Susquehanna. The mounds are situated on the highest part of the bluff, and nearly all of them are covered with a growth of timber. Forty years ago, when the emigrants arrived in that place, they found two large circles of the mounds, which were situated about two miles apart, and connected by a long, curved row or semicircle of the mounds, and this semicircle is built close along the edge of the steep bluff. Both of these circles have partly been leveled and are now farmed over, but a number of the mounds yet remain undisturbed. Several of them have been carefully opened by the curious, and the relics found prove, without doubt, that these mounds are burial piles. Level with the surface of the ground are remains of circular floors; part of which were made of baked clay and part of the trunks of trees which appear to have been split open and laid close together. Lying immediately on these floors, and covered with earth to the depth of from two to six feet, are found human bones, which are much larger than the bones of modern men. Teeth, especially, are found in an almost-perfect state of preservation. Among these bones is a substance that to the unscientific beholder resembles whitish ashes, which is thought by some to be the remains of cloth. There are also found copper axes and copper spikes, with handles of polished horn and petrified wood, heavy stone hammers and stones which have been hollowed out and evidently used as mortars, flint knives which are large and sharp enough to accomplish their supposed purpose of skinning animals and cutting the flesh. But the relics which give evidences of the most perfect art are the stone images of animals and birds. Some of them are hollow and appear to have been used as bowls and pipes. They are made of a hard, reddish-colored stone and are accurately carved and beautifully polished. There can be no doubt but what this ancient people had better tools and were more skillful and industrious than the North American Indians. In what is now a cornfield, near the northern circle of mounds, used to be the remains of an earth-work fort around which were scattered bits of pottery and different colored wares. Both around the old fort and in the mounds were found quantities of beads of various shapes and sizes; nearly all of them are made of mother-of-pearl. Much more could be said of these interesting antiquities; and, as more of the mounds are to be excavated this fall, you may hear more anon.

Why All Nevada Rivers Run into the Ground.

It is a well-known peculiarity of our Washoe rivers, says the Virginia City Enterprise, that they all sink into the earth. Each river empties into what is called its "sink," or lake. None of them get out of the State or empty into the sea. This curious fact was once curiously accounted for by a queer old fellow who made his home in the shadow of Mount Davidson. Said he: "The way it come about was in this wise: The Almighty, at the time he was creatin' and fashionin' this 'ere yearth, got along to this section late on Saturday evenin'. He had got through with all the great lakes—Superior, Michigan, Huron, Erie and them; had made the Ohio, Missouri and Mississippi rivers, and, as a sort of wind up, concluded to make a river that would beat anything he had done in that line. He started an' traced out Humboldt river, an' Truckee river, an' Carson river, an' Walker river, an' Reese river, an' all the other rivers; an' he was a leadin' of 'em along, calkelatin' to bring 'em all together into one big boss river, an' then lead that off an' let it empty into the Gulf of Mexico or the Gulf of California, as might be most convenient; but as he was bringin' down an' leadin' along his branches—Truckee, Humboldt, Carson, Walker an' them—all at once it came on dark, an', not bein' able to carry out his plan, he just tuked the lower ends of the several streams inter the ground where they war, an' they've stayed thar ever since."

An Uncommonly Strong Man.

The great Welsh athlete, J. E. Evans, who enjoys the reputation of being the strongest man living, has been giving a series of entertainments on board the British flagship and the harbor forts at Cork. Evans is a man of powerful appearance and stands about five feet eight inches in height. Resting on his back at full length he lets fall half a hundred on his chest. One and a half inches of iron was cut across his chest by a blow of a sledge hammer on board the Revenge. Then the gun which fires morning and evening, and is over a ton in weight, was placed on his chest, loaded, and fired off without the slightest apparent inconvenience.

MEXICO.

Re-Election of President Lerdo—Prospects of Peace.

[From the New York Tribune.]

The Mexican journals of July 19 give further particulars of the re-election of President Lerdo de Tejada, the news of which reached us by telegraph a few days since. Returns had been received at the capital from the largest as well as some of the most distant states, indicating a vote which is practically unanimous. Lerdo de Tejada, whose present term expires in February next, is now the legal and rightful President of Mexico until February, 1883. This result was to have been anticipated, but it has been made more emphatic by the very means taken to defeat it. The opposition element, headed by Gen. Porfirio Diaz, instead of employing all its energies in legal ways, through the nomination and advocacy of its own candidate, simply undertook to prevent any election. The success of such a movement would have gone far to render a stable government impossible in Mexico. It is therefore a most encouraging circumstance that the people, thoroughly appreciating the importance of the crisis, refrained from nominating any opposing candidates, and voted for the maintenance of law and order in voting for Lerdo de Tejada.

Since the result of the election has been made known, the revolution is rapidly crumbling to pieces. In the Northern, as in the Southern states, the most notorious of the subordinate chiefs of Diaz have been defeated by the Government troops, and their followers have taken refuge in the mountains. There some of them may subsist for a little while longer, using their lost political significance as a mask for outrage and robbery; but there is no probability that they will be able to unite again in a new revolution for the defeat of the expressed will of the Mexican people. Gen. Diaz, whose escape from Tampico and landing at Vera Cruz, as related in Rahden's (Mexican) Review, was published in yesterday's Tribune, has reached his home in Oaxaca, and already issued an explanatory manifesto. The fact that he has abandoned his followers in Tamaulipas and New Leon is a confession of his failure. Whatever still remains of the insurrectionary element in Oaxaca will undoubtedly soon be suppressed, and we trust that the second term of President Lerdo will witness no renewal of such a crime against the republican system of government.

President Lerdo's re-election means a continuance for Mexico of the intelligent and liberal policy inaugurated by Juarez. It means the maintenance of law, the preservation of order, security (so far as the means of the administration extend) of individual life and property, freedom of religious worship, encouragement of education, and development of the vast natural resources of the country. Gen. Diaz relied upon the prejudices of the Ultramontane Mexicans for his chief support, and his failure is thus of moral as well as political augury. In him reaction is condemned, as in Lerdo de Tejada progress is accepted. The United States has no sincerer desire than to see Mexico advancing surely and steadily in the same paths which have led us to national power and individual liberty.

A Shocking American Habit.

The recent funerals of the members of the Garner family, and of Miss Adele Hunter, the unfortunate young lady who was drowned with the Commodore and his wife on the Mohawk, have again developed a peculiarly American trait which is simply disgusting. It was shown rather more conspicuously at Miss Hunter's funeral, because it took place in a popular church. The crowd in attendance had been invited to pass around the coffin, and the great mass of persons who had been attracted merely by curiosity surged in a half-disorderly manner up the aisles. Then when the coffin was reached the crowd, which was four-fifths composed of females, behaved so outrageously as to shock those who saw it. The first part of the crowd deliberately (the women were the sole offenders) pounced upon the flowers, and carried them off so ravenously that Dr. Houghton, the rector, was obliged to mount the platform and publicly request that the floral decorations should be undisturbed. Even after that there were instances where the request was unheeded. This occurrence is very common at large funerals held in church in New York. At the funeral of A. T. Stewart the same scene took place, and also at the funeral of the late J. W. Harper at the St. Paul's Church, fifteen months ago. There seems to be a morbid taste for treasuring flowers from the coffins of prominent people, and to a foreigner unused at all to such lavish displays of flowers on such occasions the sight of a promiscuous crowd appropriating the floral contributions of friends to their own gratification is one which ought to make an American blush.—New York Letter.

A Woman Saved by a Pet Dog.

On Thursday last a large white bull, belonging to Mr. Patterson, on his farm near Peabody, in some way got loose from the stall in which it was tied, and the men of the family being far from the house in the field, Mrs. Patterson attempted to catch the animal by approaching it with a basin of salt. This seemed to work well at first, as the animal, on being called, came near and, bowed its head, as if it were about to lick the salt. At this instant Mrs. Patterson attempted to catch the animal by the ring in its nose, and to her surprise the beast plunged at her and threw her into the air ten feet. When she fell to the ground the beast made another rush at her, but her pet dog, seeming to take in the perilous situation of its mistress, caught the bull by the ring in its nose, and held it until assistance arrived and the animal was captured, thus saving the woman from a fearful death. Mrs. Patterson, though badly bruised, is doing well. Mrs. Patterson also states that this little dog saved the life of her husband in a similar manner some time ago.—Atchison (Kan.) Champion.

Deep Bores.

The deepest perpendicular mining shaft in the world is in Prizibram, Bohemia, and measures 3,280 feet. It is in a lead mine, and is supposed to have been begun about 350 years ago. In other places greater depths have been reached, but not by straight lines. A rock salt bore near Berlin is 4,175 feet deep, and a coal mine in Belgium 3,542. The deepest hole ever bored is an artesian well, 5,500 feet, at Potsdam, Mo.

A Woman Who Has Killed Five Hundred Wild Animals.

Chief among the attractions in the Kansas State building, or in that part of it reserved for Colorado, is a lady-like woman of less than the ordinary stature, and comparatively slight physical development, known as Mrs. Maxwell, the Rocky Mountain huntress. This lady is reported to have killed, with her own hands, 500 wild animals, and specimens of these, stuffed by herself, have been forwarded to the Colorado display, and they are now on exhibition. Among these are several large bisons, a number of deer, including the red deer, a pair of Rocky Mountain sheep, a ferocious puma, a number of wild-cats, two elk, three bears—grizzly, cinnamon and black—a wolverine, said to be the most dangerous animal in the West; many varieties of rabbit, including the rare cony rabbit found only on mountain peaks, above the timber line, and many specimens of marmot squirrel, mountain rat, a black-footed ferret, etc. The last-mentioned animal is a rare specimen, the one owned by the Smithsonian Institute being the only other known to have been shot and preserved. The collection also includes a family of prairie dogs, owls and snakes, which the huntress has often seen in the same burrow, and to these are added cases of birds, water-fowl, snakes, etc., besides two exhibitions of live prairie dogs and rattlesnakes, the entire display of over 800 animals being very artistically arranged.

The Newspaper.

There is scarcely a newspaper published from one end of the year to the other that will not, if critically considered, give offense to somebody in the community. The politician objects to the way his speech is reported. The buyers of one set of shares are offended because the money column reports another set as going up or going down. Gentlemen who find themselves in the hands of the police are grieved at the license of the press which reports their arraignment and trial among the police proceedings. The sympathizer with France is offended at letters from Berlin, and the believer in German unity mourns over dispatches from Paris. The newspaper thus offends some one, just as the weather—rainy to-day and sunshiny to-morrow—is sure to annoy somebody. The common-sense view is that the newspaper is the history of yesterday written to-day; that it is the mirror of the time, and that those who conduct it care nothing for individuals except to do them justice.—New York paper.

A newspaper has the largest advertisement to be seen in Europe. The name of The Glasgow News is cut on the slope of a hill back of the Ardenlee, Scotland. The length of each letter is 40 feet; the total length of the line is 323 feet, the area covered is 14,845 feet. The borders of the letters are sown with a pure white flower, the center is set with dwarf beet, the dark purple of which shows well at a distance, and on each side of this there is a row of light purple candytuft.

AT our request Cragin & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., have promised to send any of our readers gratis (on receipt of fifteen cents to pay postage) a sample of Dobbins' Electric Soap to try. Send at once.

Answers to Correspondents.

In answer to "Alphabetical," in your last issue, for a remedy for consumption in its first stages, I can recommend Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," if taken according to directions, for it has been thoroughly tried in my family, and the results were glorious. "Alphabetical" must not expect one bottle to do the work—my wife took three bottles before she could discover any change, but after the third bottle every dose seemed to strengthen the lungs, and now she is well and hearty. If "Alphabetical" will write to me I will get witnesses to the above. HENRY H. M. PATTON.

THE GREAT FAVORITE!—The popular Chill Cure of the age!! Composed of pure and simple drugs, Wilhoft's Tonic has long held the highest place in the long line of remedies for Chills and Fever. It is not only Anti-Periodic but is Anti-Panic, for it curtails the heavy expense of Doctor's visits, where friendly calls are all itemized in the account current. A penny saved is a penny gained, and saving it in this way adds to health and comfort. Try Wilhoft's Tonic as a certainty and you will never regret it. G. R. FINLAY & CO., Proprietors, New Orleans.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

CHAPPED hands, face, pimples, ringworm, saltrheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and rough skin made soft and smooth, by using Juniper Tar Soap. Be careful to get only that made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, as there are many imitations made with common tar, all of which are worthless.

PENTECOST & HAYDEN, Panora, Iowa, wrote March 27, 1876: "We have sold Smallenberger's Ague Pills for eight years, and have no failure to cure reported." In view of such facts why suffer? ONE DOLLAR will cure you. ONE DOSE stops the chills.

OFFICERS and soldiers who served in the army, physicians, surgeons, and eminent men and women everywhere, join in recommending Johnson's Anodyne Liniment to be the best internal and external family medicine ever invented. That's our experience.

MANY who are suffering from the effects of the warm weather and are debilitated, are advised by physicians to take moderate amounts of whisky two or three times during the day. In a little while those who adopt this advice frequently increase the number of "drinks," and in time become confirmed inebriates. A beverage which will not create thirst for intoxicating liquors, and which is intended especially for the benefit of debilitated persons, whether at home or abroad, is Dr. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic. Containing the juices of many medicinal herbs, this preparation does not create an appetite for the intoxicating cup. The nourishing and the life-supporting properties of many valuable natural productions contained in it, and well known to medical men, have a most strengthening influence. A single bottle of the Tonic will demonstrate its valuable qualities. For debility arising from sickness, over exertion, or from any cause whatever, a wine-glassful of Sea Weed Tonic taken after meals will strengthen the stomach and create an appetite for wholesome food. To all who are about leaving their homes, we desire to say that the excellent effects of Dr. Schenck's seasonable remedies, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, are particularly evident when taken by those who are injuriously affected by a change of water and diet. No person should leave home without taking a supply of these safeguards along. For sale by all Druggists.

ALL the year round, Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders should be given to horses that are "kept up." To horses and cattle that graze in summer they should only be given in winter and spring.

"THE VIBRATOR"
1000 SOLD LAST SEASON
WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION
This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE NICHOLS, SHEPARD & CO.
"VIBRATOR."

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz.: our improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

The Enemy of Disease, the Foe of Pain to Man and Beast,
Is the Grand Old
MUSTANG
LINIMENT,
WHICH HAS STOOD THE TEST OF 40 YEARS. THERE IS NO SORE IT WILL NOT HEAL, NO LAMENESS IT WILL NOT CURE, NO ACHE, NO PAIN, THAT AFFLICTS THE HUMAN BODY, OR THE BODY OF A HORSE OR OTHER DOMESTIC ANIMAL, THAT DOES NOT YIELD TO ITS MAGIC TOUCH. A bottle costing 25c., 50c. or $1.00, has often saved the life of a human being, and restored to life and usefulness many a valuable horse.

COLLINS' VOLTAIC PLASTERS
AN Electro-Galvanic Battery, combined with the celebrated Medicated Porous Plaster, forming the grandest curative agent in the world of medicine, and utterly surpassing all other Plasters heretofore in use. They accomplish more in one week than the old Plasters in a whole year. They do not palliate, they CURE. Instant relief afforded in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Paralysis, St. Vitus Dance, Cramp, Sciatica, Hip Complaints, Spinal Affections, Nervous Pains and Irritations, Epilepsy or Fits proceeding from Shocks to the Nervous System, Ruptures and Strains, Fractures, Bruises, Contusions, Weak Muscles and Joints, Nervous and Feeble Muscular Action, Great Soreness and Pain in any part of the Body, Weak and Painful Kidneys, Great Tenderness of the Kidneys, and Weak and Lame Back, caused by Chronic Inflammation of the Kidneys.

So confident are the proprietors in the great value of this Plaster over all other Plasters, that they do not hesitate to WARRANT it to possess greater—far greater—curative properties than all others combined, while the price of each, viz., 25 cents, is within the reach of every sufferer in the land. Insist, therefore, upon having what you call for.

Sold everywhere. Sent by mail, carefully wrapped and warranted, on receipt of price, 25 cents for one, $1.25 for six, or $2.25 for twelve, by WEEKS & POTTER, Proprietors, Boston, Mass.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.
Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient
May properly be called the "Hercules" of medicines, for it cleanses Nature's augean stables, and allows the recuperative powers of the system to do the work of restoration to health. No medicine cures; Nature alone cures. This aperient opens the proper avenues, the functions are permitted to resume their work, and the patient gets well.

For weeks the Radical press have fairly teemed with sensational dispatches of a serious disagreement between Governors Tilden and Hendricks, touching their letters of acceptance. Well the letters have come—like twin brothers and are found in perfect accord. They breathe one purpose, and sentiment. The Democracy of the East are in accord with the Democracy of the West. For the first time in sixteen years the great Democratic party is thoroughly united. And by this sign it will conquer.

Gov. Tilden and Gov. Hendricks both favor the repeal of the Resumption act in their letters of acceptance. The Democratic party through its platform at St. Louis and by its action in the lower House is now in full accord with the people in their struggle against the bank rupting policies of the Republican party Since Gov. Tilden is found to be in full accord with the people of the West, now what are our par-excellent Greenbackers going to do, Come gentlemen, join hands with the Democracy, in bringing about true currency reform

The Sentinel was refused a copy of Morton's speech in time for publication this morning, the Associated Press agent being instructed to withhold it. In this act Mr. Morton or his brother-in-law abused the courtesy of the Associated Press in forcing the agent to violate the obligations of the association to its members. "Indianapolis Sentinel."

How's that for cowardice? Every means possible are being worked by the Republican leaders to deceive the Democracy. It seems as though they lack brains or something else, as every move leaks out, almost instantly, after the plan is laid.

A Corps of Sitting Hens.

As Senator Gorden is evidently so partial to military terms, we will concede to him the use of the word corps, in his Civil Service bill. But as it is a figurative term there, we think that, in describing his Board of Examiners, he should employ, figuratively, another phrase, to designate appropriately his Examining Board; he should call it the Corps of Sitting Hens. To be sure they are not literally hens; but then they are not literally a corps. And the term sitting hens gives quite as correct an idea of their official character as the word corps. For they are to sit; they are to incubate, over the promotion of gaugers and storekeepers to higher officers in the internal revenue service. Whenever a vacancy occurs, it is to be presumed that all the subordinates in the department will be candidates for promotion. They will all be entitled to be thoroughly examined — for there must be no partiality. This would probably take as long as it requires for a hen to hatch out a brood of chickens—three weeks. In fact, if they got through the preliminary work and made a single promotion in twenty-one days, they would do pretty well.

There would be any number of these Boards of Sitting Hens in the country. The Corps of Sitting Hens would be very large, It would be a sort of asylum for the incompetent and decayed friends of active politicians. The bill provides for these boards "at such places as the necessities of the service requires;" and the necessities of the services are to be judged of by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to no restriction. He could make them just as numerous as the internal revenue districts if he choose—covering the country all over with this Corps of Sitting Hens, to be supported by the labor of the people.

Who is Sitting Bull.

Louisville Courier Journal.

One day, about twelve years ago, a young man with a powerful frame and a high forehead walked into the New York Tribune office, and as Mr. Greely looked up from his desk, the intruder politely asked, "Don't you want to hire a conflagration reporter?" Mr. Greely, having fourteen columns of editorial and a similar quantity of advertisements to write that morning, rather hastily waved his head at the burly youth, and in a tone of perhaps justifiable impatience, remarked: "Young man go west, by all means young man, go west." That young man did go west. He joined the Indians. He is now known as Sitting Bull. Fiction is stranger than truth, and the pieces of advice that one young man thrives under is the death of another.

The Only Way.

The Hon. Wm. S. Holman, of Indiana, in a resent speech in the House truthfully said: "Every measure of finance and taxation since the close of the war has been against labor and in favor of capitol, and that the country is now suffering from a policy dictated by selfish and remorseless cupidity seeking to augment the advantages and power of wealth and taking from "the mouth of labors the bread it has earned," and that only through a reversal of this policy and the enact of laws of finance and taxation equally just to every interest can our prosperity be restored. The only way to reverse that policy and thus relieve business and help the working-man is to turn the present party out of power.

GARRETT ITEMS.

EDITOR COURIER.—The first Tilden & Hendricks ratification meeting, of DeKalb Co., was held in Garret, on last Saturday evening. In the afternoon a hickory pole was raised, 95 feet in length, on which was placed those noble stars and stripes and a beautiful streamer on the top bearing the names of our next President and Vice President

TILDEN & HENDRICKS.

About 7 o'clock a large and enthusiastic crowd, of about seven hundred had gathered on the grounds awaiting the approach of the speakers. Dr. Parker called the meeting to order and on motion Washington Cowan was made chairman. Addresses were then made by the following gentlemen: J. H. Cowan, of Columbus, Ohio, (the boy speaker), Hon Freeman Kelly, of Waterloo. Ind; Hon. J. B. Stoll, of Ligonier, Ind; D. D. Moody, of Auburn; C. A. O. McClellan, of Warerloo. Each were received with applauses as they stepped upon the stand.

Mr. James Cowan was the first introduced. This young man has yet his first vote to cast, and never did we hear a public speaker, of years his senior, take up a subject and treat it with the honor to himself and interest to his hearers as did Mr. Cowan discuss the great question of reform. It would have done credit to many a politician of age and experience. How well he showed up the theives, crime and corruption of this Republican administration, and in what beautiful language he traced back the Republican party to its infantcy, showing very clearly that it was a tyranical power from its birth and theives have fattened on the proceeds of the poor tax payer's daily labor. This is something we ought to look and seriovsly think of. This gentleman spoke about fifty minutes and left the stage amid shouts and applauses.

Hon. J. B. Stoll was next introduced This gentleman occupied the stand about an hour, part of his speech being in German. Mr. Stoll also showed himself, by his speech, to be a man well versed in history and the political welfare of our country. Loud cheers also followed him as he left the stand.

Mr. McClellan was then called for, but as the time was growing short and he wished to give Mr. Kelly all the time he could he reserved his seat.

D. D. Moody then took the stand and after a very brief but pointed speech he introduced Mr. Kelly.

Mr. Kelly was received with loud cheers as he came forward. Mr. Kelly spoke about forty minutes and considering the short time he spoke he made a very able address. As every one knows Mr. Kelly is a man of ability and able to do justice to this great question of re reform. He explains very clearly a Massachusetts republican law which J. H. Baker endorses and partly from which he [Baker] makes his campaign document. It is concerning a voters qualification in the above State. It is this:—"Every voter must be able to write his name and read the consitution of the U. S. in the English language." Now, then, how many good German and French voters would be kept away from the ballot box under such a law. We will just suppose, for a moment, that some of our American citizens would go to Germany or France, how long would they have to remain there before they would be elegable to a vote. Under such a law as Mr Baker would like to have in our country and yet Mr. Baker would endorse such a law in every State in the Union.

Now, one word concerning some fine-haired Republicans. Not satisfied with cutting our hickory pole, they thought they would interrupt the meeting by firing off rockets around the ground during the speaking, and made all the noise they could. But amid all there mean, contemptable conduct the meeting went on, and now, fellow democrats, if the Republican party has any gathering here lets show better sense and more respect than shown us. All left well pleased with the meeting. Hurah for Keyser township!

We have received a letter addressed to J. C. Loveland, publisher of "New Era," Auburn, Ind. We don't know what's in it. It may be money and it may be a—dun. If Jco. will have his nigger drive the white horses down, we will deliver it at the carriage door by our own hand.

The Catholic excursion to Pleasant Lake a while ago, took a vote for President. Tilden & Hendricks received 101 votes, Hayes & Wheeler, 1. We might of mentioned this before, but we're like the Republican speakers of to-day, we want something that has happened long ago.

PUBLIC SALE

There will be a public sale at Mr. Lauferty's residence, on 4th-st., Wednesday Aug. 23d, 1876, consisting of, Stoves, Chairs, Carpets and other articles too numerous to mention terms made known on day of sale. Sale at 10 o'clock A. M.

The other day two strangers by some means brought up at one of our popular hotels and supposing that they were in some large city, one of them inquired whether they were in the north or west part of Chicago. They were both dressed tonny. They had on a blue suit like Weamer's, the actual cost of which was $9.25 each, suspenders and a box of col- throwed in.

One of our attorneys went into the woods to practice a speech for the coming campaign. The initials of his name was W. L. Penfield, Esq. He is a Hayes and Wheeler man. His eye was fixed upon a bass-wood tree, and was just more'n laying it off to the Democrats. Several gentlemen were duck hunting and happened that way. His eyes left the bass-wood and rolling them to the right he spied beside a hickory tree, an old sound Democrat, He forgot all about Hayes, and Wheel(er)ed off to another stump. The Democrats behind the bushes, were sorry that he got in a hurry, as the speech had such effect that they had about come to the conclusion to kneel before him and say, "Master, we give ourselves to thee."

Dedication Services.

The Germans of this city went to Waterloo en mass last Sabbath, to take part in the dedication of the new German Reform Church which was recently erected. Rev. Sandoe. who was formerly the pastor of the same denomination in this city accompained them. The day was extremely warm, but a large turn out and a pleasant time was had.

Republican Speech.

Gen. Packard delivered a kind of a speech, at Ensley's Hall last Friday evening. His main point was "the war record." We can't blame our Republican friends for this, as, for a certainty its all they have to harp on. The Gen gave the appearance of a gentleman and a scholar, but the little speech that he had learned by heart will have but very little impression on the audience he tells it to. With the exception of a few spicy sayings it was "counted thin."

Soldiers' Reunion.

The soldiers of DeKalb County will hold a meeting at Auburn on Saturday Aug. 19th, at 1:30 P. M., sharp, to form an organization preliminary to a Grand Re-Union of the Soldiers of DeKalb and adjoining counties, the time of re-union to be announced the day of organization. Comrade, you are requested to pass the word along the line, It is advisable that each township be represented at the organization. Let active co-operation be the watchword.

Committee.

Speech at Garrett.

Last Saturday the people of Garrett had a large and lively meeting. Three or four speakers were in attendance, among them young Mr. Cowan He said in his speech that a vote was taken for President on a mail train where he was a passenger. Tilden got 10 and Hayes 20. An Irishman arose and said, "that will do for a vote on a passenger train, but wait, my friends, until the gravel train comes in." That's the tune of laboring men. The working class is going to win the election. A change must and will be made.

Hayes & wheeler Club.

Our Republican friends met at the Court House last Tuesday evening and organsized a Hayes and Wheeler club. The attendance was quite small, but we are informed that a club of forty-one was organized. Mr. Feagler, in a short speech, gave his Republican brothers to understand that they would have to make an extra effort during the campaign. He told them something then that they all knew. Also refered back to the war and several other little things that happened in our grandfathers days.

Central Committee.

J. R. Lanning, Esq., has been appointed Chairman of the Democratic Central Committee, and has done some good work for so short a time he has been in the chair. He is a gentleman that never tells all he knows and consequently will manage the affair without a "hip, hip, hurah," to every move. He has made all the necessary arrangements for the present, and we can all depend on him to have matters in a good shape during the campaign. All should work earnestly and at every opportunity they get. We can and will win the election by a handsome majority.

The panic in Philadelphia and the cries for bread or blood which come to us from the vast armies of the unemployed in New York, Cincinnati and elsewhere, show what Grantism has brought this country to. Not only in these large cities but take it here at home. We know of men who have been employed for years at one place, who has been compelled to "lay off," the dull times and the scarcaty of money. And yet you say "I am a Hayes man." There will be no change with Hayes in the chair because Grant will tell what to do. There will be no relief until there is a change, and a radical change in the administration.

NOT THEM.

While Ira Eaton was in search of three prisoners that broke jail, last week and when near Syracuse, he saw three men lying in the woods along side the R. R. track. The train was stopped and in company with a Toledo detective, they gave the fellows a chase. The detective shot at his man and wounded him in the hand. Mr. Eaton also shot at his and they were all brought to a hault. Upon examination they were not the men that broke out of our jail. They were taken to Toledo, however, and there were parties there waiting for them. These three cusses broke into a house and committed a rape on a young lady, living a short distance from Toledo. Our prisoners have not yet been heard from.

It Wouldn't Work.

Last week a young man by the name of Benner, living a short distance from town, sold a horse to H Parent. After a few days it was ascertained that the horse had been stolen from parties in Syracuse. Mr. Parent gave him up without a word and the next thing was to find Benner. This was accomplished and Benner claimed that parties from Butler demanded the money and he gave it up. Legal authority looked this up and says, "Boys, come with me or fork over." They forked. Hi. got his money, the Syracuse man his hoss, and Benner nothing. That was all of the trial.

A Dastarly Outrage.

A more fiendish, uncalled for, malignant and malicious slander upon the private character of unpretending and innocent persons was never perpetrated than that by Weamer of the Republican last week, in his article in regard to the recent escape of the prisoners from the County Jail. It was as we say, fiendish uncalled for, malignant and malicious. We are sorry to be compelled to say so, but it is a fact. We are in the midst of of a heated political campaign, and many may think that we are influenced by partizan motives, but we know, and every man and woman in our town and its immediate vicinity knows, and God knows that what we write is truth, and will uphold us in declaring Weamer a libeller and slanderer, of the private character of private citizens, or if he was not malicious in that article, he is the yearlest fool God ever permitted to breathe.

To understand more clearly the facts we will state, that at the time of the escape Cook Ford and Hiram Parent, owned a livery stable some ten rods almost in the rear of the jail. Still east is a low unimproved creek bottom, skirted with straggling clumps of willows and trees. Mr. Burlingame was in their employ. Mr. Ford is the only son of our esteemed citizen Dr. J. H. Ford, and was born in our town and not one young man in a thousand has a better private moral character. Mr. Parent is a man over fifty years old and has been a resident of this and Allen counties for the last forty years, a man of intelligence, wealth and a large warm heart, outspoken, and of that stern, sterling and unmoving integrity, that he would sooner lose his right arm than stoop to do a wrong. Mr. Burlingame is in the prime of life, has been a resident of our place about two years, and we judge of him by what he has been while here, a quiet, inoffensive, moral and hardworking man, and never seen at other places than those where duty calls, and from his intelligence, actions and ways would say, that he is a man who has seen better days and by the fault of others is now an employee where he should have been an employer.

Now, what is Weamer's story, by which he slanders these men who are every way, intellectually, socially and morally his superiors. Mr. P. first went to the jail building and into the kitchen and knew of the absence of the Sheriff's family, but does not say that he was in the jail department. Here are three lies. He did not go into the kitchen, The family were at home. He did go into the jail part to talk with an insane person named Goldsmith, whom he had known for a long time. In about twenty minutes, he, with Ford and B. returned, the Sheriff being there then, told his son to unlock the doors and allow them to enter. That all, the three talked with the prisoners, left leaving the doors open. That the son did not notice the open doors and hearing a noise in the kitchen, went there and the prisoners escaped, through the office, all three of them and the son in the adjoining room.) That between the visits of Mr. P. the prisoners had been locked in their cells, (which is not true, for they were in the hall.) That Orrin the son did not know of their escape until told by one of the parties P. F. or B. (He all this time in the kitchen looking after a noise., The men having escaped went by the livery stable, and one of the livery men came and told him. That the prisoners passed the livery men and were recognized by them.

A word or two of comments and we will give the statements of the parties implicated. If the facts are true as given by Weamer, and it is fair to presume they are, so far as they effect his informants. What are the inferences to be drawn? The first and foremost is that Parent, Ford & Burlidgame, assisted in the escape of the prisoners. Second, that P. F. & B. confederated with the son and effected their escape. Third that Orrin, the son, alone permitted them to escape, and fourth, that the Sheriff and his son confederated and allowed them to get away, now endeavor to lay the blame on the last parties who visited any inmate in the jail. We do not so charge, but we say that Weamer's article will bear all these constructions if we want to (as he does) fasten the guilt on any one or more. Again without showing any previous acquaintance with the prisoners, what earthly object could P. F. & B. have in their escape? Even if Parent did go into the jail part, could they in twenty minutes time saw off the bars, and escape, or was the saws given at the last visit and then they sawed off the bars and escaped, while Orrin, the son, was in the kitchen By his story, in not showing that either P. F. or B. had previously furnished the saws, one or the other of these suppositions are true. And then what in God's name did all three Parent, Ford and Burlingame go there for, when one would have done? Isn't Weamer the most malicious stupid fool that ever breathed.

STATEMENT.

In regard to the escape of the prisoners from the County jail, we desire to make this statement about the circumstances of that evening. First, we would state that we never knew nor saw either of the prisoners to our knowledge, nor, could we now identify them if we should see them. Hearing some very loud talk ing in the jail that evening about sundown, Mr. Parent went to ascertain the cause, and found a Mr. Goldsmith, with whom he had been acquainted several years, a raving maniac. He endeavored to talk and quiet him, in which he partially succeeded, was there probably ten minutes, and left without saying anything to the prisoners, unless a casual word. The Sheriff and wife, son and others were in and about the office and house. He never was in the kitchen of the jail building since it was occupied. Mr. P. then returned to the barn and informed those at the barn what and who occasioned the noise. Mr. Goldsmith, the insane man, had sold us grain at the barn, and Mr. Ford desired to see him also. Mr. Burlinggame not having been in the jail since its completion, and having had ten years experience in keeping criminals and crazy persons, desired also to go, simply to see the jail and how the inmates were treated. We all went together, The Sheriff was just starting toward the street, and on being told by Mr. P. that the others of us desired to see the insane man, he told his boy to unlock the door and let us in—not in where the inmates was confined, but the outer hall. We went in, talked with insane man as well as we could in his frenzy, with only some jocular or merry remarks to the criminals. Mr. P. having just been there, went out almost immediately into the office where Orrin was figuring at the desk or table. The other two of us soon followed, never thinking of the door, and even if we had would not have closed it, as that was the duty of the son, who was there as we supposed for that purpose. Neither of us at that, or any other time, visited the kitchen.

After we had returned to the stable some ten or fifteen minutes, we saw three men coming from the jail and got over the fence. They all had on coats with the collars turned up, hats drawn down, walking fast. When we saw them in the jail they only had on shirts and pants. We spoke of them as being the prisoners, but their changed appearance and dress confused our recognizing them until after speaking to them. One told us to go to hell, and they all broke in fast run for the creek bottom. Mr. Ford went to the jail, went into the outer hall, could see no criminals, no one in the office or kitchen, but on the south side of the building sat Orrin watching to shoot a rat. Mr. P. went onto the street to give the alarm, Mr. B. staying at the stable. This is the long and short of our connection with the escape, and if we are to blame, so are the hundreds who have been in the jail since their confinement. Mr. Weamer has done us a great wrong which no apology he can make will redress. Had he been a gentleman, or even half a man he would have made some investigation of the matter, if he dared not come to us, and not have shown such criminal stupidity as he and the Sheriff has done by endeavoring to cast the blame upon innocent parties, to shield the Sheriff from the consequences of his own carelessness, which undoubtedly contributed largely to the prisoners escape. Weamer's assertion and the Sheriff's assent to the assertions that we are the associates and servants of those who would commit rape and larceny we, leave in the hands of our neighbors, feeling assured that anything they can say, or the other by silence intimate can not injure us in the least.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A DISPATCH from Whitehall, N. Y., says that "on Sunday afternoon ten persons were drowned while crossing Putnam's pond. Thirteen persons were in a small row-boat, and, when about three rods from the shore, in eight feet of water, a squall struck the boat, capsizing it, with the result stated. The names of the drowned were Mr. Johnson and his wife, John McAulister and his wife, John Burt and his daughter, Peter Ogur, Adolph Livineer's son, —— Holden, and Miss Thatcher. The bodies of all but Holden were recovered." On the same day, Miss Cora A. Brown, of Greenville, Pa., and Miss Carrie Stutt, of Warren, O., were drowned while bathing in the lake at Fairpoint, N. Y.

THE WEST.

THREE of the bandits who robbed the railroad train near Otterville, Mo., some three or four weeks ago, have been arrested and $6,500 of the stolen money recovered. The parties arrested are Bruce Younger, Hobbs Carey and Charles Pitts, all residents of Crawford county, Kan.

ACCOUNTS of grasshopper ravages in Iowa have been greatly exaggerated. Vast swarms have moved through the air, stopping at intervals to lunch off the growing crops, but nothing like wholesale devastation has taken place. The wheat crop is said to be fully an average one, and the prospect for corn was never better. ....A courier from Red Cloud Agency, who arrived at Laramie last week, brings the following interesting news from the seat of war in the Indian country: Friday, a chief of a large force of friendly Arapahoes, camped near the agency, reported that an Indian from the hostiles in front of Crook and Terry had arrived and talked with him. The Indian said that Sitting Bull had decided to make a stand, and was going to have his big fight where he is now; that he will either drive the troops back or die, and under no circumstances would he make peace until the whites are driven out or give up the country he is fighting for. He intends to fight to the death. The Indian also told Friday that Sitting Bull was receiving a great many reinforcements from the north, joining him in small parties from the Columbia river, from British America and Minnesota, and a good many Arickarees are among them. It is now believed that Sitting Bull has at least 12,000 well-armed warriors under his command.

ADVICES from the seat of war in the Indian country state that the "entire country between Powder and Rosebud rivers has been burned over by the Indians. They are now engaged in burning timber and driftwood along the Yellowstone with a view of depriving steamers of fuel. The whole Yellowstone country is alive with Indians. The hostiles are estimated to number 8,000 warriors. Rain-in-the-Face, the murderer who cut out Tom Custer's heart for a war-dance feast, is reported with 800 hostile warriors camped within sixteen miles of Standing Rock, being supplied with provisions by friendly relatives at the Agency. Gen. Crook wrote that when the Fifth Cavalry arrived he would have about 1,600 fighting men, besides friendly Indians, and intended to move without further delay. Arrangements had been perfected for full co-operation between Crook and Terry.... Chicago papers give the particulars of a fatal affray between two well-known citizens, Alexander Sullivan, Secretary of the Board of Public Works, and Francis Hanford, Principal of the North Side High School, resulting in the death of the latter from a pistol-shot wound inflicted by Sullivan. Hanford, it appears, made some serious charges damaging to Sullivan's wife, in connection with the management of the public schools. The latter sought out the author of the charges at his residence. An altercation ensued, which ended by Sullivan drawing a pistol and shooting Hanford through the bowels, causing death in a few minutes. Both were well-known and respected citizens. Sullivan's wife, née Margaret Buchanan, is a lady of culture, and well-known in literary circles. She has been for years a prominent magazine and newspaper writer.

ADVICES from the Big Horn expedition to Aug. 4, state that Gen. Merritt, at the head of the Fifth cavalry, had effected a junction with Gen. Crook's division. The columns thus reinforced numbered 2,100 fighting men, and had commenced a movement in the direction of Tongue river. Gen. Terry had not been heard from for nearly a month. He has about 2,000 men in his command. This makes about 4,000 men now in the field against Sitting Bull.

THE Chicago Evening Telegraph (a twilight edition of Storey's Times) has suspended after an inglorious career of eight weeks.... Hobbs Kerry, one of the men concerned in the Otterville (Mo.) train robbery, has made a confession. He says those engaged in the affair were Clel Miller, Frank and Jesse James, Cole and Bud Younger, Charles Pitts, William Chadwell, and himself. He also confesses to other robberies by this party, and says Clel Miller assisted in the robbery of the Huntington (W. Va.) bank and the El Paso stage-coach, and was present at the Gad's Hill (Mo.) train robbery.

THE SOUTH.

A REPORT comes from Sweetwater, Texas, that there are between 2,000 and 3,000 Indians camped on the north fork of the Red river, about twenty-five miles from Fort Elliot, busily engaged in "making medicine," as they call it, which is nothing more nor less than making preparations for going on the war-path. It is believed the savages are preparing for a general massacre, and the people on the frontier are much alarmed in consequence.

POLITICAL.

GEN. BENJAMIN HARRISON has been nominated by the Republican State Committee for Governor of Indiana, vice G. S. Orth, declined.

THE Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice made majority and minority reports to the House. The majority report recommends the restriction of the Judiciary fund to $2,500,000; finds that Davenport, Supervisor of Elections in New York, has not accounted for $34,000 given him from the Ku-Klux fund, and that the President and two Attorney Generals (Akerman and Williams) who supplied Davenport with the $34,000 diverted it from the proper purpose to one entirely foreign to the objects of the law. It is recommended, therefore, that Supervisors of Elections be abolished, and that the election laws of Congress be repealed, or, if not repealed, that strict accounting shall be made of the Ku-Klux fund, no part of it to be used in the machinery of elections; that the Attorney General take the necessary steps to recover the $34,000 unaccounted for; and that person be allowed to hold more than one office under the United States Government. The minority report says that the majority report is merely a campaign document, defends John I. Davenport, and claims that, instead of censure, Akerman, Williams and Davenport are entitled to commendation.

THE Alabama State election occurred on Monday, Aug. 7. The Democrats carried the State by an increased majority—George S. Houston being re-elected Governor—and secured a large majority in the Legislature. The Kentucky election was held on the same day, and resulted, as a matter of course, favorably to the Democracy. Henry Watterson, of the Courier-Journal, was elected to Congress from the Louisville District, to fill the unexpired term of E. Y. Parsons, deceased.

HORATIO SEYMOUR has written a letter declining the use of his name in connection with the Governorship of New York, and announcing his positive withdrawal from public life.

MR. BLAINE appeared at the Republican Convention of the Third Maine Congressional District Convention, the other day, and made a brief speech. He is rapidly regaining his health.... The Republicans of Missouri have placed in nomination the following ticket: For Governor, George A. Finkelenburg, of St. Louis; Lieutenant Governor, C. C. Allen, of Jasper county; Secretary of State, Eugene F. Weigel, of St. Louis; Treasurer, Col. John Severance, of Buchanan county; Auditor, Gen. George R. Smith, of Pettis county; Attorney General, A. W. Mullins, of Linn county; Register of Land, Richard Drane, of Marion county; Judge of the Supreme Court, David Wagner; Railroad Commissioners, J. R. Allen, of St. Louis county; E. D. Harper, of Cass county; Isaac Hayes, of Macon county.... The Democrats of Tennessee, at their State Convention in Nashville, last week, renominated James D. Porter for Governor by acclamation .... The Independent Greenbackers have issued a call, and are making preparations for a grand mass ratification meeting, at the Exposition building, Chicago, on the 23d of August.

THERE are are now two Republican tickets in the field for State offices in Arkansas, headed respectively by Gen. A. W. Bishop and Joseph Brooks as candidates for Governor.

WASHINGTON.

GEN. SHERMAN says the proposition from the agency Indians that a cessation of hostilities with Sitting Bull and his adherents shall be arranged in the interest of a permanent peace, is altogether out of the question, for several reasons. The Indian tribe with which the Government is at war is not such a nation as to allow us to establish any negotiation as this or any similar character. No confidence can be placed in their promises.

IT was decided by the Senate Finance Committee, at a meeting held one day last week, to postpone consideration of the House bill repealing the Resumption act until the December session.

GENERAL.

THE Blaine constitutional amendment, which recently passed the lower house of Congress by an almost unanimous vote, was as follows:

Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, two-thirds of each House concurring therein, that the following be proposed to the several States of the United States as an amendment to the constitution, namely:

"ART. 16. No State shall make a law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of the public schools, or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under control of any religious sect or denomination; nor shall any funds so raised, or lands so used, be divided among any religious sects or denominations. This article shall not vest, enlarge, or diminish the legislative power in Congress."

A letter received in Washington from Speaker Kerr confirms the report as to his unfavorable condition. He writes that he is compelled to spend most of his time in bed.

ADVICES from the Northwest territory deny the report that the British Indians will join the Sioux in war. A Government mounted police force is watching the natives strictly, to guard against their crossing the line.

THE ship Yarmouth, from Baltimore for Halifax, was recently capsized in a hurricane and sunk. The Captain, his wife, two children, and all the crew but four were lost. The survivors, after fifty-six hours' exposure on pieces of the wreck, were rescued.

FOREIGN.

MORE battles are reported between the Turks and Servians, at places and under commanders with equally uncivilized names. The only definite result is that one of the Turkish army corps seems to have been driven into a position from which the only escape is to cross the Austrian frontier. Should this be done, the force would be disarmed and interned by the Austrians.

The Porte has paid to the families of the German and French Consuls, who were murdered at Salonica, as indemnity, £40,000.

ANOTHER disastrous railway accident is reported from England, by which twelve persons were killed and thirty injured. The affair happened on the Somerset and Dorset road, near Radstock.

THE news from Europe is that the war in Servia is substantially over. The Turks have taken Gurgusovatz, an important position on the southeastern frontier of Servia, at the junction of the road from Paratch in with that from Nisch to Widdin. This opens up to them the valley of the Morava, and through that the way is tolerably straight to Semendria and Belgrade. Before the advance is made, however, there will be a junction of the two Turkish forces, which have penetrated Servia from the south and west, and the combined army will number, all the forces being estimated, upward of 100,000 men. The determination expressed at Constantinople, when war was declared, was to overrun Servia, and reduce it to a province of the empire. This will be done unless Austria or Russia interferes. And after Servia, Montenegro will be attended to.

THE French Government has granted the permission necessary to lay an ocean telegraph cable between Paris and New York, and stock-subscriptions will soon be opened.... A Vienna dispatch states the Servian Premier Ristics rejects all offers of mediation, declaring that Servia will not treat for peace until the Turks are under the walls of Belgrade.... The extensive London establishment of Grant & Co., engravers, lithographers and publishers, has been destroyed by fire. Loss estimated at $1,000,000 .... A dispatch from St. John, N.B., states that extensive forest fires are raging in that district. Thousands of acres of timber land had been burned over, and the flames were spreading, threatening several towns.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, Aug. 4.—Senate.—A bill was passed authorizing the employment of Indian scouts.... Senate bill to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and leg, in lieu of $24 per month now allowed, was passed.... On motion of Allison, the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the River and Harbor appropriation bill, and agreed to a conference asked for by the House.... The Post-road bill was considered.

House.—Hurlbut, from the Committee on Civil-Service Reform, submitted the report of the committee in regard to the Chicago Pension Agency evidence, which was ordered printed. The committee recommended the passage of resolutions declaring that "the acceptance or demanding of money by any person as a consideration for real or pretended influence in procuring appointments to public offices is disgraceful to the individual and prejudicial to the public interest, and that such misconduct is good cause for removal," and directing the Judiciary Committee to report a bill for the punishment of such offenses.... Lord, from the Judiciary Committee, reported back (with an amendment) what is known as the Blaine echo amendment to the constitution. After debate, the House proceeded to vote on the resolution and it was adopted—yeas, 186; nays, 5.... Garfield replied in a set speech to Lamar on the political situation. He spoke for two hours, and was listened to with close attention.

SATURDAY, Aug. 5.—Senate.—The Senate devoted nearly the entire day to a political discussion of Southern affairs, the occasion being the calling up of Morton's resolution to print 10,000 copies of the President's message and accompanying documents on the Hamburg affair. Morton and Thurman took the lead for their respective sides in the debate—Patterson, Cameron, McMillan, and Gordon participating.

House.—Majority and minority reports of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and in the Department of Justice were made by Messrs. Clymer and Caulfield, and were ordered printed.... Cox, the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill to repeal sections of the resumption act of July 15, 1875, which direct the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem in coin the legal-tender notes then outstanding. After an hour and a half of debate a vote was taken on the bill, and it was passed by the following vote: Yeas—Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Banning, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Brown, N. Y., Brown, Kan., Cabell, Caldwell, Ala., Caldwell, Tenn., Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Caulfield, Clarke, Ky., Clarke, Mo., Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cox, Dibrill, Douglass, Durham, Eden, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Franklin, Gause, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Harrison, Hartsell, Haymond, Hinkle, Herford, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurd, Jones, Ky., Landers, Ind., Lane, Lawrence, Lewis, Lynde, Mackey, Marsh, McFarland, McMahon, Milliken, Mills, Morgan, Mutchler, Neal, New, Payne, Phelps, Poppleton, Randall, Rea, Reagan, Reilly, John, Rice, Riddle, Robinson, Savage, Sheakle, Singleton, Slemons, Smith, Ga., Southard, Springer, Slinger, Stevenson, Stone, Teese, Thomas, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turner, Van Vorhees, Vance, O., Waddell, Walker, Va., Walsh, Wells, Whitthorne, Williams, Ind., Williams, Ala., Wilshire, Wilson, W. Va., Yates, Young—106. Nays—Abbott, Adams, Bagby, Bailey, O. A., Bagley, J. H., Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bell, Blair, Burchard, Ill., Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Day, Durand, Eames, Ely, Freeman, Frye, Gibson, Hale, Hancock, Hardenberg, Harris, Mass., Henderson, Hewitt, N. Y., Hoar, Hoge, Hayner, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kimball, Lamar, Lapham, Levy, Lynch, MacDowell, McCrary, Mead, Metcalf, Miller, Monroe, Morrison, Nash, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Piper, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Schleicher, Sinnickson, Small, Smith, Pa., Strait, Stowell, Thompson, Thornburg, Townsend, Pa., Tufts, Wait, Walker, N. H., Ward, Warren, Wells, Miss., White, Whiting, Williams, A., Mich., Willis, Wilson, Iowa, Woodburn—86.... Cox then reported a bill, which was passed, creating a commission of three Senators, three Representatives, and three experts, who shall report on or before the 15th of next January upon all matters relating to the currency.

MONDAY, Aug. 7.—Senate.—The House amendments to the Senate bill extending the time for the redemption of lands sold by the United States for direct taxes were agreed to, and the bill passed.... Majority and minority reports of the special committee appointed to inquire into the late election in Mississippi were presented. .... The House bill to repeal the resumption-day clause of the Resumption act of 1875, was read and referred.... The House joint resolution, proposing a sixteenth amendment to the constitution, prohibiting the appropriation of any school fund for the support of sectarian schools, etc., was, after discussion, referred to the Judiciary Committee.... The Senate resumed consideration of Morton's resolution to print 10,000 copies of the President's message and accompanying documents in regard to the Hamburg affair. A long and heated political debate followed, the chief participants being Edmunds, Logan and Eaton.

House.—A resolution was offered by Douglass (Va.) allowing committees of investigation to report at any time this session. This was resisted by the Republicans, who resorted to filibustering to prevent the adoption of the resolution. A compromise was finally reached, in the shape of a rule providing that the investigating committees shall be authorized to report at any time during the present session, provided the majority give notice to the minority to submit their report forty-eight hours before the time of the presentation of the report to the House, so that both reports may go in together.

TUESDAY, Aug. 8.—Senate.—The Senate passed the bill to establish the Territory of Pembina out of a portion of Dakota.... Edmunds called up the reports of the majority and minority of the committee which investigated the circumstances attending the late election in Mississippi, and it was ordered that they be printed in the Record, and lie upon the table.... Logan, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported adversely on the House bill to pardon deserters from the army, and it was indefinitely postponed.... The Senate then resumed consideration of the resolution of Morton to print 10,000 copies of the message of the President and accompanying documents in reference to the recent trouble at Hamburg, S. C., and Eaton spoke in opposition thereto. He was followed by Patterson, who spoke in favor of the resolution.

House.—Landers introduced a bill to secure the prompt resumption of specie payments.... A bill was passed to print 100,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1874, and 200,000 copies of the report for 1875, and appropriating $130,000 therefor.... An effort was made to reach a vote on Bland's Silver bill, but filibustering on the part of the opponents of the measure forced a postponement. Lawrence introduced an amendment to the constitution for that known as the Blaine school amendment:

"ART. 16, SEC. 1. No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

"SEC. 2. No public property or money raised by taxation or from any public fund or property in any State or place subject to the legislative power of Congress shall ever be given to or be under control of any religious sect or denomination.

"SEC. 3. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Referred to the Judiciary Committee.... The House was the scene of another lively political debate, in which Hale and Cox were the chief participants.

WEDNESDAY, Aug. 9.—Senate.—A number of bills were passed, among them the House bill to allow homestead settlers to make proof of settlement before the Courts, as well as before the Receiver.... Windom, from the conference committee on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, reported that the committee had been unable to agree, and moved that a new conference be authorized.... There was a renewal of the debate on the resolution to print 10,000 copies of the President's message on the Hamburg affair. Speeches were made by Patterson and Wallace.

House.—The majority and minority reports of the Postoffice Committee on the investigation into straw bids, etc., made by Clark, of Missouri (Chairman), and Cannon, were ordered printed, and laid on the table.... Bagby, from the Committee on Invalid Pension, reported a bill giving a pension of $30 a month to the widow of Capt. Yates, of the Seventh cavalry, killed at the battle of the Little Big Horn. Passed.... Lynde, from the Judiciary Committee, made a report in the case of Schumaker and King as connected with the Pacific Mail subsidy, and Lord, of New York, made a minority report. The majority report recommends that the House leave the charges against the members where they now are, in Court. The minority report is that the House has jurisdiction, and that the Committee on Civil-Service Reform should ascertain and report the facts. McCrary signs an additional paper expressing the opinion that the House may properly take jurisdiction of the charge.... The House then went into a discussion of political subjects, and George F. Hoar delivered a set speech in reply to Lamar. Hooker replied to Hoar.... Randall, from the conference on the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Appropriation bill, reported that the committee had come to no conclusion, and explained the differences. Lord offered a resolution, which was agreed to, that the conferees recede from their position regarding the salary of the President and Congressmen, and the same conference committee was reappointed.

THURSDAY, Aug. 10.—Senate.—The amendment of the House to the resolution of the Senate to print 4,000 copies of the majority and minority reports of the special committee which recently investigated Mississippi affairs, was agreed to, and the resolution passed.... The conference report in the River and Harbor bill was agreed to. The bill appropriates exactly $5,000,000.... The Senate then resumed consideration of the resolution to print 10,000 extra copies of the message of the President and accompanying documents in regard to the recent difficulty at Hamburg, S. C. Sherman spoke in favor of the resolution and McDonald in opposition.

House.—Lord offered a resolution reciting that the right of suffrage prescribed by the constitutions of the several States is subject to the Fifteenth amendment, and that the exercise of said right should be faithfully maintained and observed by the United States, and that it is asserted that the exercise of said right is in some States, notwithstanding the efforts of good citizens, resisted and controlled by fraud, intimidation, and violence, so that the object of the Fifteenth amendment is defeated, and that all citizens, without distinction of race or color, are entitled to the rights conferred by said amendment, and declaring that all attempts by force, fraud, terror, intimidation, or otherwise, to prevent a free exercise of the right of suffrage, should meet with certain, condign, and effectual punishment, and that in any case which has heretofore occurred or which may hereafter occur in which violence or murder has been or shall be committed by one class or race on another, the prompt punishment of the criminal or criminals is imperatively demanded, whether the crime be punishable by a fine and imprisonment or one demanding the punishment of death. A vote was taken on the preamble, which was agreed to—yeas, 124; nays, 34. A vote was then taken on the resolution, and it was adopted with only two dissenting votes—Bland (Mo.) and Reagan (Texas).... The majority of the Committee on Naval Expenditures presented a report directing the removal of Isaiah Hanscom, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repairs, and declaring a want of confidence in Secretary Robeson. The minority presented a report combating the conclusions of the majority, but without any considerable debate the majority report was adopted.... The majority and minority reports of the Committee on Louisiana Affairs was ordered printed.

An Undertaker.

A gentleman who has been traveling for a paint and oil house not far from Oliver street, in this city, was interviewed by a friend in the country relative to business, when he was informed that he had "gone into the undertaker's business." The friend expressed much surprise, until the gentleman informed him he "had undertaken to find business but had failed." Pass the cigars.—Boston Globe.

CENTENNIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

New England Farmers' Home—Kitchen—Austria and Hungary—Brazil—Canned Goods—The Erie Preserving Company.

The personal history of some of the men and women who have helped to make this International Exposition famous would be quite as interesting to multitudes as the Exposition itself. And each characteristic exhibition here, which attracts special notice, has a personality behind it, whose untiring efforts have made it a success. Take the

NEW ENGLAND KITCHEN,

so crowded through the day that a policeman at the door stops the eager throng every few minutes, to prevent crushing within. Its exhibitor, Miss E. D. Southwick, of Boston, having spent some four or five months at the Vienna Exposition, in 1873, and noticing how many were attracted to the representation of the peasant homes of Austria there, conceived the idea that an exhibition of the farmers' homes in New England would prove equally as great an attraction here. She therefore applied to the Ladies' Centennial Commission, at Boston, to aid such an enterprise, but they declined. She then applied to the State Centennial Commission, and they encouraged her, and allowed her headquarters at their office. Her first design was to have the farmers of New England unite and build a

NEW ENGLAND FARMERS' HOME.

For this purpose she wrote, under sanction of the commission, and of Dr. G. B. Loring, President of the New England Agricultural Society, to fifty-one agricultural societies in Massachusetts, and but one of them answered her, to the effect that it would do what the other societies did; and, as the others did nothing, no aid came from that quarter. She wrote to various societies in New England, but received no encouragement. Meantime she exhibited her model of a New England kitchen, and such antique articles of household furnishing as she could collect, at the State Agency in Boston. The State Agent of Connecticut, to whom she applied for help, encouraged her, with expectations and the interrogatory, "Why don't you build a bed-room?" but gave her never a cent. But one party gave $50. East Hampton and Milford men gave $150. The colored people of Boston $100, and three individuals contributed enough to increase the whole sum to $1,000. She has built the bed-room, a modern kitchen for practical use and by way of contrast to the New England kitchen, and also a small summer kitchen, at a cost of an additional $1,000, at her own risk, supports twenty attendants and servants, and serves up good, wholesome and toothsome New England dinners at 50 cents a meal. The dress of the attendants, and the furnishing of the kitchen and bed-room, sets back the sun in the dial of Ahaz 200 years. To accomplish what she has done, Miss Southwick has had to give her whole time, and her personal supervision, even to the building of the kitchen, and then, for lack of competent workmen and proper materials, has not been able to fully carry out her own idea. The chimney she wished built of sticks and clay, as in the olden time, but had to content herself with better materials. But it is, after all, a marvelous success.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY

exhibit their goods together in Agricultural hall, and are worthy of mention, not so much on account of the extent, as the excellence of their display. Their Vienna beer, a milder and pleasanter drink than the American lager, represents the largest brewery in the world. Their leading article of exhibit is wool from which the finest cloths are made. Next comes their wines, of which they have a very large display; chief among them their Styrian wines celebrated all over the continent. Hops from Bohemia, superior to any grown in the world, are also largely exported. Malt from Dalmatian barley, as fine as I ever saw. Brandy is made in most provinces. Dalmatia is especially noted for good brandy and other liquors. Beside these, honey, mostly from Bohemia and Hungary. Flax and hemp chiefly from Bohemia, and Silicia noted for its fine linens; scythes from Styria; lentils, a small, flat, circular grain, used by the peasantry as a vegetable food. They have also mines of iron, coal, copper and precious stones.

Mr. Alfred C. H. Froemcke, one of the Commissioners from Vienna, is most obliging and efficient in giving full information respecting the products and resources of Austria and Hungary, and his example might be imitated profitably by the Commissioners of some other countries.

BRAZIL,

in the main building, exhibits a little of everything—blank-books, diaries, carving, furniture, pottery, soap, candles, saddles, leather, dressed skins, hats, dress goods, minerals of all kinds, diamonds, ores, etc. A very fine desk, made in the Rio Janeiro House of Correction, of seventy-six different kinds of wood, attracts much attention.

But the exhibit of feather-flowers next the main aisle, in a large octagonal show-case, including tropical birds, and a large display of butterflies of exquisite beauty admirably arranged, is the cynosure for all ladies' eyes.

CANNED GOODS.

One is almost puzzled to know, in looking at the immense amount of canned goods on exhibition in Agricultural hall, what becomes of it all. Yet it is said that the best and largest firms in this line find it difficult to supply their customers. One thing, at least, is patent to all visitors, viz.: that there is a multitudinous display of canned fruit and vegetables here, from almost every State and country under heaven, all challenging admiration and claiming superiority.

BUT THE ERIE PRESERVING COMPANY, of Brant, Erie county, N. Y., have the best canned fruit and vegetables exhibited here.

S. M. B.

Custer as a Logician.

One day a trooper, whose joints were stiff and whose bones ached from riding an ugly horse, fell out of his seat of fours on drill, and declared he would be shot before he would drill another half hour. He was on his way to the guard house when Custer rode up, ordered his release, and requested his presence at headquarters. The sulky-tempered trooper followed the General, wondering if he was not to be placed against the fence and shot. Custer had far different intentions. Bidding the trooper sit down, the General calmly inquired:

"Why did you refuse to drill?"

"Because I am tired out and shaken up and I know all about every drill."

"When I took this brigade," said the General, "I thought I knew just how to command it. I have learned something new every day; I shall always be learning. If you refuse to drill all others will soon refuse. Then the discipline will relax, men and horses forget, and in our first action we shall be cut to pieces for want of intelligent maneuvering. I want you to be a man, and yet you must be a machine to obey."

The soldier was silent.

"I ride five miles to your one," continued the General. "I sleep three or four hours; you sleep seven or eight. I have 4,000 men to care for; you have only your horse. I have a thousand complaints to listen to; you have none. I have five times your work, fare no better and will be shot as soon as you are. If I take all this burden and trouble and hard work on my shoulders are you not willing to bear a trifle?"

The trooper returned to his saddle. One day, a year afterward, he died before Custer's eyes, died so bravely that the General said of him: "An army like that man could conquer the world."

Brigham's Tribe.

The prospects of a Mormon revolution in the event of Brigham's being gathered to his fathers are exceedingly flattering. Brigham, Jr., and Joseph F. Smith, a nephew of the first prophet, are both candidates for the succession, and, while the present head of the church undoubtedly favors the former, the claims of the latter will be supported by a very powerful party. In the event of a conflict, Smith's opposition to polygamy will give him a very considerable advantage over the lineal descendant of the present "prophet."

The New Postage Rates.

Statement of the regular rates of postage on regular and transient mail matter, domestic and foreign:

Postal cards, 1 cent each, go without further charge to all parts of the United States and Canada; with an additional 1-cent stamp they go to all parts of Europe.

All letters to all parts of the United States and Canada, 3 cents per half ounce.

Local, or "drop" letters, that is, for the city or town where deposited, 2 cents if delivered by carriers, and 1 cent where there is no carrier system.

Newspapers, daily, semi-weekly, tri-weekly and weekly, regularly issued and sent to regular subscribers, 2 cents per pound, payable at the office of publication; newspapers and magazines less frequently than once a week, 3 cents per pound.

All other printed matter, including transient newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, hand-bills, books, 1 cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof.

On unsealed circulars, and all mailable matter of the third class, other than that designated in the foregoing section, postage as heretofore, 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof.

The following are the postal rates with Europe. The rates for letters are for the half-ounce or fraction thereof, and those for newspapers for four ounces or fraction thereof:

To Great Britain and Ireland, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents; France, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents; Spain, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents; to all parts of Germany, including Austria, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents; Denmark, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents; Switzerland, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents; Italy, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents; Russia, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents; Norway, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents; Sweden, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents; Turkey, European and Asiatic, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents; Egypt, letters 5 cents, newspapers 2 cents.

Packages containing liquids, poisons, glass, explosive chemicals, live animals, sharp-pointed instruments, sugar, flour, or any other matter liable to deface or destroy the contents of the mail, are unmailable; are not placed in or allowed to pass through the mails, under any circumstances.

By a late act of Congress, also, all letters or circulars relating to lotteries, gift concerts or schemes of chance of any description, are declared to be unmailable and entirely excluded.

Strength of the Sioux and Their Allies.

To understand the extent of the Indian war we now have upon our hands, it is necessary to have a correct knowledge of the position and power of the hostile Sioux and their allies. In one of the late reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs the location of the different agencies is given, with the number and condition of the Indians on each reservation. The entire Indian population of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, is estimated at 295,084. In Dakota, Montana, and Wyoming there are nearly 70,000, divided as follows:

DAKOTA AGENCIES.	Men and women.
Sisseton Agency (Sioux)	1,534
Devil's Lake (Sioux)	1,020
Grand River (Sioux)	6,269
Cheyenne River (Sioux)	6,000

According to the estimates given in the same report, about 60 per cent. are women; this gives 27,000 Indian warriors within this territory, which, considering the number of bands that have never settled at any of the reservations, is a low estimate of their strength. According to the same calculation, the Sioux and Cheyennes, now openly at war, would be able to bring nearly 22,000 men into the field.—New York Sun.

A Romance in Africa.

A recent French paper relates the following: "In the oasis of Feriana, in the regency of Tunis, dwells a wealthy Cadi, who possessed a lovely daughter, Miriam, or, as the Arabs call it, Meryem, by name. Her a brave young Arab Sheik, Ahmed-Bou-Merzan, belonging to one of the best families of the Aga-lik of Fez, desperately loved and asked in marriage. The Cadi consented, and the day was fixed. At the appointed hour the ardent bridegroom made his appearance, accompanied by a brilliant retinue of his friends and followers. To his utter astonishment and indignation the Cadi coolly told him that he had changed his mind about the marriage. What the Cadi's reasons were, whether he had merely heard something to Ahmed's disadvantage, or whether, as in the case of Lochinvar, another suitor had bid higher for the damsel's hand, does not appear. At all events, Ahmed-Bou-Merzan was no more disposed than young Lochinvar to take no for an answer in such a case. He drew his trusty cimeter, called upon his retinue to follow him to the death, charged upon the people of the Cadi, and the defenders of the 'dauor,' cut his way through to the tents of the women, seized the lovely Meryem (nothing loth perchance), placed her before him on his faithful steed and went off like a whirlwind to the land of Djebel-Mandra, leaving thirty-two dead warriors of Feriana behind him to testify to his prowess and that of his friends. The whole region is up in arms, and a 'goum' of 600 fierce cavaliers, at the last advices, was in hot pursuit of the eloping pair."

FOX-CHASING at night has become a standard amusement in Clark county, Ky. Ladies participate in the sport. A company of six ladies and six gentlemen, most of them married people and related to each other, were out after a fox on one occasion until 2 o'clock in the morning.

CHARLEY ROSS.

The Philadelphia Mulatto Disappears—Mr. Ross Convinced that He has Seen His Lost Son.

[From the Philadelphia Evening Chronicle.]

Those who take an interest in the recovery of Charley Ross, and they are legion, will learn with regret that "George," the mulatto, who suddenly appeared in this city on Wednesday of last week, claiming to be able to restore the missing boy to his parents, has as suddenly disappeared.

"George" was last seen on Market street, below Third, on last Tuesday, on which occasion he was in conversation with Mr. Ross, and promised to again meet the latter next day. At that time Mr. Ross, either in his indignant belief that the mulatto was trying to deceive him, or else through his excitement and desire to get at the full possession of what information the man had, said: "If I but made the effort I could have you hung!" "George" shortly afterwards left, and has been seen no more since.

It was rumored that orders had been given to the police to pick him up wherever found, but Lieut. Crout, who was asked about the matter yesterday, states that no such order has been given that he has heard of.

Mr. Ross, it is said, is convinced that the mulatto has seen Charley since the latter's abduction, and this fact alone made the bereaved father anxious to fully test the man's statements. These were never very definite, except in the one particular that he (the mulatto) had had charge of Charley Ross for about nine months, and knows where he is now, and could get him if proper measures were taken. He did not seem very anxious to get money from Mr. Ross, whom he never asked for any, but simply said it would take about forty dollars for himself and those who were to accompany him to make the trip to where the child is.

The general impression is that "George" should not have been left to come and go at his own will and pleasure. If he was a "beat" and his object was to make money, he deserved imprisonment for attempting to extort money, and if he really knew anything important of the whereabouts of Charley Ross, he could have been convicted on his own statements of concealment of the child and imprisoned, as Westervelt has been. In either event imprisonment would probably soon have revealed his true character, and if guilty of duplicity and attempted swindling he would well merit his punishment, while, if his statements were honest he would be compelled to divulge his full information on the subject.

Covering the Slopes of the Alps with Forests.

Among the objects exhibited at the recent Geographical Exposition in Paris is a series of maps illustrating the progress in reclothing the slopes in the Department of the Basses-Alps with a growth of wood, this relating especially to the basin of the torrent of Bourget, commenced in 1869. Considerable time was occupied by the preliminary surveys, but the process of replanting has already begun with such effect as to insure the protection of the Hamlet of Bourget, which had been threatened with destruction by being washed away. The influence exerted upon population and human existence by deforesting or the destruction of the woods is shown by the fact that in 1846 the population of one Department of the Alps of France amounted to 150,000 persons, while in 1872 only 137,000 could be enumerated, 19,000 having been forced to remove elsewhere in consequence of the decreasing quantity of fertile land.

A Timely Rescue.

The Troy (N. Y.) Press says: "Last week Saturday, a well-known citizen of Lansingburg, whose dread of notoriety has kept him from reporting the occurrence, was rowing down the river from Lansingburg. Happening to look into the water, while rowing near the shore in the vicinity of Bolton's brewery, he saw the body of a boy lying face upward on the bottom of the river. His first impulse was to dive into the water, and he did. Securing the body he carried it to a house, which singularly enough happened to be the residence of the boy's mother, who had, until the appearance of the stranger with his body, supposed that her son was in the yard playing. The body was still warm, and after an hour's labor the lad was resuscitated. He is now as well as ever, and will doubtless remember as long as he shall live how near he was on that occasion to death's door."

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Farmer.

A farmer furrowed his swarded field,
  And faltered not for the day;
He felt from the north a frost-wind blow,
  And the path of the sun was grey,
And the wheat-bird's whistle he heard from the bough,
And he knew that the weevil oft followed the plough.

He bent his lowly form to the task,
  Believing his labor a prayer:
So he plodded the pace of a cheerful man,
  Preparing his ground with care;
Whistled and plodded, then cast amain
For the harvest hour the seeding grain.

A farmer sat in his cottage door,
  Nodding a noon-time nap,
And the whitened wheat across the way,
  Waved on the meadow's lap;
With heavy heads, in a slumbering haze,
The stalks bent down in the August days.

As the farmer dozed, he dreamed and smiled,
  For his acres waved on in his eye;
And then the clink of the reapers he heard,
  And his stacks and his mows swelled high;
And over his cheek a soft tear crept,
  For the joy he felt as he nodded and slept.

He woke: in the haze of the hot afternoon,
  In health was he bent to the snath,
And over the fields the gavels stretched,
  In many a winding path;
The vision he saw had lightened his task,
And he learned that to pray we in labor should ask.

Around the Farm.

We had much rather have an old cow loose in our garden than to put it in charge of one of these non-pruning gardeners.—Moore's Rural.

To EXTERMINATE caterpillars on trees, they may be sprinkled with a solution of one part of sulphide of potassium in 500 parts of water. This, it is said, will kill the insects, and do no harm to the trees.

THE Cork oak appears to succeed as well in California as in its native country. Trees planted in 1861 and since pruned up, are now twenty-five feet to the lower branches. The bark on those trees is from one and a half to two inches thick and the peeling process may soon commence.

SCATTER your coal ashes under the plum and cherry trees from two to three inches thick as far out as the limbs extend, and you will find it a great preventive to the ravages of the curculio. Also mulch the currants and gooseberries heavily with it. Peaches and cherries require a dry soil, not so much as apple and pear trees.

IN large grounds very appropriate and comfortable accompaniments are rustic seats. As they are often made they are not very lasting, because the moisture remains under the bark, decay sets in and worms follow, making the seats simply disgusting. By using peeled sticks, and after they are put together giving them a good coat or more of paint, they become quite permanent affairs, and lose very little of their beauty for years.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Mirror and Farmer says: "Two years ago the Colorado beetle attacked my potato crop. After trying various things without success, I stumbled on a cask of lime which had become air-slaked. I commenced to dust it on the tops, and wherever it fell on the slugs they turned black and soon dropped off and died. I passed over the field three times between hoeing and blossom time, and found it not only sure death to the larvæ, but also of great benefit to the crop. Last year I tried the same remedy on another part of the town with the same good result."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Boston Cultivator gives his experience in the growth of forest trees. Norway spruce and Scotch larch were planted, and in nine years the spruce trees were fifteen feet high, with twelve feet spread of top. In fourteen years the larch were thirty feet high, with a spread of twenty feet, and a circumference of four feet at the base. One larch was forty feet high in seventeen years. Silver maple trees planted in 1864 are now thirty feet high, and seven to ten inches in diameter at the base. Elms planted in 1856 now range from thirty to forty feet high, and are fifteen in diameter.

THE POLICEMAN OF THE WOODS.—Tap! tap! tap! sounds out clear from the woods, as if a young drummer were trying to beat a tattoo. The noise really comes from a bright-looking bird, perched up high on some tall oak—now on one side and then on the other, sometimes with head downward, and then clinging to the under side of a large branch, occasionally knocking vigorously with his bill, as though he were at a friend's house and in haste to be invited in. It is the woodpecker, or, as he might be called, the policeman of the woods; for it is his business to keep the trees free from any insects or grubs who love to make a meal from the soft green wood and often do great damage, even causing the death of the tree. Mr. Woodpecker's practised eye can tell at a glance where one of these burglars is at work. Woe unto him when he finds it out! for he is quickly captured, and Mr. Woodpecker makes a fine meal of him as his reward.—The Banner.

About the House.

GRAPE CATSUP.—Take five pounds of grapes and one pint of vinegar; cook until you can strain through a seive; to the juice add two pounds of sugar, one tablespoonful of cinnamon, half a tablespoonful of salt, one of black pepper, and one of cloves; cook down to two quarts.

MOCK MINCE PIES.—To mince-pie lovers, the following is a nice summer substitute for the real article: One cup of vinegar, two cups of water, one cup of sugar, one of molasses, one cup of chopped raisins, two of bread-crumbs, one-half cup of butter, and two eggs. Spices to suit. This is for six pies.

IRONING.—To iron smoothly, purchase a few cents' worth of beeswax and rub it over the leaves of a thin pamphlet, which have been heated through with the flatiron. Keep it with the ironing sheet and blanket, and when the flatirons are to be used rub them over the waxed surface; then wipe gently on a soft cloth. Shirt bosoms can be easily ironed in this manner.

BEEF STEAK WITH ONIONS.—Broil the steak and cover with onions prepared as follows: Brown a quarter of a pound of butter in a frying pan; add one cup boiling water, a little salt and pepper. Into this put ten onions, cut up finely, and one spoonful of flour. Cook till the onions are well browned and quite soft, stirring frequently. Pour all over the steak very hot.

MERCURY exterminates fleas and bugs, but I think cleanliness the best and perhaps the only preventive. The common house-fly I do not molest, believing that it more than compensates for its trouble by clearing the atmosphere of effluvia and the animalcules which always arise from the putrefaction of decaying substances during warm weather.

POACHED eggs may be prepared as follows: Put a quart of water in a shallow saucepan, with two spoonfuls of vinegar and a little salt. Place over the fire, and when gently boiling, break the eggs into it, holding them as near the surface of the water as you can. Cook slowly for about three minutes. Lay thin slices of buttered toast upon a platter and remove them carefully with a perforated ladle, drain one minute, and lay upon toast.

How the Wounded of Reno's Command were Carried.

[Bismarck Cor. New York Herald.]

After Custer and Reno's great Indian battle on the Little Horn, the removal of the sick and wounded became a subject of serious consideration. No ambulances could be got into the country, and the nearest point to water transportation was twenty-two miles distant. Rafts were advised, but the Little Horn is so narrow, shallow and tortuous, rafts could not get down it. Then it was determined to carry the wounded by hand, but the soldiers were six hours in making three miles, and it took 150 men to move the litters. A man is a heavy burden, and two men could only carry about ten minutes without resting. The progress through the sage brush was tiresome in the extreme, and it soon became evident, if the wounded men were to be got to the boat in less than three days, a better mode of conveyance than hand litters must be provided. Lieut. G. W. Doane, Second United States Cavalry, was the man for the emergency, and proposed to Gen. Terry that if he would halt for half a day he (Lieut. Doane) would provide horse litters for the sick and wounded. The halt was ordered, and a detail of men placed at Lieut. Doane's service. He had no nails, but horses were shot and skinned for rawhide, which is the Indian's substitute for a nail; he had no rope, but the rawhide answered also for this. Two poles, thirteen feet long and seven inches in diameter, were laid side by side, three feet apart, then two cross-pieces, seven feet apart (the length of a bed) were laid across the poles and bound to them with rawhide. Next, a network of rawhide was woven from one pole to another, just as we used to cord a bed with rope. Two loops at the ends, reaching like a bent bow from one pole to another, completed the litter. A mule was backed in the front end, between the poles, which extended along his sides like a pair of shafts, and the loop placed over the pack saddle. Another mule was led into the rear end of the poles, with his head toward the front mule's tail and the loop of raw hides placed over the pack saddle and the litter was ready for transportation. A soft bed of grass, blankets, and robes was then made on the rawhide cords, and the man laid on it, with his head toward the front mule's tail and his feet under the rear mule's nose. It was astonishing how these litters would carry. The spring of the side-poles and the giving of the raw-hide destroyed all jolt, and, after a little traveling, the mules would take a uniform step, and even trot without hurting the wounded. Forty-two of these litters were made in half a day, and the wounded taken in six hours over a distance that would have required three days to carry them by hand. Even the sitting down and picking up of a hand-litter, the wounded said, caused them more pain than the trotting of the mules, with Dr. Doane's ingenious contrivance.

The Centennial Buildings.

The disposition likely to be made of the Centennial buildings when the Exhibition is over, is the subject of an article in the Philadelphia North American. It says the rumor of a contemplated purchase of one of the principal buildings for use as a railroad depot is without any tangible foundation, though by some of the officers it is expected that the Centennial management will be able readily to dispose of the material contained in several of the buildings to some one of the great railroad or other corporations of the country at 50 per centum of their cost. No proposition for the retention of the main building, however, has yet been made, and the giant structure will in all probability come down without loss of time, as will also Agricultural hall, and the United States Government building and the Woman's Pavilion, and their materials be disposed of to the highest bidders. Memorial hall, in which the money of the State is invested, Machinery hall and Horticultural hall, for the construction of which appropriations were made by the city of Philadelphia, will remain.

The Best He Could Do.

Among the passengers waiting at the Michigan Central depot the other day for the Chicago express was a man with a leg off, two or three fingers gone, and otherwise a bad cripple. Some sympathetic soul started out to take up a collection for the benefit of the cripple, and the hat went round. Some gave liberally, and others what they could well spare, and the hat was finally presented to a young man with a very lean sachel in his hand. He slowly and solemnly pulled out a thin wallet, looked it over and over, and as the man with the hat requested him to hurry up he dropped the photograph of a girl with a long nose into the tile and said: "That's the best I can do for the poor man unless he wants the gal herself. It jerks on the heartstrings to part with that picture, but a man with one leg off must be loved and taken care of."—Free Press.

KILLED BY A DOG.

Terrible Battle Between a Human Brute and an English Bull-Dog.

[St. Clairsville (Pa.) Cor. New York Times.]

John Connolly, better known as Butcher Connolly, who obtained considerable notoriety about the country by matching himself to kill rats like a terrier, and to fight with dogs, has died here from injuries received in a fight with a bull-dog. Connolly had been hostler at the tavern here. On the 8th of July he got drunk and proceeded to a place kept by Bryan Fogarty. Fogarty owned a full-blooded English bull-dog, which usually lounged about the saloon, and which, despite its savage appearance, never offered to interfere with any one. When Connolly entered the saloon this dog was lying under a small table in the room, with its eyes closed. Connolly got on his hands and knees and put his head under the table. The dog looked lazily up into his face and wagged his tail good-naturedly. The human brute, however, by a sudden movement seized one of the dog's ears, which were half cropped, in his teeth, and, dragging him from under the table, commenced shaking him. The bull-dog, true to his nature, did not utter a sound, although blood streamed down from his ear over his face. After two or three shakes given by Connolly, his short hold on the dog's ear tore loose, and the dog fell to the floor with a savage growl, and rushed upon his inhuman assailant. Connolly dropped on his hands and knees and met the dog with a blow of his fist which staggered him back, but he at once renewed the onslaught.

At this juncture two men who were in the place offered to interfere, but Fogarty exclaimed, "Let 'em alone. I hope to God the dog will kill him." The second rush of the dog was more successful, and he seized Connolly in the forearm that was raised to knock him off. Connolly clutched the dog by the throat and choked him loose, and remained on his knees to receive the attack. The dog made another rush, this time for the throat of Connolly, but was again foiled, and caught the man in the muscle of the left arm, biting it clear through, and tearing out a large piece of flesh. Still Connolly remained on the floor, apparently awaiting to seize the dog in some advantageous spot. The latter in his fourth attempt sunk his teeth in the left shoulder of Connolly, and the man could not shake nor choke him off. The dog shook his head and sank his teeth to their full length into Connolly's flesh, but the man seemed possessed of the very nature of the brute, and gave no sign that he was suffering or of surrender. By a peculiar movement he seized the foreshoulder of the dog, his most vulnerable point, in his mouth, and then the two brutes rolled about on the floor tearing each others' flesh. Blood ran in streams from each, and mingling with the dust that arose from the floor gave them both the appearance of demons.

This lasted at least five minutes, when the three spectators were sickened at the sight, and an attempt was made to separate the combatants. The dog was seized, but all the beating, twisting and burning that was inflicted on him failed to loosen the hold. Finally, Fogerty drew a pistol, and with the remark, "It's a shame that the best of the two has to die to save the worst," placed it to the dog's side and shot him through the heart. Even after he was dead his jaws had to be pried loose from Connolly's flesh. Connolly attempted to get upon his feet, but fell back exhausted and weak from the loss of blood. He was given a glass of brandy, and a doctor was called in. Half of the large muscle of his left arm was bitten away, and his forearm was torn frightfully, the bone being exposed in one place. His shoulder was literally a pulpy mass, both bones and flesh being ground together by the teeth of the dog. There were other severe injuries on Connolly's person, and the doctor at once gave it as his opinion that the condition of the man was critical. He finally died in violent convulsions.

Shyness Exemplified.

A young lady in a neighboring town, one day last week, went into a dry-goods store and thus unburdened herself:

"It is my desire to obtain a pair of circular elastic appendages, capable of being contracted or expanded by means of oscillating burnished steel appliances that sparkle like particles of gold-leaf set with Cape May diamonds, and which are utilized for retaining in proper position the habiliment of the lower extremities which innate delicacy forbids me to mention."

The vender of calicoes was nonplussed, but, not wishing to appear ignorant, said that he was "just out."

After her departure he ruminated in silence for a few moments, when a new light broke upon his distracted brain, and he burst forth with—

"By thunder! I'll bet that woman wanted a pair of garters."

A Model Farmer.

Jim Frazier has been cutting grain for over two weeks, and has one of the finest crops ever raised on the Missouri bottom. He has one hundred and forty acres of winter wheat, and will clean twenty-five bushels to the acre; eighty acres of rye, sixty acres of barley and twenty acres of oats, making a total of three hundred acres of small grain. He has also four hundred and seventy acres of corn, eighty acres of which is in tassel, being the early Dent variety. He is feeding three hundred head of hogs, one hundred head of which are ready for market, and has just shipped sixty head of fat cattle, and has several car-loads left. He commenced threshing his wheat Thursday, and expects to clean up the whole business before the machine moves. That is the way to farm. Who can beat it? Don't all speak at once.—Hamburg (Mo.) Democrat.

Post-Mortem Relations.

The case of A. T. Stewart and his cousins has been superseded in interest by the case of Bridget Curtin and her cousins. Bridget was not a merchant prince or even princess; but she kept an apple stand for many years in New York, and by prudence and frugality amassed $5,000. The relatives whom she lacked in her life-time came to the $5,000 when she died a few days since, and the army of cousins to the third and fourth generation was almost as great as that with which Judge Hilton has been waging war. The battle ended, however, in the Curtin case by the discovery of a first cousin, who took the spoil, leaving the others disconsolate.

CONCERNING CATS.

A Woman Thinks they Ought to be Killed and Buried.

Mrs. Jane Grey Swisshelm writes all the way from Leipzig to the Pittsburgh Commercial to express her utter detestation of cats. She expresses the opinion that the agricultural societies ought to offer bounties for their scalps, and goes on in this wise:

"No one who has not paid attention to the subject can have any idea of the number of birds and birds' nests destroyed in one year by one cat, and, to me, it is a wonder that there are any birds left in the United States. To be sure, there are very few. I have heard more bird songs here in Leipzig in the seven weeks I have been here than I ever did in seven years at home, and there I lived most of the time in the country, while here I am in the city. Our street terminates abruptly on the confines of a garden which must embrace twenty acres, and is surrounded on three sides by high houses. Our block is the last on the street, and our rooms at the end next to this garden, which is full of tall trees and shrubbery and flowers and pleasant walks, and I think there are more birds in it than in Cherryhill township, Indiana county, Penn., in which our summer home was situated, and which is a very large township, not less than twenty miles square. Every family there, but one, kept cats to amuse the children and catch rats, and as a cat never touches a rat while it can get a bird, or a nest of birds, or eggs, and as they can easily follow a bird to its nest and cannot follow a rat to its, there are not many birds left when cats fail to catching rats. Nobody raised fruit there except by accident. All the trees were decorated with caterpillars' nests, and the last year we were there the worms attacked the elder bushes and blackberries, the main dependence of the people for fruit. One might see 'intelligent farmers' sitting caressing cats, while the worms were devouring their crops, and their faithful guardians were in pussy's maw. I used to be so tried that I should have been resigned to the dispensation of Providence if I had heard some morning that the cats were eating the men instead of the birds. It would certainly be a great blessing to the country if they would just take a taste off enough members of agricultural societies to wake them up so that they could see the havoc these cruel, treacherous beasts of prey, these unnatural, monstrous companions of our children, have been making with our forest songsters and prairie fowl. Two cats will be pretty certain to destroy every bird's nest on a farm of 100 acres, except those of swallows and martins, which are out of their reach. The nests of the most valuable game birds are nearly all built on the ground, and are completely at pussy's service. The people eat no partridges, for the cats have not had quite enough. The worms eat the roses around our doors, while the cat stands guard over them at their work to keep the birds away, and we repay her labors by saucers of milk and no end of caresses."

Extraordinary Case of Female Frenzy.

One of the most remarkable cases of genuine hysteria on record was brought to light day before yesterday in Brooklyn, in a proceeding for separate maintenance by Mrs. Frederika Newman against Mr. Myer Newman. The parties are well known; the husband is a well-to-do merchant in this city, and the wife is a large, fine-appearing woman, noted for the richness and extravagance of her attire. She was in court, dressed in the tip of the fashion, and swore bluntly that her husband abused and maltreated her shamefully. The husband then gave his evidence (which, it is but just to say, was corroborated by several physicians and neighbors). He testified that, on the 6th inst., she met him in New York and began an angry altercation. He proceeded as follows:

"She was excited and began to cry; said she wanted to go to another house; rather than go home she would jump into the river; told her I could not afford to rent another house; she then began to make a noise while on Grand street; I took her to a drug store, where she became quiet; on the ferry she again began to scream in a hysterical manner; on arriving in Brooklyn, and after getting on board a car, she renewed the disturbance; the passengers were frightened, and we were obliged to leave it; we then took another car, when she again began screaming; I took her to the Wall House and tried to soothe her by giving her brandy and water; the noise she made was so great that the proprietor ordered us to leave; when we came out she lay down in the gutter at the corner of Fourth and South Seventh streets; when asked to go home she said she would not until it was dark; I then hired a cab and drove her around Prospect Park until quite late, when we went home; on arriving there she began to scream again, and I had to call for the assistance of my neighbors; she has frequently scratched and bitten me; she will at times scratch me, and then tell me if I will let her scratch me five minutes longer she will be quiet; she frequently sold my furniture, and once sold my effects completely out; I am now paying rent for two houses, one in Bedford, and the other in Stuyvesant avenue; I could give, if necessary, the result of sixteen years' experience of just such treatment; it would fill a volume several yards long.—New York Letter.

A Heroic Death.

Mr. Sampson, a civil engineer of Providence, R. I., sacrificed himself at Nantucket, Mass., a few days ago, to save some friends. He was in a small boat with two other young men. The latter went forward to adjust the sail and left Mr. Sampson at the helm. By mistake he put the helm up instead of down, as he had been ordered, and the boat capsized, leaving the three men clinging to an oar. Finding this insufficient to sustain them, Mr. Sampson told the others that he thought their lives of more consequence than his own, gave up his hold and immediately sank. His friends were rescued.

CENTENNIAL INCIDENTS.

An Interesting Talk with a Turn-Stile Keeper.

[From the Philadelphia Times.]

"No, we are not having so much trouble now as we had," said the neatly-uniformed turn-stile keeper at one of the side entrances to the Centennial grounds to a Times reporter, "but still the fools are not all dead yet. You'll find, if ever the Centennial statistics are made up, that more than 10 per cent. of all the paying visitors make us more or less trouble by their mistakes."

His was a gate that was not heavily patronized in the earlier hours of the day, and the writer was just congratulating himself upon having an opportunity for a long talk when this hope was demolished by the approach of a Falstaffian German, whose puffing and blowing as he ascended the slight incline leading to the gate could be heard for a hundred yards.

"It vos hot," he puffed, as he drew from the depths of his trousers pockets a wallet almost big enough to serve an ordinary man for a valise, and took out a two-dollar note. After this he swabbed off his broad, red face—the reflex of many a departed lager—and waddled into the gate devoted to exhibitors and others on the free list.

"The other gate, sir," said the polite attendant.

"Vot vos der difference? My money was goot; no?"

An explanation five minutes long persuaded him to go to the other gate, but here another difficulty arose. The solid Teuton presented his two-dollar note, which of course was refused.

"Mein Gott!" he exclaimed, "von blaces dey tells me I shall not go in at de gate because it vos for gomplimentary beoples; at de other they won't take mein money."

Then there was another explanation, and at the end of twelve and a half minutes by the watch which is to regulate the time of the new State House clock, the irate German entered the grounds. For twenty yards or more he was heard grumbling, and he rather distrusted the genuineness of the crisp and new 50-cent notes given him in change.

"That Dutchman," said the gatekeeper, "is a fair sample of the people we have to deal with. We are required to be invariably polite, at the same time firmly enforcing the rules, but I can tell you in this sweltering weather a man is often tempted to break out into solid American cursing, even at the risk of losing his place. Old women, especially those from the country, are often very troublesome. The newspapers have done all they could to help us out, but these people don't read, it seems to me."

"There are counterfeits presented at the gates now and then, are there not?" asked the reporter.

"Not many now. Some time ago a lot of swindlers drove a flourishing trade in that line, but the Commissioners rooted them out. I think the few counterfeits presented now come to their holders in the ordinary course of business. There are places around the grounds where 50-cent notes are kept for the accommodation of visitors, but they are generally fresh from the Centennial Bank."

"You must see some queer people once in a while," said the reporter.

"I should say so. Why, almost the first customer I have in the morning is an old lady who has told me in the strictest confidence that she is the owner not only of the Centennial grounds, but of Fairmount Park itself. She seems to take delight in strolling about her improved property, but I don't believe she speaks to anybody on the grounds. Another of my early birds is a daily visitor to Machinery hall. He has a notion that he has nearly solved the problem of perpetual motion. The only drawback to his success, he thinks, is the destructibility of metals, and this trifling defect he feels sure to overcome before long. I believe he can't make the combination of metals he desires without capital, and I shouldn't wonder if he haunted the grounds in order to raise the wind."

"These turn-stiles seem to me a little narrow," said the reporter.

"Well, they're good enough for the ordinary run of mankind, but now and then somebody comes along that can't get through, and we have the dence of a time to fix things. One day a lady weighing 420 pounds (and actually as broad as she was long) applied at one of the gates for admission. She had a 50-cent note in her hand, but, contrasting the note with the size of the lady, the doorkeeper thought it was an old-time 3-cent shinplaster until he had looked at it through a magnifying glass. Then he asked the lady in the politest language to come in.

"'Where?' said she.

"'Here,' said he. Then he looked at her and turned pale. There was not a turnstile on the ground that would admit her, and the odds were twenty to one that she could not squeeze through any of the ordinary exits. He was in a quandary, but at length he decided to send for a Commissioner. When that official arrived an order was issued admitting the lady through one of the open gates used for carts and wagons. To register her one of the keepers had to pass through the turnstile and afterward come out in the usual way. Not long ago a fat boy from the far West (he weighed nearly 500 pounds) was passed through in the same way. The turn-stile keeper was somewhat indignant that the mother of this youthful mountain of flesh should have endeavored to pass him in at half-price on the ground that he was a minor."

Garibaldi to the Front.

Garibaldi has a new pet nationality. He writes to the Servians:

"MY DEAR FRIENDS: In the name of oppressed peoples I thank you for your indefatigable devotion to the holy cause. To-day every generous soul in the world ought to contribute to the deliverance of the Christian slaves from the horrible despotism of the Crescent. From Candia to the Pruth all peoples more or less oppressed must shake off the criminal yoke of the yataghan. My heart is with you and all other valorous souls that join in the holy crusade. A RAILROAD employe, in charge of three hands, some miles above Taylor, Tex., on the International and Great Northern railroad, attached his hand-car to the construction train, and thinking to ride on the truck would do as well, got aboard with his men. Soon after the train started; at the first bend in the road, the hand-car lost its equilibrium, and sailed through the air after the fashion of a kite, throwing the occupants off, and killing the boss instantly. The others escaped serious injury.

THE Argentine republic is making fair progress. In his recent address to Congress, President Avellanda said that the nation enjoyed profound peace, that wheat-growing had quadrupled within the last five years, and that the exports of 1875 were greater than those of any previous year. The President also observed that the Government expenses had been reduced $4,000,000, and that three railroads had been opened for traffic since October. Considering that the Argentine republic has not escaped "hard times," this report is satisfactory.

HARDLY a week ago, says a New York paper it will be remembered a boy from Porto Rico was arrested in New York for trying to throw a railway train off the track "just to see it jump!" On the 12th of July a precisely similar event occurred near Paris, where a policeman found a boy, 11 years old, Charles Prunière, busily occupied in rolling down stones on the track of the Great Northern railway from the top of the railway bridge. When arrested and questioned, the amiable child replied that he wanted to "see the fun when the train came along."

This is the Only Secret of Our Immense Trade.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. The impor has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and whol sale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prune Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these inter odi item profits. No middlemen with us. We are having a great run on Prunes. The Finest

Orth is no longer "hot as a lime kiln," but a cold, cold, corpus frigid as an iceberg. Poor Orth, like the Republican party, has died of an overdose of corruption.

Kentucky held county elections last Monday The Democrats had things pretty well their own way, all over. Henry Waterson, of the Courier-Journal was almost unanimously elected to Congress from the Louisville District.

While grave and serious doubts exist of the safety of the little command of General Cook, now confronting the most powerful and warlike tribes of our Indians, the general government decides that a large body of the American army shall idle away their time in the Southern States.

Hon. D. D. Pratt, whom Grant obliged to retire from the commissionership of the internal revenue bureau, because he did not "whack" with the whisky thieves, returned to his home in Logansport last week. He received a cordial reception.

Any man who reads the record of Samual J. Tilden and who is a degree removed from a fool can understand why he is heralded as the people's candidate of reform. The testimony of the New York Times, the most radical organ in the east, and representative of the republican extreme wing there as the Inter-Ocean is in the west, is worth persual. It was four years ago, under the management as now, that the Times spoke so extravagantly of Tilden. If the Times spoke truly then it is now covering itself with infamy. Tilden's record was made then, not since, and it stands a monument to his own honesty and greatness.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C. Aug. 12, 1876.

DEAR COURIER—The session still holds on, and the day of adjournment seems to be within the limit of the coming week, perhaps Tuesday. I did not expect to write another this session, but fates are against me, so I have concluded to give you a few remarks made by Mr. Williams of Indiana, commonly called "Blue Jeans," because of the clothes he wears. It will prove interesting reading, much more so at this time, than anything I could write. Mr. Cox speaking of appropriations said: But one thing is sure, Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen, that the main contest in the coming election will depend upon the fairness of those who seek the popular suffrage in reaching out after economy. The people do not want those economists who are all the time extravagant and who never go forward in the work of cutting down expenditures; men who like some upon the other side of the House—thank God they are very few—think they are starving because they do not wear purple and fine linen and fare sumptuously every day.

Mr. Foster. Kentucky jean. [Laughter.]

Mr. Cox. It would be a very happy thing if more persons, both Republicans and Democrats, wore homespun. It would be a good thing if the Government itself wore homespun. [Laughter.] But what I am referring to is not so much what you put on, as how you behave. [Laughter and applause.] I do not care how my friend from Ohio is dressed, I respect him; I suspect he is arrayed in fine linen; perhaps in royal English broadcloth, upon which he has fixed a high tariff. [Laughter] I am too near-sighted to see just how he is dressed, but the reporters will get it. I suspect that my friend is trying to affect some votes in Ohio and Indiana in our favor; I sometimes suspect him, owing to some spasm of goodness, as having a little leaning to our side of the House. I am glad he has made this reference to an honest, plain-dressed man, who has as Chairman of Accounts, been taking care of our accounts so honestly, and when he goes before the people of Indiana to give another account, as their man for Governor, they will take good care of him. [Applause]

Mr. Williams, of Indiana, rose.

Mr. Randal. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Williams] has been attacked, or rather his suit, I think he should be heard.

Mr. Williams, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker I have been here some four or five months a silent listener to the debates. I have endeavored to do my duty as a member here in supporting such measures as I thought right and proper. But this debate, like many others reminds me very much of a circumstance which took place about the first years that Indiana was a State. Late one evening in November a gentleman was seen to rein up his horse at the door of a cabin on the road. He inquired whether he could stay over night. The landlady who appeared at the door, replied, "Yes, sir; if you will put up with such fare as we can give you." The gentleman readily assented, for he was none of your Eastern gentleman; he belonged to the West, [Laughter.] Soon after the landlord appeared and took his horse and put it up. The landlady showed him into a room used as a parlor, sitting-room, dining-room and kitchen. The man was seated before a pleasant fire hung a pot of boiling water. The landlady soon came in again with a pan of corn meal, and commenced stirring it into the hot water, pouring it in with one hand and stirring it with the other until she got it to a proper consistency. for what we call in the western part of the country mush. [Laughter.]

A Member. O, yes; we know what that is. [Laughter.]

Mr. Williams, of Indiana. She then threw in some salt and gave it another stir. Her daughter, Sallie, came along, said: "I expect mother has forgot to salt the mush," and so she threw in a little salt and gave it a stir. The landlord brought in a stick of wood on his shoulder, and put it down near the fire, saying, "I expect my folks have forgotten to salt the mush," and he threw in a little handful of salt and gave it a stir. [Laughter.] The landlady coming in, took up her mush and set it on the table and all hands were called to supper. The landlord was the first to discover it. As soon as he took the mush and put it into his milk he said: "Ugh! you have ruined this mush; you have put too much salt in it." "Well," said the landlady, "I did not put in any more than I ought to put in it." The landlord said: "I did'nt know you put any in, so I salted it." "Why, mother," said Sallie, [Laughter.] "I salted it because I supposed you had forgotten it." Said the traveler: "I thought it was fashionable, and so I salted it." And now it has become so fashionable for every gentleman to talk on this floor that I thought I would try it, and now propose to throw in my handful of salt. [Laughter.]

I want to say something about these blunders which have been committed, as we are told, on the other side, and in such sharp fluent language by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I discover one of the blunders we have committed and I will stand by that blunder, is in reducing the salary of the President of the United States from $50,000 down to $25,000 a year. That is a very terrible blunder. That is one of the blunders, we have committed. [Laughter,] Another one of the blunders we have committed is to reduce the pay of members from $5,000 to $4,500 a year. Now is that a very serious blunder? [Laughter.] I think gentlemen who voted for that will not find it so dangerous a blunder as those who voted for an increase of salary two or three years ago. [Laughter.]

Another very great blunder we have committed is in not increasing the pay of the Cabinet officers. It was attempted to be increased, and we did not do it. That is one of our terrible blunders. I am glad we did not.

Another one of our terrible blunders is that our foreign ministers are to be starved to death; they are to be reduced from $17,000 a year down to $14,000 a year. Horrible! [Great Laughter.] We cannot get a man to touch any one of them at $14,000. [Laughter] He will not take it at all; he cannot.

Let us look at this thing with a broader view. We want to do right. We find bankers—and I am not in favor of bankers; some are around me, and they are clever gentlemen. I believe they are gone now. We find bankers cannot make $50,000 as the President makes it although they may have $250,000 capital. They cannot make $25,000 a year. You cannot find a mechanic who can do it The manufacturer who may be established in the city of Philadelphia cannot make it He cannot make $25,000, not to speak of $50,000 a year, although he may have an invested capital of over $250,000. Why should it be lamented as a blunder that we have reduced that salary from $50,000 down to $25,000? [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I have another word to say. I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Foster] made some remarks while my friend from New York [Mr. Cox] was on the floor. Am I right?

Mr. Foster, What was it?

Mr. Williams, of Indiana. The gentleman made some remarks from his seat.

Mr. Foster. What?

Mr. Williams, of Indiana, In relation to Kentucky jeans.

Mr Foster. Not it relation to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr Williams, of Indiana. Who did you mean?

Mr. Foster. I mean the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Cox,] [Laughter,] who once—[renewed laughter]—just allow me to finish.

Mr Williams, of Indiana. I do not wish to do anybody any injustice at all——

A Member. He said Canada broadcloth.

Mr Foster. I thought it was Canada jeans.

Mr. Cox. That was a great many years ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. Williams, of Indiana. I do not wish to misunderstand the gentleman from Ohio. I thought at the time that I was the one to whom he alluded. I am not ashamed of my old Kentucky jeans. The people of Indiana are not ashamed of me because I wear it. He then reminded me of a circumstance which took place a few days ago. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Foster] introduced a resolution requesting the Committee of Accounts to furnish this House with such refreshments as have been customary heretofore. [Laughter.] He is decidedly in favor of economy. [Laughter.] Now that gentleman introduced that resolution, and I want to show you what the effect will be when you pass it.

Mr Foster. Did it not pass unanimously?

Mr. Williams, of Indiana. It is in the hands of the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. Foster. Did it not pass unanimously?

Mr. Williams, of Indiana. The gentleman will not ask questions; I am not on the stand now. [Laughter.] I want to show you what will be the effect I have a memoranda of what happened two years ago, and when it is printed I want some copies sent to the gentleman's constituency as well as my own. [Laughter.]

Let me read some of the items from this account for articles furnished to the House of Representatives.:

Four and seven-eights gallons alcohol, and package for same, $13.19

One cask of sal-soda, $26,29.

Fifty pounds tea, $87.20; two hundred and twenty pounds granulated sugar, $25-80.

Two hundred and nineteen pounds powdered sugar, $25. 19; six boxes of lemons, $78.

Six boxes of lemons, $78; two hundred and five pounds sugar. $23.28.

Six boxes lemons, $75; two hundred and thirty two pounds sugar, $26.58.

The next is "one hundred fans." [Mr. Williams of Indiana, here imitated the action of using a fan amidst great laughter]

Two hundred and thirty-four pounds granulated sugar, $26.91

Two hundred and thirty pounds powdered sugar, $26.45; six boxes lemons, $72.

Six boxes lemons, $72;; one hundred and ninety-eight pounds granulated sugar, $12.77.

Six boxes lemons, $72; two hundred and five pounds of granulated sugar $23.58.

Six boxes lemons, $72.

Three boxes lemons, $36; one hundred and ninety-nine pounds granulated sugar, $22.88.

The total is $1,293.08. Now, who were running this House then? [Laughter.] The trouble with a great many of our friends here, and I am sorry to see it, is that they have been here so long, that looking up into those galleries they think the people there are the only constituents they have got. They forget that they have any constituents at home. If they thought a little less of the clothes that may be worn here, whether they be of broadcloth or Kentucky jean, and looked a little less at the galleries, it would be better for them. But they require only to go before the people once in two years; and that accounts for it. [Laughter.]

TEXTS FOR GENERAL LEE.

WHAT NEW YORK PAPERS SAID OF GOV. TILDEN IN 1874.

When He Was a Candidate for Governor.

The COURIER respectfully invites the attention of Gen. Lee to the following quotations from prominent independent and republican journals of New York:

An admirable man for public office.—N. Y. Evening Post (Rep.)

Samuel J. Tilden we believe to be a thoroughly honest man.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce (Ind.)

In public and private life, as a Democrat and as a citizen, his record challenges scrutiny.—N. Y. Mail (Ind.)

No one will deny his eminent respectability, or venture to cast any doubts upon his integrity.—Brooklyn Union (Rep.)

We have respect for Tilden. We utter nothing in disparagement of his character or his worth.—Albany Journal (Rep.)

His honesty and integrity lift him above the foul atmosphere in which they plan their nefarious purposes.—Brooklyn Argus (Ind.)

We respect Mr. Tilden personally, and are glad to have an honourable opponent in the coming campaign.—Buffalo Express (Rep.)

Mr. Tilden is a highly respectable candidate, and no man in the State who wishes to see the return of the Democrats to power need be ashamed to vote for him.—N. Y. Times (Rep)

We congratulate our Democratic friends on being led by so respectable a standard-bearer as Samuel J. Tilden. It is a good sign of the times when even the Democracy can nominate such a man.—Poughkeepsie Eagle (Rep.)

He has always had the reputation of high personal character, and his opposition to the Tweed gang of thieves has even placed him in some degree among political reformers. Mr. Tilden is a man of great wealth, and is generally recognized, we should say, as a thoroughly safe conservative person.—Troy Whig (Rep.)

FAULT FINDING READERS.

There are a great number of persons in this world who do not consider that everything that is made by human brains and hands must, of necessity, be imperfect, however strong the desire and however earnest the effort may be to have it faultless. And above all things else, they forget that a newspaper can be made for general circulation, and yet, in everything suit any one person. How a thoroughly good, enterprising newspaper is really like a well spread dinner table. It contains variety as well as quality, something for every taste, and enough of each kind to satisfy any reasonable appetite. It is not expected that any guest of a table should eat of every dish provided. It is not supposed for a moment that every dish will be palatable to every guest, or agree with one's digestion, but is is thought and reasonably too, that from the abundant bill of fare every guest can select enough that will be digestiple and agreeable to make a substancial and satisfactory meal. Just so it is with the well edited newspaper. No man is expected to read everything in the paper, or to like every everything if he reads it; but every man is expected to find enough that is good and useful, and acceptable, and agreeable in the columns spread out before him, to be a full equivalent for the trifling sum the paper costs him; and if he happens to run across an article which is not in accordance with his peculiar taste, or in opposition to his views, he has just to let that alone, leave it for another, whom it will just suit, and for whose peculiar fancy it was gotten up. Remember that editors have all sorts of people to please, and that in trying to do that he must necessarily say some things that don't exactly please you. And consider further that articles you can't endorse are not inserted to ruffle your feelings, but to satisfy the whims of other classes of readers, whose tastes run in a very different channel from yours. Be charitable.

The Logansport Pharos says, the last Democratic Legislature in this State saved the people, in the three items of legislative expenses, public printing and ordinary expenses, the sum of one hundred and thirty one thousand dollars. An item worth thinking about in these times.

"NEWS FROM THE WAR."

Two women sit at a farmhouse door,
 Busily reading the news,
While softly around them fair twilight sheds
 Her tender shadows and dews.

[illegible] smiles in the cloudless heaven above;
 Peace rests on the landscape fair;
And peace, like a holy spirit of love,
 Broods in the balmy air.

But not one ray of peace illumes
 Those sad and wistful eyes,
Which search that printed record o'er
 As mariners search the skies.

Look at their faces: one like a rose
 Fresh with the beauty of May;
The other, pale as a waning moon
 Seen through thin clouds of gray.

Yet, though one is young and the other old,
 With the same soft glory they shine;
For they're tinted with tenderest light and shades
 By Love, the artist divine.

Now, fast as a radiant vision, fades
 The glory of the western skies;
But the readers read on—unmindful of all
 Save the paper before their eyes.

Nothing to them the charms of that hour—
 The magic of meadow and hill;
For spirits bowed down with a weight of care
 Are blind to the beautiful still.

Deeper the shadows of twilight fall,
 More hushed grows the dewy air,
When suddenly breaks on the holy calm
 A quick, wild cry of despair.

The younger glances have found it first—
 That record so sad and brief:
"Mortally wounded!"—two dread words—
 Winged arrows of dread and grief.

"Mortally wounded!"—look again;
 Alas! it is all too true;
Not the brave alone, but the fond and fair
 Are mortally wounded, too.

He, on the battle-field far away,
 They, in their quiet home—
The wife and the mother, who never more
 Shall see their loved hero come.

The grass will grow where the warrior fell,
 And sweet wild flowers may bloom
On the very turf once blackened and burned
 By the fearful fires of doom.

But the smiling summers, that come and go,
 Can never, never heal
The bleeding bosoms which felt to-day
 Something sharper than steel.

"Mortally wounded!" oh, dread war!
 Many a victim is thine,
Save those who hear your terrible voice
 Go thundering along the line!

If we give proud names and echoing hymns,
 And build up monuments grand
To the gallant spirits who suffer and fall
 In defense of their native land;

Let us yield a tenderer tribute still—
 Sad tears and a pitying sigh—
To the uncrowned heroes who silently sink,
 And die when their heroes die.
—Anonymous, in "Lyrics of Loyalty."

A BIT OF LACE.

"It's a perfectly exquisite piece of lace, papa."

"I dare say, Flor."

"But I want you to look at it."

"I shouldn't know any more about it if I did."

"Well, then, I want you to buy it."

"Buy it! What for?"

"Why, for me."

"Pay five hundred dollars for a handkerchief for you?"

"Yes, indeed. All other girls have them, although certainly this is a little, the least little, nicer than theirs. I don't know why Lucy should have a handsomer handkerchief than I, just because she's married. Anybody else would say it was enough to be married, and so let me have the handkerchief. Married women have everything—love, and lace, and diamonds. Now, papa, just take out your pocket-book." It was a coaxing voice.

"Do you suppose I carry $500 bills in my pocket-book?"

"It makes no odds. Your check-book, then. I have set my heart on it, it's such a beauty. If you only look at it—look at the wreath of flowers, all so delicately shaded; here the close work in the light, you see, there the open work in the shade, so perfect you can quite fancy the colors; and all done in this one thread. See, papa, there's a dewdrop, that round hole in the mesh."

"Nonsense, Flor; I can't see anything of the kind there."

"That's because your eye isn't educated, sir. Mine is; for I have studied other people's laces till I could almost work them. That's a good man! I knew you would. You always do. One, two, three!" And then there was a shower of kisses and tinkling laughter. And that was the conversation of a millionaire and his daughter that Lucian Malvin heard over the transom of the next room to his in the hotel where he staid over night a year or two ago, seeing neither people nor handkerchief, and aghast at the thought of a handkerchief costing the awful price of $500, which was one-third of the mortgage on his little place that he was trying to pay off, heart and soul—a conversation that now recurred to him in a moment of real agony, as the housemaid stood before him holding a little limp rag in her hand that she had just snatched out of the washtub, and that last night was a bit of dainty lace that Miss Rofe Mercier had called her handkerchief, and had given him to hold during the gallop. Good heavens, how was he ever going to restore it

He was a young lawyer, just entering upon what in time would probably be fine practice, but which was now rather empirical. He had started in the race for wealth and honor with good legal ability, good name, and good morals, and with no other impediments than a little patrimony in the shape of a modest dwelling in the suburbs, which he had been obliged to mortgage for the means to get a part of his education and his profession, which mortgage he was striving to pay off, that he might begin the future clear of the world. He was a handsome fellow, this Lucian Malvin, an ambitious one, too, in some degree, and very nearly as proud as Lucifer. He used to feel many a pang in the association with those so much wealthier than himself to which certain circumstances had subjected him. He had had an important case accidently thrown into his hands, and had acquitted himself so well that the wealthy client took him up and would not let him down; and when Lucian remonstrated that it was out of his power to keep up such association, and was mortifying to his pride beside, the client had assured him it was not pride, but vanity, that was mortified, and that the way to be wealthy as those he met was to keep their company and get their cases; and he had thought, on the whole, that perhaps his friend was right, and that, if he began to yield with an ignoble motive, he had nevertheless become very fond of the ways of people to whom wealth had given every opportunity of culture and grace, and who knew how to treat life like a work of art. Moreover, it was not a little that he was petted by various of these good people. Certain motherly ladies made him at home with them, and won his confidence and affection, notably Mrs. Barnetta. Parents with good rent-rolls of their own, as Mrs. Barnetta used to tell him, were not so inconsistent in the matter of rent-rolls as of virtue and talent in their daughters'-husbands; and he was invited here and invited there, and given to understand a great deal more than he chose to understand. Proud as Lucifer, as it was previously stated, he was going to marry no heiress of them all and be the thrall of her money; he would not marry a rich woman—he could not marry a poor one. When he married he was going to give, not take, and at present he had nothing to give. Perhaps he would have been a nobler person if he had not been quite so strenuous in this matter of obligation; but then, as Mrs. Barnetta said, he would not have been Lucian Malvin, and Lucian Malvin was a very good fellow, after all, and there are few of us but have our faults.

It was among these people that he happened to meet Rosa Mercier. She had come from a distant place, and was visiting his pleasantest acquaintance; and certainly the house was pleasanter still after her sunshiny little presence dawned upon it. It seemed as if, for instance, there never had been any flowers in the house before, although it had always been overflowing; it seemed as if there had been no music there, no light, or color or cheer; and now the place was too dangerously delightful for a young man who did not want to marry to frequent. She was such a lovely little thing; not exactly beautiful, that is, she would not have been beautiful in a picture, but in flesh and blood, and in Lucian Malvin's eyes, she was exceedingly beautiful, with her soft color, her clear dark gaze and her bright hair that broke into a cloud of sunny rings about her sweet face; such a gentle gaiety went with her wherever she did; such a tender grace of manner, too, in the intervals of her buoyant spirits; her voice was much a warbling voice, her ways such winsome ways. Lucian Malvin felt that he must forswear her presence unless he wanted to make life a burden to himself, and he ceased going to Mrs. Barnetta's where she was staying, almost as suddenly as the day forsakes the horizon in that dreary season when twilights are not.

But if he could shut himself out from the Barnettas, he could not shut Miss Rosa out from general society; and go where he would, he met her almost nightly, laughing gayly, singing sweetly, dancing lightly, till he declared to himself that, if this was going to last, he must indeed cease going out at all. But that was a little too much; he did not know how positively to deny himself the mere sight of her. Yet things were growing very precarious when he could not take a book but he saw that blushing, gold-enringed face slide in between the pages; when he could not make out a writ without being in danger of slipping her name into the blanks; when he heard the delicious voice murmuring in his ears when he waked, and walked all night with the little spirit when he slept. He made a compromise with himself—it was all he could—and declared that at any rate he would not dance with her again. It was an idle effort. He might almost as well have danced with her as have stood looking at her, quite unconscious of his general air, and all the lover in his glance. Mrs. Barnetta beckoned him to her side; he stood there just as Rosa came up from her promenade and left the arm of one cavalier to be carried off by another. "You are not dancing, Mr. Malvin?" she said. "Oh, would you hold my fan and handkerchief?" He followed them with his eye again as the music crashed into a dashing galop.

What right had that other man with his clasp about this darling? Why did he suffer it? What decency was there in the society that commanded such sacrifice? In his embrace—whirling wildly to this wild music!

"You do hate him, don't you?" said Mrs. Barnetta in his ear. "If looks could slay—" he started. Was he carrying his heart upon his sleeve for daws to peck at? "Oh, I don't pity you a bit," laughed Mrs. Barnetta, low-toned. And, putting out her hand, she took Rosa's fan and opened it as she talked. "Anybody," said she, "with such a power of making misery, ought to enjoy it."

"I—I beg your pardon, Mrs. Barnetta, but if you read me riddles, I must ask you also to be their Sphinx."

"Oh no; it was the function of the Sphinx to propound the riddles, not to solve them." And Mrs. Barnetta laughed her low, pleasant laugh. "You do not come to us any more," she said. "And, as I used to be in your confidence before you deserted me, I can imagine the reason. I do not like to say that it is very shabby treatment of an old friend. Of course I can not say that it is rude. But if you do not dance with Miss Mercier this evening I shall be fearfully offended. I am not going to have my little treasure made unhappy for the sake of the safety of the prince of all good fellows himself."

Lucian changed color so suddenly that Mrs. Barnetta put out her hand in affright, half expecting to see him fall; but in a moment he was himself again.

"Do you——Is Miss Mercier——" he began, and paused half way.

"As if I should say another word, and had not already said altogether too much!" said Mrs. Barnetta. "There, she has left dancing and gone for an ice. What do you think of round dances, on the whole?" And they were to all appearances, deep in discussion of the subject when Rosa returned and swept her late partner a courtesy, and took shelter on the other side of Mrs. Barnetta. Perhaps she had seen the way Lucian's eyes had followed her, and it had given her a certain illumination that made her shrink.

Just then the band began one of the Hungarian waltzes, a sweet and rapturous measure that set the blood itself to dancing in one's veins. Why not? One last dance, one last moment of ecstasy, ere he went out forever into loneliness. Directly he crumpled the bit of lace into his pocket, and was bending before the little Rosa, who seemed suddenly to have lost all her light gaiety, and who put out her hand to him with a conscious burning blush upon her face that his heart reflected in a melting glow. And then there was no thought of pride, or of negation, or forgetting; the music was swinging them at its will; they circled in each other's arms to its delicious and delirious movement—eternity would hardly have any bliss for lovers beyond the bliss of this moment. Yet, only a moment was it, a few moments, a brief sweet space of half-conscious time; and then a faint recognition crept through its spell and warned Lucian of the poison in this honey. He was in the act of surrender; he was about to seal his fate and that of his dear girl, to take her away from her father's wealth and her luxurious ease and condemn her to the carking cares of poverty. All his nature rebelled; he chose not to be swayed by this melody of horns and strings; he would have no passion, neither music nor love, so master his soul as to become the element in which it swam, an exclusion of thought and fear, of sight and sound, and all other emotion; and, with his imperious determination, he chose to break the enchantment; the real world crept back upon his senses; he heard the tune, beyond this cloud that wrapped them, breaking again into its distinctive measure, and, exerting his will, he controlled their steps, and paused at last beside Mrs. Barnetta, and with a low bow, and without a word, gave Rosa back into that lady's care, and passed into the crowd and out of the place, and home to his lonely rooms.

It was daybreak before he sought repose, walking the floors till then, hardly knowing what he did or what he thought, but intent upon conquering himself. He would give the world for Rosa Mercier's love, but he would not give his pride. To him that pride meant self-respect; to marry her, the child of opulence, meant either to sell himself for a price or to reduce her to trouble and weariness in which her love might soon wear out. He did not doubt that love now; without a syllable's speech he felt sure of it. While it thrilled him wildly and deeply, it cast a sudden shadow of regret; he only hoped, and cursed his fate that forced him to hope such a thing that presently the love would pass, and some one who would make her happier would claim her. At length, with maledictions in the act, he emptied his pockets of the gloves, handkerchiefs, and trifles there, and went to bed, with the sun coming througg the curtain, and, worn out in body and mind, slept, to the blessed and thorough oblivion of all the world.

When he awoke it was late in the day. All his trouble rushed over him, but in a moment all his will to repel it rose too. He dressed himself leisurely; he meant to call that night on Miss Mercier, restore her handkerchief that he had forgotten to give back after the dance, and in some indirect way let her know that he intended never to marry, and so seal his doom beyond hope. He went into the next room when he had completed his toilet, and after attending to one or two other affairs, looked for the handkerchief that he remembered to have taken from his pocket and to have tossed upon the table there. It was not on the table; it was nowhere in the room. In a panic he rung the bell, and when it was answered, instituted an inquiry concerning the thing. Yes, indeed, Susan had seen it, and thought it was so yellow and soiled she would take it down and wash it. "Lors, sir, it was the dirtiest little rag," she said. "Just straw-color. And I thought I would give it a run through the tub and blueing and make it fit to be seen."

"Good heavens!" he cried, with a horrified flash of remembrance of having somewhere heard that the yellower lace was the more precious it was, and that it never was washed on any account except by people who did nothing else. "Let me have it at once." And in five minutes afterward Susan stood before him holding up a little limp rag, and with a pang as from the blow of something unknown and dreadful, the conversation that he had heard a year or two ago, swept back upon his recollection.

Five hundred dollars! And gone to grief in a moment! And he could no more replace it than he could fly, without what was the same to him as absolute ruin. Of course, he must replace it; he could not be indebted, through the stupidity of his servant, or through any other means, to Miss Mercier in that sum. Without any doubt she valued such a bit of lace; and if anything were needed to demonstrate to him the wisdom of the course he had decided on, and the utter absurdity of having dared, for a single moment, to look with love on one of these darlings of fortane, it was the fact that her handkerchiefs alone were items of $500. What a shame! what wickedness! what a preposterous folly! How could a young man marry? He burned with indignation then.

But to replace it; one-third of the sum he was saving to redeem his little property from mortgage—all the money he really had in the world beyond that for his daily expenses! It was the ruin of his hopes, his ambitions, his pride, that scorned so to be anybody's debtor; it threw him back in the race how long! But it must be done. He had a trifle over $500 in the National Solvency bank. He drew his check for the necessary sum, and folded it away in his pocket-book, and then went about his business till nightfall, when he came back to his dreary rooms and made himself ready to call at Mrs. Barnetta's.

The night had never seemed so beautiful, the stars so large and keen and far above the earth, so remote and cold—they typified all the dear and happy things of life forever removed from him. His heart was chilled and his face was white when he stood at last in Mrs. Barnetta's drawing-room, and she floated forward to meet him. He had not asked for Miss Mercier.

"It is a delicate errand, Miss Barnetta," said he, with a dreary attempt at smiling. "But the truth is that my maid, in her officious kindness, has done such damage to a bit of Miss Mercier's property that I must replace it. And I have come to beg you, out of your friendship for me, to transact the affair, if such an article can be replaced here. I believe these little trifles are rather costly, and, if you will procure one"—and he laid the check he had drawn that morning and the little limp rag in Mrs. Barnetta's hand—"as like the original as possible, I"——

"My dear Mr. Malvin, what in the world are you talking of?" cried Mrs. Barnetta. "Have you money to throw about in this way? Five hundred dollars—what is it for?"

"To replace Miss Mercier's handkerchief, if you will be so good as to make the purchase."

"Like this?" said Mrs. Barnetta, holding up the limp rag by one corner. "Like that," said Lucian.

"Oh, that is too good!" cried Mrs. Barnetta, with a peal of laughter. "It is too good, it is too absurd! What creatures men are! Did you imagine that this bit of finery was worth all that—this little strip of grass-cloth and German lace? No wonder the young men don't marry then! My dear Mr. Malvin, this miserable handkerchief cost exactly $2.50, and was nearly worn out at that. Did you imagine, too, that my poor little Rosa could wear $500 handkerchiefs, without a cent to her name?"

"Without a cent to her name?" cried Lucian, springing to his feet.

"Exactly. Aha! Is that the trouble? Now why didn't you come and talk it all over with me in the way you used to do, and save yourself this vexation, and save my little Rosa too? What an absurd boy you are! Another would have waited to hear that she was an heiress; you wait to hear that she is penniless. Well, she is, if that satisfies you, except for what I shall leave my little god-daughter when I die—which will not be at present, D. V. And there she is in the next room now. But, bless me——"

Lucian had not waited for the rest of the invocation. He was already in the next room, and Rosa was already in his arms.—Harper's Bazar.

A Gentlemanly Robbery.

A correspondent writes from Cadiz, Spain: On Monday the diligence from Seville to Huelva was robbed at 10 p. m., hardly three miles from San Lucar la Mayor. Every one in Huelva is giving the most contradictory versions of the affair, but the story is as follows: The robbers were ensconced in some dry trenches near the road, and some among the growing crops near Molinillo, when a passenger saw that, although the night was calm, the wheat-ears were moving. In a moment up sprang twenty men, five of whom were mounted, and cried 'Alto!' (halt) to the coachman. The horses were stopped, the postilions thrown to the ground, one being hurt. Then the robbers drew the diligence a good way off the main road, made the passengers lie down on their faces, bound them with cords, and then pacified them in their terror by saying, "No one here shall be harmed; it is not our purpose to harm any one." To one gentleman traveling with his wife they said, "Your wife is as safe here as in her own house;" and they behaved like gentleman to all. They then asked Don Antonio Sundheim for the keys of the cash-box, which contained $42,000 for the wages of the Rio Tinto miners. On his refusal they began to maltreat him, but one of the leaders interfering said, "Never maltreat Don Antonio." They then asked the conductor, "How many cash boxes?" "Nine." "Come down." One man had 20,000 reals in gold in a belt around his waist. They took his revolver and spared his gold, their object evidently being to rob the coach of the Rio Tinto mine property. The robbery was committed by men who knew the time and way of sending the monthly payments. Some of the robbers had their faces blackened; some seemed to be gentlemen and not in their usual clothes. They did not commit the robbery like men used to such deeds, as they actually left behind them one of the cash-boxes. They plundered the private passengers. The whole amount stolen would be, perhaps $39,000. They took the cash-boxes away strapped on the coach mules."

The Countries in the Fight.

There is a good deal of difference in the provinces and principalities which are battling more or less with Turkey at this time. Servia is the largest and more powerful State, with the most spirited and progressive people, and has reached the highest stage of material and moral development. Montenegro is the other independent power in alliance with Servia, a small State with a mountainous country and no rich meadow lands from which to accumulate wealth; her isolation has given her people a singular mixture of austere virtues, barbaric ignorance and warlike ferocity. Between these two lies Bosnia, a province of Turkey, a part of which is Herzegovina. Bosnia contains about 600,000 male population (the women are not counted in the Turkish census), very evenly divided between Turks and Christians, the former representing converts from the old nobility, the latter the descendants of the ancient serfs. Next to Servia, on the Danube, lies Bulgaria, another province of somewhat different race and character, although Christians. All of these people belonged to the old Servian empire, which was overthrown in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, but in Bulgaria the nobility were exterminated, leaving the serfs, who have never attained the political spirit of the provinces nearer Christendom, although they have clung to their religion. They have seceded from the Greek Church, and constitute a Christian communion of their own. They are thoroughly under the Turkish thumb, and are not counted good fighting stock.—*Springfield (Mass.) How Silver Has Declined.

Just previous to the discovery of gold in California and Australia, the lowest price for silver in London was 59½d, which was the average for 1848. The highest yearly average price since was in 1859, when it was a fraction over 62d. From 1859 to 1872 the market was quite steady, though the general tendency all the while was to a lower range. The average for 1872 was 62½d. In June and July, 1875, the price fell to 55½d, and about two weeks ago it dropped to 47d, which is the lowest figure in at least fifty years. From this point it rose to 49½d last Friday. Comparing the lowest price of 1859, the depression is a fraction over 24 per centum; while a similar comparison with the rate a year ago shows a decline of only 14½ per centum.—San Francisco Bulletin.

A College of Cookery.

At last a practical step has been taken toward emancipating the people from the evils of bad cookery. We know of no department in domestic economy which is so sadly in need of reform, especially in the United States. Mr. William Emerson Baker, of the sewing machine firm of Grover & Baker, has given to the Governor of Massachusetts and to four other trustees a farm of fifty acres and $50,000, to form a college of cookery. Cookery is to be taught as an art—which it certainly is—and the pupils are to be instructed in the scientific principles which underlie wholesome cookery. The horrible pies, fried meats, hot bread, and other dyspepsia-generating compounds, together with the inexplicable concoctions produced by the verdant Milesian handmaid, let us hope, are doomed to disappear; and instead, our kitchens are to be tenanted in future by culinary artists able to prepare, palatably and healthfully, the vast variety of food this country affords.—Scientific American.

CENTRAL AFRICA.

Mr. Stanley's Letters.

[From the New York Herald.]

We submit to our readers this morning the first instalment, in full, of the series of letters from Mr. Stanley, in Central Africa, of which, in a special dispatch from London, we published a brief summary some ten days ago.

In this narrative of Mr. Stanley's explorations, though modestly presented, his skill, courage, prudence, sagacity and fertility in resources in every emergency of doubt and danger cannot fail to attract the reader's attention. It will next be perceived that on the verge of his most important field of research he would have been checked and driven back but for the invaluable assistance of his faithful friend and generous ally, the intelligent native King, Mtesa, of the rich and populous country of Uganda. To the timely and liberal support, in men and means, from this enlightened African barbarian we are indebted for the discoveries of Mr. Stanley in that most interesting land under the Equator lying between the great lakes Victoria and Albert Niyanza. We sympathize with the devoted explorer in his disappointments in consequence of the ferocious savage tribes which barred his passage through their domains and thus prevented the full reconnoissance of that wonderful region and of the Lake Albert which he had contemplated. Nevertheless, as Pacha Gordon and Prof. Gessi, between them, have explored lake Albert from end to end, we hope to be able to present a complete map (a few points only excepted) of both those great lakes, and of the watersheds between them and around them, and of the enormous drainage which, from that vast and rainy equatorial basin, gives through those great lakes his ample and unfailing volume to the grand old Nile.

From Mr. Stanley's researches on that great divide, as we may call it, lying between the lakes Albert and Victoria, it is itself a country of many beautiful lakes and lofty mountains, fertile valleys and plains, inhabited by warlike tribes of savages, through whose dominions there is no passage to the intruding stranger except at the head of a powerful army. In the drainage of this divide tributary to the Victoria lake and in the Kagera river, which is a chain of lakes, Mr. Stanley thinks he has discovered the true parent of the Victoria Nile, from the comparatively heavy volume of the stream. We adhere, however, to his first opinion, that in the Shimeeyu, which, rising below the fourth degree of south latitude after a course of 400 miles northward, is discharged into the Victoria lake, we have the real head stream of the Nile.

The most interesting to the ethnologist of all the discoveries of Mr. Stanley is the pale-faced race of evidently aboriginal Africans, inhabitating the temperate climate of the elevated slopes of the great mountain Gambaragara. Our trustworthy explorer says that he has seen some half a dozen of these people; that they are a handsome race, and some of the women are singularly beautiful; that their hair is kinky, but inclined to brown in color; that they have regular features and thin lips; but that "their noses, though well shaped, are thick at the point." After the tribe of dwarfs of the west coast of Equatorial Africa, unearthed by Du Chaillu, and the strange races discovered by Schweinfurth in the country tributary to the Bahrel-Ghazal, one of the great feeders of the Nile, we can entertain no doubt of the existence of this race of pale-faced Africans, gradually bleached by the moist and temperate climate of Mount Gambaragara, through many generations, to their present light complexions. In a word, there are as many different types of the African family in Africa as there are of the so-called Caucasian race in Europe. Usongoro, a country bordering on Lake Albert, Mr. Stanley describes from report "as a very land of wonders," with its salt lakes, its hills of rock salt, its plains encrusted with salt and alkali, its large dogs of extraordinary ferocity, "and a race of such long-legged natives that ordinary mortals regard them with surprise and awe." And why should we doubt the existence of even these long-legged Africans, when, near the south cape of the continent, there is a short-legged race of natives, the most repulsive caricatures of humanity gifted with the faculty of speech?

Turning to the geographical results of these explorations of Mr. Stanley within the equatorial basin of the Nile, he has definitely determined the area, the length and breadth, the configuration, the coast line, the affluents and outlets of the great Victoria lake and the character of the countries and of the numerous savage tribes on its borders. He has also penetrated farther into the elevated plateau between the two great lakes, Victoria and Albert, and has learned more of its geographical features, its natural curiosities, and its warlike tribes than any preceding explorer. In all these trying and perilous labors, and particularly in the friendly relations established with the King, or Emperor, Mtesa, Mr. Stanley has opened the way for the Christian missionary, colonist, and trader.

BRUSH, the Cashier of the International railway, recently fled from St. John, N. B., with some $30,000 of the company's funds, and, on reaching Boston, sent $300 to his wife to enable her to join him in the States. Instead of obeying his instructions she at once handed over the money to the accountant of the railway. She will earn a living for herself and family as a telegraph operator, and will not share the dishonest gains of her husband.

AN impecunious individual was heard to mutter, as he finished reading a railroad hand-bill headed, "Through without change," "That's the road I shall take; no fault to find with them terms."

LEEDLE YAWCOB STRAUSS.

I haf von funny leedle poy
 Vot gomes schust to my knee;
Der queerest schap, der createst rogue
 As efer you dit see;
He runs, und schumps, und schmashes dings
 In all barts off der house—
But vot off dot? he vas mine son,
 Mine leedle Yawcob Strauss.

He got der measles und der mumbs,
 Und eferyding dot's out;
He sbills mine glass off lager bier,
 Poots schnuff into mine kraut;
He fills mine pipe mit Limburg cheese—
 Dot vas der roughest chouse;
I'd take dot vrom no oder poy
 But leedle Yawcob Strauss.

He dakes der milk pan for a dhrum,
 Und cuts mine cane in dwo
To make der shticks to beat it mit—
 Mine cracious dot vas drue!
I dinks mine head vas schplit abart,
 He kicks up sooch a touse—
But nefer mind, der poys vas few
 Like dot young Yawcob Strauss.

He asks me questions sooch as dese:
 Who baints mine nose so red?
Who vas it cuts dot schmoodt blace oudt
 Vrom der hair ubpon mine hed?
Und vhere der plaze goes from der lamp
 Vene'er der glim I douse—
How gan I all dese dings eggsblain
 To dot schmall Yawcob Strauss?

I somedimes dink I schall go vild
 Mith sooch a grazy poy,
Und vish vonce more I gould haf rest
 Und beaceful dimes enshoy;
But ven he vas ashleep in ped,
 So quiet as a mouse,
I prays der Lord, "dake anydings,
 But leaf dot Yawcob Strauss."

"I GIVE and bequeath unto Mary, my wife, the sum o' £100 a year," said an old farmer. "Is that written down, master?" "Yes," replied the lawyer; "but she is not so old; she may marry again. Won't you make a change in that case? Most people do." "Ay, do they?" said the farmer; "well, write again; I give and bequeath unto her the sum of £200 a year. That'll do, won't it, master?" "Why, it's just double the sum she would have if she remained unmarried," said the lawyer; "it's generally the other way—the legacy is lessened if the widow marries again." "Ay," said the farmer, "but him as gets her'll deserve it."

The Proposed Territory of Pembina.

In the speech of Hon. Jefferson P. Kidder, of Dakota, advocating the organization of the Territory of Pembina, we are told that the proposed new territory will contain 72,930 square miles. It will extend from the seventh standard parallel, which is about eleven miles south of the forty-sixth degree, to the British possessions from the Red River of the North to the Yellowstone. It has within its borders 600 miles of navigable waters on the Red river, more than 600 on the Missouri, and over 300 on the Yellowstone, and in all over 2,000 miles of navigable waters. Lines of steamers and 200 miles of railroad are already operated in the proposed Territory, and numerous extensions are projected. The population of Pembina is not less than 12,000, largely made up of farmers, and the country has superior agricultural advantages.

THE TURCO-SERVIAN WAR.

The Defeat of the Servians—What Next?

[From the New York Tribune.]

There is no longer any doubt that the Servian line of defense has been completely broken, and that the whole country now lies open to Turkish invasion. The capture of Gurgusovatz renders both Saitschar and Alexinatz untenable, and it is scarcely possible that the remnants of the Servian army can be concentrated in any new defensive position. Gen. Tchernayeff has shown that he is no match for Osman Pasha; he has probably been outgeneraled from the beginning, and his whole campaign must be set down as an inglorious failure. We cannot assume that a people so warlike and so eager for the present conflict as the Servians have shown any lack of bravery; but the most gallant troops in the world lose both faith and force when they feel that they are badly commanded. If the report be true that Gen. Tchernayeff failed to send reinforcements to Gurgusovatz in time to save the place, his incompetency is equivalent to treason.

For the past fortnight the movements of the Turkish army have been so rapid and well directed that the chance now opened to it is sure to be seized. The two roads into the valley of the Morawa—one from Gurgusovatz to Banja and Alexinatz, and the other from Saitschar to Paratjin (Prince Milan's headquarters)—cannot be held by the defeated, scattered, and demoralized Servians. A rapid advance of the Turks will open for them the way to Belgrade, before reaching which the Danube gives them a new base of supplies. If the struggle were solely between Servia and Turkey, the speedy triumph of the latter power might now be accepted as certain.

But the interests involved extend far beyond the question of the independence of a province or two. The latter is the very least of them. The features of a long-delayed yet inevitable religious conflict become every day more apparent. The horrible massacre in Bulgaria, incredible as they seemed at first, prove to have been scarcely exaggerated. The released fanaticism of Islam has helped Osman Pasha to his victories, and the march of the Turks through Servia will leave only blood and ashes behind it. Such devices as are employed in Constantinople, of enlisting Christian vagabonds under a banner blazoned with the cross and crescent, side by side, deceive Europe no longer. Even in England the conventional pro-Turkish feeling is rapidly dying out; the London Times of yesterday simply gives a late expression to a sentiment which has been spreading and growing for two months past, until it has become something very like indignation at the cool, indifferent attitude of the Government. Even the plea of maintenance of the Ottoman power in Europe, as a political necessity, will have little weight in the face of such evidence as has now been furnished to the world.

The defeat of Servia is thus coincident with an immense accession of sympathy for the interests she represents. If fortune further deserts her arms—as is most probable—it will be impossible to prevent that sympathy from moving to her aid. On the other hand, the hate and barbarity of the Turks, who seem bent on reviving the spirit of the seventh century, and are hardly restrained by a Government still in a state of revolution, will be stimulated to new atrocities. In the present temper of the people, success means excess. How long will the policy of non-intervention tolerate such a situation? It is already responsible for several weeks of slaughter. If either a European war or a barbarous and intolerable peace is to be avoided, the great Powers must not lose another day. They must agree upon some temporary platitude, as heretofore, and enforce a pacification upon the basis of complete and guaranteed protection to all the Christian subjects of Turkey.

Enthusiasm of the Servians.

Of the enthusiasm of all Servia, and of all Slavs outside of Servia, in favor of this war, there can be doubt. The atrocious rule of the Turks when they governed this country, their bad administration in Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Bulgaria at the present time, and the barbarous cruelty practised in times of insurrection on even the most peaceable of the Christian subjects of the Sultan by Bashi-Bazouks, Redifs, Circassians, and other irregular troops employed in the work of endeavoring to put down those risings by fire and sword, have sunk so deeply into the souls of the Servians, that never will there be peace in the country until the last trace of Mussulman rule is a thing of the past.

The monks have left their convents to march with the columns going to do battle, and inspire them by the cross which they hold aloft at the head of the battalions. Every man and woman in Servia regards the war as one in the cause of Christ and country, and I have not met one of them in any class of life who could be made to understand why Servia should not have the sympathy of every Christian nation.—Cor. London Times.

A Ball in Colorado.

We had a rude log cabin, the starlight gleamed through the chinks between the logs, vying with the feeble gleams of tallow dips in making the darkness visible, and the very small space absolutely necessary for the dancers floored with warped and gnarled whip-sawed lumber, for which we had paid at the rate of $100 per 1,000 feet. Then there were but eight ladies present participating in the dance, though the entire feminine element of the town was represented; there were present a goodly assemblage of men, but such an uncouth assemblage rarely graced a ball room, for proud was he who could boast a coat to hide his woolen shirt, and the two or three who had white shirts were at once the admiration and envy of the rest.—Lake City Silver World.

Early Coinage of the United States.

Apropos of the current silver discussion, here are some interesting facts pertaining to the early coinage of the country: Of the gold coinage of 1804, about $11,000 was the produce of virgin gold from Cabarras county, N. C., and, from that time to 1827, all the gold in this country was obtained from that State, amounting to $110,000. The gold mines in Rowan county were, at one time, "the richest in the Atlantic States," and yielded about $200,000 annually. A bar of silver from one of the mines in Davidson county, N. C., in the New York Exhibition in 1853-4, is said to have been the first smelted from the ores in the United States. The copious yield of gold by the mines of the Southern States induced Congress, in 1838, to establish three mints—one at Charlotte, N. C., one at Dahlonega, Ga., and one at New Orleans, the first two to be for coin only. The dies for the first coinage money in this country were made by a Massachusetts mechanic in 1652, and the money was coined by John Hull, on whose estate the "Mint Hawse" stood, and Robert Sanderson, of Boston.

BRITISH JUSTICE.

The English Way of Dealing with Swindlers—Four Prominent Bankers Sentenced to Prison.

[From M. D. Conway's London Letter to the Cincinnati Commercial.]

It is to be hoped that, amid the excitements of a swelling canvass, Americans will not fail to observe the picturesque fact this country offers to their observation, of four of the most prominent men of London locked up in prison. The wealthy and distinguished gentlemen in question foisted a fraudulent company on the public, and having no starry banner under which to shelter themselves, are taking the prosaic consequences. They conspired by a false quotation, based on repeated deposits of the same sum of money in a bank, summed up to seem like capital, to get the shares of the Eupion Gas Company on the Stock Exchange, so fraudulently evading the rules laid down for the protection of the public, and they have lost the stake and reputation with it. The Judges hesitated. A good many people could not believe that such highly-respectable and well-connected gentlemen could be incarcerated like vulgar felons, and anticipated the infliction of fines. When the distinguished speculators were brought up for sentence they were inclined to be pathetic. Mr. Joseph Aspinall, who has for some time paraded his style, his carriages and horses, in the vicinity of his country mansion, turned out to be a very wretched and poor person, whom the white-eyed boys lately gazing on his splendor could not envy. Mr. Aspinall pleaded that he was 54 years of age, with a wife and twelve children, had carried on business irreproachably for thirty-nine years, was now ruined, and his aged parents, whom he had hitherto supported, would have to go to the workhouse, while he himself had lately been living on the charity of his friends. He brought medical certificates to show that he is suffering from two dangerous diseases. He denied fraudulent intention, and submitted himself to the mercy of the court. Mr. Whyte detailed that he had lost a valuable position as manager of a coal mine, which he had held for twenty years, and did not mean to advance his personal interests by the fraud. Mr. Knocker said he was not aware of the fraud, had suffered frightfully, had lost his income of £1,400 a year—as general manager of the Midland Bank—and his wife and five children were now destitute. Dr. Muir also professed to have been ignorant of what was going on, and he, too, was ruined. The counsel for these miserable men urged in mitigation of judgment that what they had done had been done before on the Stock Exchange with impunity; but the suggestion was not a happy one, the Lord Chief Justice dryly remarking that "it was quite true," and adding a hint that it was fully time that it should be made certain that it could not safely be tried again. Mr. Justice Blackburn, the senior puisne Judge, then pronounced the sentence. He began by saying that the indictable conspiracy proved against them before a jury was punishable by imprisonment and fine, or by either alone, at the discretion of the Court; but that they had come to the conclusion that a fine would not be proper in this case, because such operations were generally carried on for large sums of money by men whom ordinary fines would not deter; that since they had all declared themselves destitute, to fine them, with imprisonment until the fines were paid, might involve an immense extension of their imprisonment. They would, therefore, imprison them without hard labor. "When a person," said the Judge, "whether he be rich or poor, commits a crime, we must punish him, notwithstanding the misery it may inflict upon his family at the time, and the disgrace it may entail on them afterward. Aspinall and Knocker were then sentenced each to twelve months' imprisonment; Muir and Whyte each to two months. The lawyers for the criminals begged for a suspension of the order until they could appeal. The application was refused. The tipstaff removed the eminent bankers, and they are now in Halloway prison, with ample leisure to take their first lesson in plain living and high thinking. These sentences will have the best consequences. Every honest man in England feels safer to-day, and every wealthy rogue feels more insecure. It is a good deal to know that prison walls are not reserved for poor ragamuffins who steal pennies, but may also become familiar to well-dressed personages who bring ruin on thousands of families and dash about with fine equipages. The number of such has been getting unpleasantly large of late.

Revenue Receipts.

An elaborate statement just prepared at the Treasury Department shows the receipts from specific sources of revenue for the year ending with the 30th of June, namely:

Total from spirits taxed at 70 and 90 cents per gallon, $51,390,458.44.

Total from special taxes on rectifiers, wholesale and retail liquor dealers, manufacturers of stills and still-worms, and stamps of various kinds, $5,035,802.41, an aggregate of $56,426,260.85, or $4,352,615.55 more than the receipts last year.

From tobacco of all kinds, together with special taxes, $39,795,275.43, or $2,491,835.53 more than the receipts of last year.

From fermented liquors, including the special tax, $9,571,280.66, an increase of $431,146 over the receipts of last year.

From banks and bankers' deposits and circulation, $4,006,698.08.

From adhesive stamps, $6,518,487.51.

From penalties, $409,282.87.

From articles and occupations formerly taxed, but now exempt, $509,340.13, making a total of $117,236,625.48, or $6,691,471.25 more than the receipts of last year.

An exchange remarks that "it is dangerous to go into the water after a hearty meal." It is not a good place to find one either.

The Yellowstone Country.

This letter is dated "on the Yellowstone river." If your readers want to know what this river and the country bordering it are, they will not need Monroe's dime novels, Ned Buntline's stories, or Prof. Hayden's reports. In former letters to the Tribune I exploded some of these romantic theories. Instead of its being an inviting region, it is now, in the middle of its short summer, a most forbidding land. To-day we landed and prospected one of its most inviting valleys. There was an open prairie reaching back about two miles to the foothills, and evidently filled with a luxuriant vegetation. The height of the bank and the alluvial deposit naturally indicated the presence of bulberries, strawberries, and the thousand-and-one indigenous varieties of the floral kingdom. But what did we find? Sage-bush and lop-eared sun-flowers! One solitary hermaphrodite wild-rose was discovered, but it might have been cactus, as we had no botanist on the boat. The general configuration of the country is that of a fellow who has been bounced out of a Canal street whisky-dive, and the general value of the country is equal to Chicago river water for toilet purposes. In fact, here is a scope of country lying north and south of the Missouri river and east and west of the 104th longitude which God Almighty intended solely for the occupation of Sioux Indians and rattlesnakes, and I shall ever hold that the white man has no more business here than he has in Ujiji. In this vast wild—timber, water, prairie—one would naturally expect to find an abundance of wild game. It is a region seldom encroached upon by the hunter. So far, we have seen a half-score of wild geese with their young, one antediluvian bear, one young elk, and one black-tailed deer.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Liver Complaint.

By R. V. Pierce, M. D., of the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y., Author of "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," etc., etc.

The Liver is the great depurating (purifying) organ of the system, and has very appropriately been termed the "housekeeper" of our health. I have observed in the dissecting-room, and also in making post-mortem examinations of the bodies of those who have died of different diseases, that in a large proportion of cases, the liver has given evidence of having at some time been diseased. Liver affections are equally prevalent in beasts. Every butcher knows that the livers of cattle, sheep, and swine are ten times as frequently diseased as any other organ. A healthy liver each day secretes about two and a half pounds of bile. When it becomes torpid, congested, or if, from any cause, it be disabled in the performance of its duties, it is evident that the elements of the bile must remain in the blood, thus irritating, poisoning, and perverting every vital process. Nature attempts to rid the system of these noxious materials by means of other organs, as the kidneys, lungs, skin, etc., which become overtaxed in performing their additional labor, and are unable to withstand the pressure.

The brain, which is the great electrical center of all vitality, becomes overstimulated with unhealthy blood, and fails to normally perform its functions. Hence there is dullness, headache, impairment of the memory, dizziness, gloomy forebodings, and irritability of temper. When the blood is diseased, the skin manifests discolored spots, pimples, blotches, boils, carbuncles, and scrofulous tumors. The stomach and bowels, sooner or later, become affected, and constipation, piles, dropsy, dyspepsia, or diarrhea is the inevitable result.

SYMPTOMS OF LIVER COMPLAINT.

A sallow color of the skin, or yellowish-brown spots on the face and other parts of the body; dullness and drowsiness, with frequent headache; dizziness, bitter or bad taste in the mouth, dryness of the throat, and internal heat; palpitation of the heart, a dry, teasing cough, sore throat, unsteady appetite, sour stomach, raising of the food, and a choking sensation in the throat; sickness and vomiting, distress, heaviness, and a bloated or full feeling about the stomach and sides; aggravating pains in the sides, back, or breast, and about the shoulders; colic pains and soreness through the bowels; constipation, alternating with diarrhea; piles, flatulence, nervousness, coldness of the extremities, rush of blood to the head, with symptoms of apoplexy; numbness of the limbs (especially at night), and chills, alternating with hot flashes; kidney and other urinary difficulties, dullness, low spirits, and gloomy forebodings. Only a few of these symptoms will be likely to be present in any case at one time.

Treatment.—Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with small doses of his Pleasant Purgative Pellets, which act as an alterative on the liver. For Liver Complaint and the various affections caused by a diseased liver, these remedies are unsurpassed. The Golden Medical Discovery does not simply palliate the disease, but it produces a lasting effect. By its use, the liver and stomach are changed to an active, healthy state, the appetite is regulated, the blood purified and enriched, and the entire system renovated and restored to health.

A good investment; one dollar for Shallenberger's Ague Antidote. The worst case of chills cured immediately. Never more than one chill after commencing. It strengthens the system and improves the appetite. Nothing in it to injure an infant. (Sold by all druggists.)

At this season of the year cramps and pains in the stomach and bowels, dysentery, diarrhea, etc., are quite common, and should be checked at once. Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is the best article that can be used in all such cases, and should be kept in every family. Used internally.

Great harm and discomfort is caused by the use of purgatives which gripe and rack the system. Parsons' Purgative Pills are free from all impure matter, and are mild and health-giving in their operation.

For eruptive diseases of the skin, pimples and blotches, Vegetine is the great remedy, as it removes from the system the producing cause.

Many who are suffering from the effects of the warm weather and are debilitated, are advised by physicians to take moderate amounts of whisky two or three times during the day. In a little while those who adopt this advice frequently increase the number of "drinks," and in time become confirmed inebriates. A beverage which will not create thirst for intoxicating liquors, and which is intended especially for the benefit of debilitated persons, whether at home or abroad, is Dr. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic. Containing the juices of many medicinal herbs, this preparation does not create an appetite for the intoxicating cup. The nourishing and life-supporting properties of many valuable natural productions contained in it, and well known to medical men, have a most strengthening influence. A single bottle of the Tonic will demonstrate its valuable qualities. For debility arising from sickness, over exertion, or from any cause whatever, a wine-glassful of Sea Weed Tonic taken after meals will strengthen the stomach and create an appetite for wholesome food. To all who are about leaving their homes, we desire to say that the excellent effects of Dr. Schenck's seasonable remedies, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, are particularly evident when taken by those who are injuriously affected by a change of water and diet. No person should leave home without taking a supply of these safeguards along. For sale by all Druggists.

CHICAGO'S PROSPERITY.

Some Successful Business Houses in the Great Metropolis—A Few Words Respecting the Manufacture of Horse Nails—Something of Interest Regarding the Stove Trade—How to Cross the Ocean—Who it is Make the Best Soaps—Where to Buy Furniture—The Mammoth Piano and Organ House of the Country—A Hint About the Cloth and Tailor Trimming Business—And a Suggestion to Housekeepers About Yeast Cakes.

In the historic annals of modern times, Chicago does, and must continue to, stand forth pre-eminently without a rival, the marvel of the age. Truthfully and without exaggeration it may be added that, in the history of great cities or combined communities, no parallel exists where energy and downright pluck have so successfully grappled with adverse circumstances, and wrought such wonderful results as find their showing in the past and present of Chicago. Incorporated as a town in the year 1837, with a population of only 4,179, its eventful growth and commercial record up to the present time, when it ranks as the fourth city on the continent, is a matter of history which is at once the pride and wonder of the century. If we search to discover the hidden springs of this marvelous growth and progress, we will find them in a great measure resulting from, and due to, the enterprising business men who have made it the base of their mercantile and manufacturing projects. Their close application to, and personal supervision of, their business affairs, combined with a sterling and sturdy mercantile honor, has reflected credit upon them, the city and its commercial interests alike. Every firm and business named below are representatives in their various lines, and their prosperity has kept pace with the prosperity of this, the "Centennial city."

HORSE-NAILS.

The Northwestern Horse-Nail Co., of Chicago, is an establishment which is rated as one of the foremost institutions of the country, the amount of its manufactured products is second to none, and the quality of its goods admits of no rivalry. The Northwestern finished horse-nail is the ne plus ultra in its line, and is superior to all others in temper and finish. It is ready for immediate use, being stiffened and pointed, and retaining all the peculiar properties of a hammered nail. Their nails are drawn hot from a rod on exactly the same principle as a hand-made nail. Smiths will readily understand the virtue of this process of manufacture over that of punching and cold-rolling, and upon a single trial will thank us for calling their attention to the vast superiority of the Northwestern finished horse-nail.

OCEAN TRAVEL.

As the rush for Europe occurs about this time, persons living West will find Chicago the best point for securing passage, and the White Star Line the most economical, comfortable and desirable means of crossing the ocean. Tickets can be secured at the company's office, 120 Randolph st., for rail transit to New York, and there passengers will step on board one of the finest steamers that cross the Atlantic, and be reasonably sure of landing in Liverpool in 8 days. Passengers by steerage will find the White Star steamships superior to all others in the matter of space, ventilation and comfort.

STOVE REPAIRS.

Three hundred tons of iron is what Rathbone, Sard & Co.'s stock of stove repairs inventories in Chicago. Anybody using one of the stoves made by this well-known house will be supplied with plates to keep it in order. The report concerning their durability leads us to think they have repairs enough to last 100 years. With 250,000 of their own manufactured stoves in daily use, repairs are sometimes necessary, and it is a great convenience to be able to obtain them as near as Chicago.

PIANOS AND ORGANS.

The largest wholesale piano and organ house in the country in this line of business. The business is of such an extent that special bargains can be made by purchasers over all other houses. Buyers and others visiting Chicago this fall should call at these warerooms, two blocks west of Exposition building, at corner of State and Adams sts., or address W. W. Kimball, Chicago.

MILLIONS ELECTRIFIED!

Science holds the lightning in her hand. What was once the terror of millions is now the ministering angel of other millions. What killed, now cures. Electricity, as a grand curative and restorative agent, is not equalled by any other element or medicine in the history of the healing art. Unless the vital spark has fled the body, restoration by means of electricity is possible. It is the last resort of all physicians and surgeons in suspended animation, and has succeeded in restoring muscular action and life when the breath had apparently left the body. The value of this great element in the treatment of such diseases as Rheumatism, Paralysis, St. Vitus' Dance, Inflammation of the Kidneys, etc., remains unquestioned by the highest medical authorities. But how apply it to any part of the body continuously, conveniently, and economically? The invention of Collins' Voltaic Plaster meets this great popular want, and furnishes electricity to millions of unhappy invalids in so perfect a manner as to challenge the admiration of the medical faculty. Collins' Voltaic Plasters consist of silver and zinc plates, carefully attached together, and imbedded in a highly medicated porous plaster. For Local Pains, Lameness, Soreness, Numbness, Weakness, and Inflammation of the Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Spleen, Bowels, Bladder, Heart, and Muscles, Collins' Voltaic Plasters are the most speedy, safe, and effective remedy ever offered the afflicted, and are warranted superior to every other plaster before the public. HONEST OPINION!

Mr. H. R. Stevens:

Dear Sir:—This is to show that my son was taken sick in January, 1864, with Scrofula, which came out in large sores and ulcers on his leg and hip. His leg was swelled more than twice its natural size. He had several doctors of high standing in their profession—two from Boston and three from Charlestown—without getting a bit better. He was obliged to lie wherever he was placed, for he had no use of his limbs whatever. When we had given up all hopes of his living we were told to try VEGETINE, the great blood remedy; and he had taken it but a short time before we could see a great change. The sores run so bad that we had to change the cloths four or five times a day. Still, he was getting better; for he could move his limbs and help himself a little. He was soon able to sit up in bed, and, by constant use of VEGETINE, it has cured him. He has a lame leg, which he will probably have for life; but we all honestly believe if we had used VEGETINE before we had bothered with those doctors, it would have saved the use of his leg, and restored it to natural health. I hope all those troubled with Scrofula will read this testimony of me and my son, who is now well, and able to speak for himself.

CATHERINE MAHONEY,
DANIEL MAHONEY,
19 Trenton street, Charlestown, Mass.

May 10, 1872.

The above plain but honest statement conclusively shows the quick and thorough cleansing effects of the VEGETINE in Scrofula.

VEGETINE is acknowledged by all classes of people to be the best and most reliable blood purifier in the world.

Nearly Blind!

H. R. Stevens:

Dear Sir:—In expressing my thanks to you for benefits derived from the use of VEGETINE, and to benefit others, I will state:

When eight or nine years old I was afflicted with Scrofula, which made its appearance in my eyes, face and head, and I was very near blind for two years. All kinds of operations were performed on my eyes, and all to no good result. Finally, the disease principally settled in my body, limbs and feet, and at times in an aggravated way.

Last summer I was, from some cause, weak in my spine and kidneys, and it was at times very hard to retain the urine. Seeing your advertisement in the Commercial, I bought a bottle of VEGETINE, and commenced using according to directions. In two or three days I obtained great relief. After using four or five bottles I noticed it had a wonderful effect on the rough, scaly blotches on my body and legs. I still used VEGETINE, and the humorous sores one after another disappeared until they were all gone, and I attribute the cure of the two diseases to VEGETINE, and nothing else.

If I am ever affected with anything of the kind again, I shall try VEGETINE as the only reliable remedy. Once more accept my thanks, and believe me to be,

Very respectfully,
AUSTIN PARROTT,

"THE VIBRATOR"

1000 SOLD LAST SEASON WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION

This is the famous Threshing-machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE NICHOLS, SHEPARD & CO.
"VIBRATOR"

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz.: our improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

Death of Speaker Kerr.

In the death of Speaker Kerr who expired in Virginia, last Saturday night, the country looses one of the most prominent statesmen of the times. His future was full of brilliant promises, but death steps in just as he has reached the goal. His remains have been taken to his home in this State for burial.

Hayes voted against censuring Oakes Ames for Credit Mobilier bribery.

Curtin will stump Indiana for Tilden. The radical organs haven't found it out.

Robeson's excess of estimates for 1877 over the appropriations for 1876 is $3,879,899.

Tennessee seems to be the banner Southern State for Tilden and Hendricks clubs.

Grant was Hayes's old commander, and their relative positions have not yet changed.

Since Belknap's escape, they call these impeachable offences more "cabinet irregularities."

Honesty is at last becoming a national disgrace. Witness the triumph of knaves, and the disgrace of honest men.

"The Tilden and Hendricks Blue Jeans Cadets" is the style of a Vincennes, Indiana, young men's Democratic campaign club.

The New York Sun says that full ninety per cent. of those Republicans who voted for Greely four years ago, will vote for Samuel J. Tilden this year.

A Tilden club, composed entirely of Union Soldiers, has been formed at Springfield, Ill. Many of them were formerly active Republicans.

The Worcester Gazette keeps shouting to the Republican party to unload Grant This is rather cheeky takling to the man that holds the ribbons.

The popular impulse of the country is for Tilden and reform. It will amount to something more than this by the time the October elections takes place.

Col. Smith, who married Mr. Greely's eldest daughter, is one of the Liberals who don't believe in following Zach. Chandler. He's for Tilden ane reform.

Hayes has gained no particular strength in Ohio, since the day of his nomination. Tilden is gaining votes daily. That's the way it looks to us.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Notwithstanding the universal depression in all the industrial branches, the Radical papers expect the bloody-shirt factory to run on full time for the next four months.

The Boston Herald hits it the first time. It says: "The best way to make parties observe their pledges is to beat 'em when they won't." That centres the bull's eye.

HARD HANDS vs KID GLOVES.

The question relative to the two candidates before the people for Governor, is not as to their ability; for no one will dispute the fact that either of them will bring the requisite qualifications to an able discharge of that office. But what are their sympathies in common with the people over whom they aspire to preside. Look at the two men and study their characters. Mr. Harrison is an aristocrat, and from his boyhood up he has held himself aloof from the laboring masses. He has been nurtured among the wealthy, and those who entertain high notions of caste, those who believe that it never was intended they were to labor and toil, and earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. Kid gloves take the place of hardened hands, and a broadcloth suit fits much better than the garb of a laborer. But how is it with Mr. Williams? Look at the honest old farmer with horny hands and tanned brow, with the marks of hardest toil in every feature. Accustomed to labor from early life, toiling in the harvest field and at the plow, from early morn until late at night, he has had no chance to learn the high notions of a pampered aristocracy. Being one of the people he has advanced through life realizing every emotion every sympathy every hope of the laboring class. Being one of them, he knows their wants, and is identified with their interests, and stands pledged to the reform which they so earestly demand. Farmers, laborers will you vote for the one who is with you, or for him who has stood aloof, condescending at last to ask your support to place him in a position of power and social distinction. The question is between the yeomanry and aristocracy. Its the farmer against the high-toned class, the poor man against the rich. The former assures honesty and reform, the latter will instinctively incline to wealth and extravagance.

TAXES AND EXPENSES.

Figures correctly put together won't lie, and mixed figures will. The following comparative figures, setting forth the comparative taxes under Governors Dix and Tilden, will stand fire:

TAXES UNDER GOV. DIX'S ADMINISTRATION.

Tax, 1873	$14,800,903 38
Tax, 1874	15,727,482 08
Preceeding indebtedness, '75	1,296,035 08
Total	$31,824,420 54
Deduct tax for indebt'ness.	8,984,344 00
Total tax for expend'rs.	$22,840,076 54

UNDER GOV. TILDEN'S ADMINISTRATION.

In the following exhibit, add to this item for indebtedness the $1,800,000 in 1875, above charged to previous years:

Tax, 1875	$14,206,680 61
Tax, 1876	8,268,196 00
Total	$22,474,876 61
Deduct payments on indebtedness,	9,073,626 08
Total tax for expend'tures	$13,401,250 58

COMPARATIVE EXHIBIT.

Tax for exp'rs under Dix	$22,840,075 54
Tax for exp'rs " Tilden	13,401,250 58
Total saving in taxation	$9,438,826 01

The reduction of taxes in 1875, compared with 1874, was $2,725,193, and in addition a saving in ordinary repairs of the canals of $415,360, and a diminution in reappropriations of $577,240 44.

Even with the great reduction of State taxes for 1876 there is no reason why the good work should not go on indefinitely. Labor is low, rents are reduced merchandise has fallen, real estate has fallen, and the end of the depression is not yet reached. The great mine to work upon is still the Federal departments, but in States and cities there is also room for improvement.

CORUNNA ITEMS.

Lafe Miller, the agent, is very busy taking in new wheat.

Dr. Mercer is determined to have the nomination for Senator if there is not too many "Republican dogs" at the convention next Saturday.

The farmers near town are busy plowing for wheat.

We have a new dry goods store in town known as the firm of Helmer & Knour.

Dr. Snyder is very busy lately visiting patients with good success.

B. B. Dearborn has traded his hotel for a farm in Steuben County and a new proprietor is expected before long.

We notice S. Masters has not gone to Texas yet and is ready to do work as usual for his customers. He says he is not going to leave until he helps to elect Tilden & Hendricks.

R. C. Houser is teaching a splendid school with an intelligent looking class of students.

Thomas Hall has gone to Ohio where he expects to engage in the mercantile business. We wish him success.

B. A. Chaffes new brick residence is ready for the plasters.

L. D. Britton is building a new residence on his farm east of town.

George and David had a skirmish the other day. No bones broken.

Geo. McMillen is building a new meat market.

The new Dunkard Church south-east of town is progressing finely under the management of Wallace & Weaver.

Dr. Cissel says he would not beleieve anything in a Democratic paper. Just so, he reads the Toledo Blade and keeps Dime Novels for sale.

The most business man in town is S. O. Bachtel's teamster and fireman in mill and Auburn Republican correspodent.

Mac, we congratulate you.

Mr. Chas. Klotz authorizes us to say that he will sell goods at cost for the next two weeks preparatory to moving into his new building. When completed Charley will have the finest store room in town. It is most admirably arranged and tastefully frescoed and he may justly feel proud in the accomplishment of the enterprise.

Several items appeared in Courier during our absence that we would not have approved of had we been here. We do not pretend to absolve ourself from any responsibilty, neither do we claim their authorship. It may be necessary now and then to say naughty things, but it is our habit to avoid them to the last extremely.

We are requested to say that there will be a meeting at the Court House on Friday night to organize a Tilden and Hendricks club. While we do not wish to oppose such measures, we are not heartily in favor of them. There are much more effective ways of campaigning than marching around with torches.

The race after the escaped Hackathorn was taken up last Tuesday night on a new clue. The old man was seen going west with some one in the wagon and several started in pursuit. Coming to a cross road, the fresh wagon track ran Northward, and was followed until they came to a doctor's stable, and they were on the wrong scent. It is said that the fugative was seen in Corunna on Tuesday.

We are glad to notice a great many valuable improvements in Auburn even in our short absence and we can give the impression almost of a stranger on his first sight of the town. The new brick buildings speak of permanency, and their taking the place of wooden ones speak of enterprise. Auburn is adding very greatly to her appearance and her respectability is advanced in proportion. It will not surprise us in a few years to see the "lovliest village of the plain," a city of no mean pretensions, a fair rival to the most prosperous county seats in the State.

Gen. Lee and Capt. Cutter attended the dance last Sunday above Waterloo. Quite a number of kegs of beer were disposed of, and our friends took a hand in the exercises. Now, beer may not be so bad, and a dance is rather good exercise, but exemplary characters should remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy. Some of the boys may do so without much comment, but a man before the people for their suffrages should not stultify himself even to gain votes.—Some one has informed us that Capting Cutter is a candidate for Sheriff.

Now go to Casebeer & Co.'s for your dry goods, and groceries, on the corner of Main and Ninth-St.

HOME AGAIN.

We are at our post this week, after a protracted sojourn in the National Capitol. A residence in that city may seem very desirable to some, but the little enterprising city of Auburn, is much more attractive to our susceptible nature. It does us more good to clasp the hand of the sturdy farmer, the mechanic or laborer, than the designing politician. In Washington life has a tinsel covering, gilded over with a show of pomp and extravagance, here it is real, without any attempt at affectation Washington is a beautiful city, but we realize more comfort in the less showy attractions of home.

AMUSEMENTS.

Our Dramatic Troupe are preparing a fine programme for the entertainment of our citizens and will be able to present the "Loan of a Lover," "Slasher & Crasher," "Turn Him Out," and "Baby Elephant," in an admirable manner. They will have the assistance of Mr. Barbaret, an artiste of great experience, whose great dramatic powers will add greatly in the rendition of the above standard dramas. They will be able to open to the public in a few days, as they are having a thorough reheraal each evening.

House Burned.—The frame dwelling of Mr. Alex. Hall, located on his farm north-west of town, was entirely consumed by fire last Monday night. Mr W. H. Miller, a son of Conrad Miller, Esq., was occupying the house at the time and there is no definite knowledge of how the fire communicated, perhaps from a defective flue, though fire had been used only up to five o'clock the day before. The contents with the exception of a bed, stove, bureau and one or two other articles, were entirely consumed. The family escaped in their night-clothes, and are left in destitute circumstances. We notice with pleasure that a subscription has been started among our liberal citizens for their relief.

We notice our Radical friends talk a great deal about the discharge of Union soldiers, and the employment of ex-confederates. We would like them to give us their authority for the charge. Come down with your facts gentlemen, so that we can have something more worthy of an answer, than mere assertion. We want the facts and if the House of Representatives has done so, we will join with them in their condemnation. But we can't do so on mere say so.—Let us have the facts. On the other hand if they find they are mistaken we want them to make the correction and denounce those who have willfully misrepresented them. Is it not that a fair proposition? First show the people that your assertions are correct, before you ascribe to yourself so much love for the Union soldiers. We challenge you to present one fact to prove the charge. While on the other hand we propose to show that the reverse is the case. But we await an answer from those whose mouthings have greatly exceeded anything they have produced in the way of fact.

The Democrats at Waterloo offered to divide the time with the Republicans, last Tuesday evening, which they at first accepted. But on reflection they concluded they did not want to furnish a Republican crowd for Democratic speakers. Mr. Shriner, of Penn., was to have been there on the same evening with Mr Lee, but as no arrangement could be made for a debate he was notified not to come. They don't want their Republican voters to hear the arguments of Democratic speakers showing up the foul corruptions of their party. No, no, as long as they can keep them in the dark and fling the bloody shirt and cry war, they feel that they can control them. Now, we want all our Democratic friends to attend Republican meetings as they made up largely the audience last Tuesday night. Go and hear them talk about the war, abuse Tilden, but watch close and see if they say one word about the terrible corruption of their own party, or touch upon the fact that hard times are upon us, that the business industries of the country are prostrated all through their maladministration.

The Forced resignation of Orth, of Indiana, nominated by the Republicans as their candidate for Governor, and brought home for that purpose from Austria, where he was the United States Minister, and because, as supposed, he would run well, is a sharp comment upon the times. Public opinion at last in this country has come to mean something, and reform also means something, and both are to be respected hereafter more, we trust, than ever before, both by political parties and public men.

Mr. Orth, however, is the very same man he was when President Grant sent him to Vienna, as Mr. Jay's successor, and the self same man he was when the Republicans selected him as their standard bearer in Indiana. He is indeed part and parcel of the same old Radical machine which has been running for nearly sixteen years, which has run its party into the ground and forced the country to put on sackcloth and ashes for its misdeeds. The Republican party seems to have grown worse just in proportion as the Democratic party has improved. If defeat has made the latter wise, continued success has made the former arrogant, corrupt and wasteful.

A FLAT FAILURE.

A miserably tame affair came off at Waterloo last Tuesday night, in what was advertised as a Grand Republican rally. It was called the first gun for Hays & Wheeler, but it was the weakest report we ever listened to. The seventy-five torch-lights of Butler and Waterloo combined, with the women and children, made a good enough crowd for one of their speakers, but Gen. Lee was inspired by even what, he called a large audience in so small a town. He started out by speaking of the increased activity and prosperity he had noticed in every town and hamlet in the state. That was news, indeed. He noticed abundant crops, and a prosperous people. He did not say a word about the hundreds of men idle in every locality, no work no wages, no prospects in the near future, and their families in want. He did not say a word about the idle factories and silent machinery, or the great stagnation in every department of trade. This is the way the Republicans talk. They want you to believe that it is all right, and want you to continue this terrible condition of things by keeping them in power. They ask you to believe them, when the facts to the contrary stare you in the face. How many people in Waterloo believe with Mr. Lee, that we are prosperous, that we have had abundant crops and that we ought to be thankful. Mr. Lee gave a definition of reform that was certainly unique, if not original. He claims it means elevating the people, (to office perhaps). He did not say a word about taking thieves by the throat and thrusting them from office, not a word about the extravagance that has spent four thousand millions of the people's money since they have been in power, not a word about one of his own Generals making money out of the poor soldier, by speculating in post traderships. Oh, no, but he can abuse Tilden, which seemed to be the burden of his song, and repeat the dirty lies about a letter which Mr. Tilden never wrote and which he emphatically denied eight years ago over his own signature. He talked about ballot box stuffing in New York, and called it a henious crime for the Democracy, but forgot to mention a still more extensive stuffing in Philadelphia for which he has nothing to say. We are glad Gen. Lee visited us. If there was any votes made they were in our favor, for his argument was weak, his speaking poor and his misrepresentations badly concealed.

After Auburn was reached by the railroads, and we thereby got in communication with the rest of the world, and our town began to grow in such a way as to make it certain that we were always to have the best town in DeKalb County. Our business community demanded, and our people strongly felt the necessity of some banking facilities. Often times the matter was discussed among us, and a great many persons came here with the avowed purpose of starting one, talked a great deal and went away without doing anything. Finally Geo. Hazzard, of New-Castle, Ind., put in an appearance, and without much ado, although surrounded by some difficulties and perplexities, aided by a few of our leading and public spirited citizens, went to work speedily, put into operation the First National Bank of Auburn, thereby supplying our much needed necessity. Several weeks ago the institution move from its inconvenient and undesirable quarters opposite the Swineford House The institution managed by Messrs Hazzard & Newby, directed by J. R. Lanning, Wm. McIntyre, Jas. McClellan and Dr. J. H. Ford, has given general satisfaction and continually grown in favor. We all feel a just pride in its success. Its deposits have reached nearly 50,000.00. It pays no interest on open accounts, does not desire to deal in outside paper, but lones its money directly to its customers, satistactory and reasonable requirements having been complied with. It wants to be considered a conservative institution and we feel assured that its management will be such that it will continue to grow in confidence and public esteem. Mr. Hazzard, although not a resident, has evinced and taken as lively an interest in the success and prosperity of the town as our oldest citizens The new banking house was constructed under the immediate supervision of Wm McIntyre which is sufficient guarantee that it has one of the most durable and convenient banking houses in the State. We may remark that the growth of Auburn for the past 12 months has surpassed our most sanguine expectations. No town in Indiana has improved more substantially and satisfactorially. Its future is bright. With an intelligent community good society, our numerous churches and the completion of our new High School Building we are bound to have outside of Fort Wayne, the best business point in North-eastern Indiana. We know our citizens will continue to lend and give new capital and newcomers will prosper and get necessary encouragement.

A Burial at Midnight.

A sad, weird scene took place at Garrett last Monday night, in strange contrast to the usually quiet and peaceful character of the town. It was a burial by moonlight, without any moon. A man named James Brown, (not our pugilistic Jack), was found last Sunday about noon in a dying condition in a freight car. He was taken to a house near by; but soon expired. The Coroner held an inquest, the result of which was the deceased came to his death by natural causes. After a post mortem examination held by Dr. Cowan, of this place, the boys concluded to give him a Christian burial. At twelve o'clock, by the pale light of the moon, which had disappeared several hours before, one of the Christian gentlemen started for a bible; but soon returned with the startling intelligence that there was no bible in the house. In the meantime the wind sighed gently among the trees, and the melancholly darkness increased in gloominess. After several vain attempts a bible was found; but who should read the funeral service? No one responded until the sweet, mild voice of Jack. T. was heard, his face beaming with childlike innocense, as he expressed his willingness to officiate in that capacity. By the good graces of the ladies, the corse had been neatly laid out in a suit of new clothes, and a good coffin had been provided. At twelve o'clock, when grave yards yawn, and ghosts are on the move, this little, Christian party, started forth on their mission of goodness and mercy, and the mournful procession moved sadly out to the last depository of mortal man.—And they > "Buried him, darkly, at dead of night,"

with most solemn impressiveness. For they argued, that poor man may have a family, they may live in London, and he shall be nobly buried. And that lone man, in the midst of strangers, far away from home and friends, with no loving heart looking pityingly upon him as he passed into the dark valley of the shadow of death—that man found in the sympathizing hearts of our Garrett friends a Christian burial.

DeKalb County Soldiers Association.

Pursuant to call, soldiers of the late war representing nearly every township and precinct in the county, convened in Ensley's Hall, Auburn, on Saturday Aug. 18, 1876, for the purpose of organizing an Association of the ex-soldiers of the county. C. K. Baxter was called temporarily to the chair, and W. C. McGonigal was appointed Secretary.

After hearing explanatory remarks from Capt Kinmont and others, and the adoption of a resolution declaring in favor of organizing and holding annual re unions of all the soldiers now resident of the county, a committee consisting of Capt. Kinmont, A. L. Reinoehl, D. D. Deihl, Simeon Hammon and D. Culver was appointed to report to the meeting suitable persons for officers for the ensuing year. The committee made the following report, which was unanimously adopted: For President, E. D. Hartman; for Vice Presidents—Butler, Wm. Feagler; Jackson, Daniel Culver; Concord, J. A. Provines; Newville, N. T. Fuller; Stafford, D. D. Diehl; Wilmington, James Woods; Auburn, J. L. Rainier; Waterloo, F. N. Baidler; Keyser, T. C. Sergent; Richland, D. B. Chicoat; Fairfield, G. W. Ansley; Smithfield, G. Cosper; Franklin, Levi Story; Troy, D. W. Weitz; Secretaries, C. K. Baxter and T. C. Mays; Treasurer, Dr. Noyce Coats.

On taking the chair, President Hartman made a short address which was received with applause.

Upon motion, it was resolved to hold a re-union at Auburn, on the 29th day of September, 1876.

The President was directed to appoint a committee to draft a constitution and by-laws, to report at the re-union, the signing of which was to constitute every ex-soldier, now a resident of the county, a member of the Association.

On motion the Vice Presidents, with G. W. Gordon, of Auburn, as chairman, were constituted a general committee of arrangements. Committees on finance, railroads, speakers, music, artillery etc., were authorized, the first of which was partially appointed, when it was deemed best to allow the President to fill the committees. Hon. Henry Feagler was appointed chief commissary for the coming re-union, and the county papers were requested to publish the proceedings, when the meeting adjourned until the 26th day of next month.

DR. W. C. STEVENS,
Munroe Block, Syracuse, N. Y

We had a jolly time the other night with the Hook and Ladder boys. It was the first time they were invited out on business, and the boys felt bully. If that fire had lasted half an hour longer, they would have made it look sick.—Why don't people build larger houses so as to take longer to burn them up. The boys worked hard to get there, but it was too far for the time. It was pleasant to see the boys work. Swihart was in front, and done the sw—praying, and he showed great energy on this occasion. Our friend Jack o' C. has splendid wind for a short man. He says he always feels better by sitting down on the sidewalk when about half way and waiting until the boys' return. He had not rested very long, when, it being quite dark, some fellow in a great hurry came puffing along, and ran square over him, Jack says he hollered at him but he thinks he did'nt hear him, at least he feels that way. You can't stop a man when he is running to a fire. You can check him a little by getting him to take hold to a rope, but that's all. If there is to be another fire, and that fire is to be in town, we hope the boys will get a chance to fight it, as we really believe our Hook and Ladder organization, notwithstanding all the fun, will prove of great efficiency and assistance.

Rev. Mr. Johnson delivered a very excellent lecture on the "Human Mind," at the north school-house last Monday evening. Mr. Gandy informs us that A. J. Douglass, Esq., the accomplished Superintendent of Whitley county, will deliver the next lecture on next Monday evening, to which all are invited.

The Garrett Guerrillas rigged up quite showily for the meeting here last night and did not go marching around with their heads down, but marched boldly forward under the lead of Captain Sargent. Our neighbor just cleaned Auburn and Butler out their handsome appearance and good drill.

Gen. Lee repeated his speech at Waterloo at this place last evening. It was poorly received.

GARRETT ITEMS.

Dear Courier—A few words now about "Lookout," in last week's Republican. He says he was in town last Saturday evening to the Democrat meeting. The reason was, that he was too full to get out of town, furthermore if he had been sober enough to listen straight he could have heard the facts and saw the figures plainly enough to convince any ordinary thinker why Tilden is a reformer and where the republican party is corrupt; out he had not time to take in quite all the speech from the fact he had been up the night before until all in town had retired to their peaceful slumbers, in order to cut the hickory pole in two, and on Saturday night he was kept pretty busy in following up and assisting a few scape graces who disturbed the meeting. And in regard to the retireing of three nominees for Judges of Supreme Court that they speak of, were not men who accepted the nomination like Orth to resign a foreign mission and who also did not dare to bid the Austrians good-bye as an honest man would do, but on the other hand, on account of his swindles, he had to sneak away and come over here to accept the nomination for Governor of Indiana, who was made a candidate by that "strictly pure republican party" As there is nothing of any importance in "Lookout's" letter will give it but little notice.

A passenger train on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad was thrown from the track by a broken rail near North East, Pa., last week. A number of passengers were badly injured, two or three of whom have since died.

THE WEST.

Wild Bill, the well-known Indian scout, was recently killed at Deadwood City, in the Black Hills, by one Bill Sutherland. Wild Bill—whose real name is William Hickock—was playing cards in a saloon, when Sutherland came up behind and fired, the ball entering behind the right ear, and passing clear through the head, perforating the brain. The assassin says, in justification of his deed, that Hickock killed his brother at Fort Hays, Kansas, some years ago.

A dispatch from Bismarck, dated Aug. 15, says: "We have news of Terry's last fight with the Indians by the steamer Western, which arrived this morning from Benton. When at Fort Peck, the Indians told the captain of the Western that Terry had had a fight with the Sioux the day before, and that Terry's killed numbered 300, Sitting Bull's loss being 700 men."

WASHINGTON.

James G. Hill, who has been nine years one of the principal architects of the Treasury Department, has been appointed by Secretary Morrill Supervising Architect.

In the course of a conversation with a friend (says a Washington telegram to the Chicago Tribune) "Gen. Grant has reviewed the testimony of ex-Solicitor Wilson in detail. From this same conversation it was learned that the President claims to have deferred to Secretary Bristow's opinion in all matters relating to the whisky-frauds investigation and the trial of the offenders, and that he at that time had so great confidence in Mr. Bristow's fidelity and honesty that he was ready and willing to go to any extent to strengthen the Secretary's hands, and even to sacrifice many officers who had been his personal friends, and in whom he has reposed as much confidence on account of their supposed honesty and ability as in Secretary Bristow himself. In reference to the assertion of Mr. Wilson as to the indorsement of 'Let no guilty man escape,' on the Barnard letter, he said that he had no suspicion of either Casey or Babcock when he wrote that indorsement, and that at that time he had heard of nothing calculated to excite the slightest anxiety in his mind in regard to either of them. He believed them both innocent. He was led to write this indorsement by having had his attention frequently called to assertions by certain persons in St. Louis that they had such potent influence at the White House that the Secretary of the Treasury would not be able to reach them. In his efforts to bring the ring to punishment, in order to strengthen the hands of Secretary Bristow, and to convince these unprincipled persons of their impotence, as well as to show all members of the whisky ring that the persons referred to were impostors, and had no influence at the Executive Mansion, he made the indorsement in question. In referring to the accuracy of Mr. Wilson's testimony so far as it relates to dates, the President said he could not help thinking that Mr. Bristow must have taken notes of what occurred at every Cabinet meeting in which the prosecution of the whisky ring was discussed, and that immediately after each he held a conference with Solicitor Wilson. On many points the President said that he thought ex-Solicitor Wilson had already answered himself."

Gen. Horace Porter was before the sub committee on the whisky frauds last week. In reference to Bluford Wilson's testimony, he said he did not allude to "Sylph" as a lewd woman, in speaking of her to McDonald. Gen. Babcock made an explanation to the President and the Attorney General. If the witness had thus spoken of "Sylph," he would have been inventing a rumor, which would have reflected on the President. The witness denied positively that he told witness that "the greatest favor he could do the President was to shield Babcock." He denied other assertions of Wilson. The witness said that he never heard Gen. Babcock referred to as concerned in the speculations, except from the newspapers.

President Grant, on the last day of the session of Congress, permitted himself to be interviewed by the New York Herald's Washington correspondent. According to the report of the interview, the President stated that there were many misrepresentations made in connection with the official communication between himself and ex-Secretary Bristow and ex-Solicitor Wilson. As an illustration of this, he said he never asked for the resignation of Mr. Bristow, and that that official resigned voluntarily, and contrary to his (Grant's) wishes. "As for Bristow," the President added, "notwithstanding the doubts and expostulations of my friends, I always regarded him with the fullest confidence, good-will and respect; but my friends laughed at me when I gave it finally as my opinion, from the facts and information brought to my knowledge by persons whom I thought reliable, that there was a conspiracy on foot, in which he took part, pertaining to the Presidential candidacy, and I regret the conclusion forced upon me that there was more than seeming truth in the supposition concerning himself." The President, reports the Herald interviewer, "said the question of his integrity or probity, as it might be judged now or in after years, never gave him an emotion of concern, at least in the way of doubt, because he knew he had ever been impelled by proper motives, and he did not believe there was the slightest thing to the contrary on record. With the light of events and the experience of earlier times, there were many things that he could see now which he might do, if again necessary, in a different way, but they pertained more to the matter of discretion as to individuals than to questions of policy."

The President, through the Secretary of War, has addressed the following communication to Gen. Sherman:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON CITY, Aug. 16, 1876.

To Gen. W. T. Sherman, commanding United States Army:

SIR: The House of Representatives of the United States on the 10th inst. passed the following preamble and resolutions, viz.:

WHEREAS, The right of suffrage prescribed by the constitutions of the several States is subject to the Fifteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States, which is as follows:

"ART. 15, SEC. 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

"SEC. 2. The Congress shall have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation; and,

"WHEREAS, The right of suffrage so prescribed and regulated should be faithfully maintained and observed by the United States and the several States and citizens thereof; and,

"WHEREAS, It is asserted that the exercise of the right of suffrage is in some of the States, notwithstanding the efforts of all good citizens to the contrary, resisted and controlled by fraud, intimidation and violence, so that in such cases the object of the amendment is defeated; and,

"WHEREAS, All citizens, without distinction of race, or class or color, are entitled to the protection conferred by such article; therefore,

"Be it resolved, By the House of Representatives, that all attempts by force, fraud, terror, intimidation, or otherwise, to prevent the free exercise of the right of suffrage in any State, should meet with certain, condign and effectual punishment; and that in any case which has heretofore occurred, or that may hereafter occur, in which violence or murder has been or shall be committed by one race or class upon the other, the prompt prosecution of the criminal or criminals in any court having jurisdiction is imperatively demanded, whether the crime be one punishable by fine or imprisonment, or one demanding the penalty of death."

The President directs that, in accordance with the spirit of the above, you are to hold all the available force under your command, not now engaged in subduing the savages of the Western frontier, in readiness to be used upon the call or requisition of the proper legal authorities for protecting all citizens, without distinction of race, color, or political opinion, in the exercise of the right to vote, as guaranteed by the Fifteenth amendment, and to assist in the enforcement of "certain, condign and effectual punishment" upon all persons who shall attempt by force, fraud, terror, intimidation, or otherwise to prevent the free exercise of the right of suffrage as provided by the law of the United States, and have such force so distributed and stationed as to be able to render prompt assistance in the enforcement of the law. Such additional orders as may be necessary to carry out the purpose of these instructions will be given to you from time to time after consultation with the law officers of the Government. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

Orders have been issued from the War Department for the recruiting of 2,500 additional men for the cavalry regiments. The principal recruiting stations are at St. Louis, Chicago, Indianapolis, Buffalo, Boston, and New York. Branch offices will be opened in several Western cities, to secure the required number as soon as possible....It is announced from Washington that Gen. Sherman will at present issue no order relative to the location of troops in the Southern States, but will furnish officers in command of detachments with copies of the President's order on that subject for their information and guidance. It is also stated that the Attorney General is devising measures for the strict enforcement of the National Election law in all parts of the country.

GENERAL.

Six young men from Canada recently participated in a duel at Richmond, Vt., one of the principals, Arthur Rovert, being wounded in the leg by Leon Vandrey, his opponent. The parties were arrested and held to bail.

The railroad war has now become general East and West, and the prospect to owners of railroad-stock is anything but encouraging. If this state of affairs continues much longer half the roads in the country will be forced into bankruptcy; and, as the prospects are now, the war will be kept up indefinitely, as Vanderbilt seems determined to bring about the above result.

FOREIGN.

England has called Turkey's attention to the Bulgarian outrages, and intimates that there has been more than enough of such atrocities. A telegram from Constantinople announces that the Sultan has granted complete amnesty to the Bulgarians implicated in the late rising, with the exception of the leaders and active movers in the revolt....The Berlin correspondent of the London Standard says it has transpired that the Emperors of Russia and Austria, at their conference at Reichstadt, agreed that when peace was concluded the Porte might take guarantees to prevent Servia from again assaulting Turkey, but that the Turks should never be permitted to occupy a Servian town....A Vienna dispatch asserts that the Turks continue to massacre Christians in Bosnia, that many villages are empty, their inhabitants having been slaughtered; that horrible atrocities have been committed, and hundreds of dead bodies are floating down the Una....Disraeli has been raised to the House of Lords, with the title of Earl of Beaconsfield.

The energetic measures that were to have made short work of the Cuban insurrection have not come to pass according to promise, and the warfare of the insurgents continues to be prosecuted with fearful ferocity. A fort in Cienfuegos, garrisoned by fourteen Spanish soldiers, was attacked by a band of sixty rebels, whose demand for its surrender being refused, they burned the fort and with it the garrison of fourteen. The next day a Spanish detachment, numbering 106 men, were attacked and routed by a superior insurgent force, twenty-three of the regular troops and their commander being killed....Although Disraeli is to be elevated to the peerage, he will remain Prime Minister. Sir Stafford Northcote will become leader of the House of Commons. It is the general impression that the conservatives are weakened by the change, but Disraeli is physically unable to sustain the labor of the leadership of the House....A Madrid (Spain) dispatch says: "The heat at Madrid is fearful, exceeding any recollection since 1809. The city is deserted. Forty field laborers are dead, near Seville. The vines in Andalusia are scorching and failing."

It is reported that Disraeli will shortly resign the Premiership, and that he will probably be succeeded by Lord Derby.

There is talk in Spain of rebelling against Queen Isabella, and a ministerial crisis exists. ....Another revolution has broken out in South America. The republic of Columbia is the scene of the strife. The Catholic or clerical party, known as "Conservatives," have risen against the Government. There have already been several fights between the belligerents, in one of which 100 of the Government forces were killed. In another battle the "Conservatives" were beaten, with the loss of their leader, Herrera.... From a military point of view the situation of the Servians could hardly be worse. The Turkish invaders are pushing westward from Gurgusovatz, and purpose concentrating their forces with the view of marching on Belgrade. The Servian forces in the south have retreated while in Herzegovina the fortune of war appears also to have turned in favor of the Turks. ....A revolution has broken out in the Colombian Republic of South America.

The city of Beyreuth, in Bavaria, has just been the scene of the greatest musical event of the century, namely, the production of the latest work of the composer Wagner, entitled "The Ring of Nibelungen." A dispatch from Bayreuth says of the closing installment: "The representation of 'The Ring of Nibelungen' was completed to-night, with the performance of 'Gotterdammerung.' The conclusion was grandly tragic and majestic. Anti-Wagnerites refuse to admit that they find much melody, but acknowledge that the Nibelungen Trilogy is the greatest work of the composer. They consider that Herr Wagner has given the predominance to the dramatic over the lyric element. Some acts are wearisome, but it is admitted that Nibelungen will be the model to future generations as a work of the highest dramatic and musical character."....There is a terrible famine in the northern provinces of China, and there are thousands of deaths from starvation daily.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Friday, Aug. 11.—Senate.—The Senate spent most of the day on the Post-route bill, which was finally passed with amendments restoring the fast-mail service, and also restoring the franking privilege....Spencer read dispatches from prominent Republicans in Alabama, alleging that in the recent election in that State thousands of Republican voters were denied the right of suffrage. Spencer said he hoped the Senate would appoint a committee to investigate the election....The constitutional amendment in regard to the school fund was discussed and ordered to a third reading.

House.—The Senate bill repealing so much of the Army Appropriation bill as limits the number of Indian scouts to 300, and continuing in force the statute which authorizes the employment of 1,000 Indian scouts, was passed. ....Randall made the conference report on the Indian Appropriation bill. He said the bill as agreed to was a saving over last year's bill of $690,497. The report was agreed to....The Speaker pro tem. laid before the House a message from the President, with communications from the Secretary of War, Gen. Sherman, and Gen. Sheridan, recommending an increase of the cavalry force of the army by 2,500 men, or authority to call out five regiments of volunteer cavalry of 1,000 men each. Referred....Singleton, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the Senate bill for printing 100,000 copies of the Agricultural report for each year of 1874 and 1875, and appropriating $130,000 for that purpose. Passed.

Saturday, Aug. 12.—Senate.—The school amendment to the constitution was read the third time and placed on the calendar....A bill appropriating $800,000 to pay judgments of the Court of Claims was passed. The Senate devoted several hours to debate on the Hawaiian treaty.

House.—The House proceedings were devoid of interest....Lynch (colored), of Mississippi, delivered a political speech in answer to Lamar.

Monday, Aug. 14.—Senate.—A resolution was passed for the appointment of a joint committee, to consist of three Senators and three members of the House, to prepare a suitable Government for the District of Columbia, and report at the next session of Congress....The bill to carry into effect the Hawaiian treaty was passed after a long debate......Spencer submitted a resolution declaring that the late election in Alabama was carried by the Democrats by means of fraud and intimidation, and providing for the appointment of a committee of five Senators to investigate the matter. Objected to, and it went over.... The House joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution of the United States, prohibiting the appropriation of money for the support of sectarian schools, was rejected—yeas, 28; nays, 16—not two-thirds voting in the affirmative. The vote in detail was as follows: Yeas—Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron (Wis.), Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Jones (Nev.), Logan, McMillan, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Sargent, Spencer, Wadleigh, and West—28. Nays—Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Gordon, Jones (Fla.), Kernan, Kee, Kelly, McDonald, Maxey, McCreery, Norwood, Randolph, Stevenson—16....Logan's bill, authorizing the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing the Indian hostilities, was passed.

House.—The bill giving more troops for the Indian service was passed under a suspension of the rules....Watterson, the new member from Louisville, appeared and was sworn in....Singleton addressed the House on the condition of public affairs in Mississippi......Schleicher made a speech in advocacy of the Silver bill....Randall made some general remarks on the several appropriations. He gave an extended account of the reduction policy of the House, charging the Senate with having defeated still greater economy contemplated by the House. Foster, a member of the Appropriation Committee, replied to what he called the ingenious misstatements of Randall....The Speaker laid before the House a message from the President in regard to the River and Harbor bill, stating if it had been compulsory to expend the money therein appropriated he would have vetoed it, but as it was not he would take care that no public money was expended on useless works, or upon any that were not clearly national. The message created quite a sensation, and after an animated debate it was referred to the Committee on Commerce....An evening session was held, devoted almost wholly to political debate. Kasson, in the course of a speech, made a fierce attack upon Samuel J. Tilden, charging that he was a copperhead, a disunionist, etc. Cox got the floor to reply, and began by saying: "The defender of Belknap has said certain things of Tilden." Kasson jumped to his feet and in great anger said: "It is untrue! It is untrue." Cox began again by saying "the apologist for Belknap—" when Kasson again jumped to his feet and charged that the statement was false. Great excitement ensued, Cox rushed across the open space in front of the Speaker's desk and up the aisle down which Kasson was coming rapidly. Stevenson, of Illinois, got between them and pushed them back. Kasson said something in the confusion, and Cox replied that he "lied." There was for a time great confusion and excitement on the floor, but matters finally quieted down and proceeded in the usual order.

Tuesday, Aug. 15.—Senate.—The Committees on Printing and on Public Buildings and Grounds were authorized to sit during the recess. ....The Senate then proceeded to consider the House bills granting pensions to various persons, and a large number were passed. ....McCreery submitted a resolution returning the thanks of the Senate to the President pro tempore, the Hon. Thomas W. Ferry, for the dignity, justice and impartiality with which he had presided over the deliberations of the Senate. Agreed to by a unanimous vote. At 7:30 p. m. the gavel of the presiding officer fell, and he responded to the resolution of McCreery in a brief speech, closing as follows: "To the officers of the Senate, whose valued aid has enabled me to hold your confidence, I tender sincere acknowledgment. Finally, wishing you all a safe return to your respective homes, I pronounce the first regular session of the Forty-fourth Congress adjourned without day." [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

House.—The Monday night session of the House continued until 6 o'clock Tuesday morning, most of the time being taken up in dilatory motions and maneuvers to prevent Cox resuming his speech in reply to Kasson. At last, about 5 o'clock a. m., a truce was effected between the opposing forces, and an opportunity was afforded to both Cox and Kasson to make a due apology to the House and each other for exhibiting any angry passion or the violation of any parliamentary decorum that either might have been guilty of. After that Hewitt took the floor, and in a speech which was frequently applauded by his own side of the House, defended Tilden from the assault made on him by Kasson, and eulogized him as the standard-bearer of the national Democracy....The House refused to concur in the Senate amendments to the House bill for the enlistment of volunteers to aid in suppressing the Indian hostilities. A message was also received from the President announcing that he had signed the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation bill, but calling attention to the fact that constitutionally the House had no right to order the withdrawal of Consuls or Ministers, though it might reduce or withhold entirely salaries to be paid to said officers. A constitutional discussion as to the limits of the power of the President in regard to diplomatic officers ensued, which ended by referring the message to the Committee on Appropriations........ Hunton, from the Judiciary Committee, made a report exonerating the Chairman of that Committee (Knott) in connection with the Josiah Caldwell telegram. Adopted—81 to 50....Banks offered the following resolution, which was adopted by a unanimous vote, and a copy ordered to be telegraphed to Speaker Kerr: "Resolved, That the House of Representatives, at the moment of closing its present session, tenders to M. C. Kerr, its beloved presiding officer, the unanimous expression of the heartfelt sympathy of its members in his affliction, and hope that the recovery of his health may soon give his country the benefit of his counsel and example."....Precisely at 7:30 o'clock the Speaker pro tem (Saylor) announced that the hour for final adjournment had arrived. Thanking the House for its courtesy, the first session of the House of the Forty-fourth Congress stood adjourned without day.

Black Hills item from The Pioneer, of Custer City: "Those trying the experiment of raising vegetables in the gulches are making a success of it. Potatoes are already as large as quail eggs, while peas and beans are doing remarkably well."

A SIOUX "BRAVE."

There are plenty of them out in the Sioux country—plenty of these Sioux "braves," as the young Indian bucks call themselves. No less than 10,000 of these fellows daily arise with the sun and lay on their war paint in the fear or hope that Gen. Crook will advance into their mountain strongholds and give them battle before night. To kill and scalp white men is almost a religion with these young savages, and the prospect of an engagement with United States troops, with any sort of odds in favor of themselves, is a delightful one for the followers of such chiefs as Black Moon, Crazy Horse, and Sitting Bull.

But how do the red-skinned warriors look when dressed for battle, away out in the Big Horn country? Here is a picture of one: Tall and very gaunt is our specimen, as he stands by his scrawny pony. Pride, ugliness and defiance sit upon his thin features. He counts himself as one of the "braves" in every sense of the word. On his head is an ornamented coronet of feathers, taken from a wild turkey or an eagle, and braided firmly into his black coarse hair. From his brow to his chin is paint—paint in stripes, circles, and semi-circles, of red and yellow, with here and there a daub of horrid green, making the subject look as much like a demon of perdition as the human mind can imagine. The rims of his ears are completely filled with dangling rings and balls of silver; his neck is surrounded by a necklace of bears' claws, hooked downward, while a red blanket lies half covering his shoulders, breast, and loins. A pair of rough trowsers, held up by a belt from which suspends a huge knife and a revolver, completes the "brave's" costume, with the exception of a pair of moccasins on his feet and a burnished breech-loading rifle, which he fondles as a pet, in his black, bony hands.

Such creatures as this, born and trained to blood-shedding, are the present defiers of the Government and open enemies of the white man of the frontier. They can fight, for they are men who reason in such things as well as do white soldiers; they can endure privation, for they never have learned to expect anything else in life, and located as they are in a country as fully adapted to their favorite mode of warfare as were the lava beds favorable to the Modoc rebellion, these hostile Sioux Indians, 10,000 strong, can prolong their hostilities long past the present summer's campaign.

In camp life the Sioux Indian is a filthy animal. Just how low and degraded he is in his habits has never been told by Indian writers, and would hardly be credited if related. In fact, an Indian commissary department could hardly be investigated by a white man unless he were a person of uncommon stomach. In game, beeves or vegetables the Indian cook never throws anything away, from the tops of a wild onion to the meanest portion of an animal's anatomy. In his associations, also, the Sioux Indian, like most all other representatives of the tribes in the West, is exceedingly vile, and is rarely free from diseases brought on by his filthy conduct.

Such is the "noble red man" of North America at the present day—a creature whose bloody, untamed and untamable nature is driving him to a certain, though perhaps not very early, extermination.—Chicago Journal.

Getting Her Out of the Mud.

Rev. Robert Collyer, in a speech at Chicago, recently, related the following anecdote:

A great many years ago, on one of our Southwestern rivers, there was an old skipper who had a steamboat which was sailing in shoal water and got stuck in the mud. She was swung around in the water, and there was no chance to get her afloat, do what they would. He was a very profane old fellow, and everybody through the country knew it. Suddenly an idea struck him. He said to one of the deck hands:

"You go to the town and tell them I have got religion, and that I want them to come down and hold a prayer meeting on board."

The deck hand went to the town and spread the news around, and, everybody being interested in the old skipper's conversion, went down to hold the prayer meeting. The old man was standing ready to receive them, and as they came down he said to every man:

"Go aft," and they all went aft until there was a great weight, and the end that was fast in the mud got loose and floated off. As soon as the boat got afloat the skipper said:

"The meeting is over; jump ashore!"

"Dynamite Fiend" in France.

The latest French journals recite the discovery in France of a match for the too famous Thomasson in the person of a merchant in Paris, who recently imported from Switzerland several casks of what he declared to be undutiable "clay." The Custom house officers suspected something, kept the casks at the warehouse, and sent for a chemist. The chemist was puzzled with his first specimen of the contents, until he bethought himself of testing a piece of the pretended clay with fire. It instantly exploded with a loud noise. Another very small piece put into a mortar, exploded on being sharply touched with a pestle. It proved to be dynamite. The casks contained enough, had any one of them been rolled off a cart on to the ground, to have blown up a whole quarter of the city. Fancy such a cask in the hands of a couple of American baggage-smashers! Legal proceedings have been taken against this wretch who thus risked the lives of thousands to save a few francs.

Knew All About It.

A book might be written of the humors on the Centennial. In the Agricultural hall there are two immense hogs, stuffed, each bearing a placard telling their age and weight, and with the name of the man who prepared them for exhibition, followed by the word "taxidermist." A man and his wife were looking at these with great interest. And, reading the placards, the woman said: "Why, these are taxidermists. I thought they were hogs." Her husband looked at the creatures with a puzzled expression, and then went carefully over the placards, as if to satisfy himself fully on the point. Finally he replied: "They are hogs. Taxidermist is the name of the place they come from."

A Turkish Pasha.

Albert Wolff writes to the Courier des Etats Unis: To understand the Turks it is necessary to see them at home. The one who has astonished me most is certainly his Highness Mustapha Fazyl Pasha, brother of the Viceroy of Egypt. He is known to Parisians. They have seen his Highness either upon the Italiens, or at Baden, or at Hombourg. With us, he was a man of the world, who amused himself; at home, Mustapha Fazyl Pasha is a Grand Seigneur indeed. His house is much the most notable in Constantinople. When I say his house, it is a figure of speech, for there is not upon the two banks of the Bosphorus a palace vast enough to accommodate the suite of this Prince without a throne, this Minister without a portfolio.

At Candilli, on the Asiatic side, Mustapha Pasha has a palace of forty windows front, where his Highness lodges and feeds two hundred persons, men, women, and eunuchs. Three or four kilometres distant, on the other heights of Tchamlidja, in another palace, he has two hundred persons additional, making four hundred, without taking into account the Egyptian residence, where the old domestics or invalided slaves end their days in a pleasant retreat.

In all, Mustapha Fazyl Pasha supports five hundred persons every day, and over and above these five hundred, three hundred enrich themselves in his service.

Paper Car-Wheels.

The American Paper Car Wheel Company, of Hudson, N. Y., has specimens of 30, 33 and 42-inch wheels of its manufacture. These wheels have steel tires made with an inside flange and a cast-iron hub. On each side of the hub and tire, wrought iron or steel plates 3-16-inch thick are bolted, and the space between the plates is filled with compressed, or rather condensed, paper. This paper is made of straw boards ⅛-inch thick, pasted together with paste made of rye flour, and first made into sections about ⅛-inch thick. These are subject to a pressure of about 400 tons for about five hours, and are then dried with hot air. These sections are then pasted together in the same way, so as to get the requisite thickness, about 3½ inches, and are again pressed and dried. They thus form a disk, which is turned off and the tire forced on with a pressure of about 150 tons. The plates are then bolted to the inside and outside of the wheel with ¾-inch bolts. An old wheel is exhibited, "one of the first paper car wheels ever made. It has run under a Pullman car 312,900 miles without the tire being turned." One of the wheels is shown with a portion of the plates and paper disk cut away, so as to show the inside structure.—Scientific American.

Paris as a Seaport.

The idea of making Paris a seaport—in other words, of rendering the Seine navigable for sea-going vessels—is again coming to the surface. The river at Paris is only between sixty and seventy feet above the level of the ocean, and a distance in a straight line of 120 miles, although, following the course of the stream, it is 210 miles. The problem is how to lessen the latter number and make a greater depth of water. It appears that to dredge out seven feet would need an expenditure of 13,000,000 francs, and an additional three feet would require 11,000,000 more. It is stated, moreover, that the average size of French vessels is under 300 tons. The Minister of Public Works and the Prefect of the Seine made an exploring expedition the other day to Rouen, and the journey is to be repeated by the Municipal Council. Of course, no decision has been arrived at, but the lower esti will probably be adopted.

Wealth Without Its Anxieties.

The newsboys who gather about in the afternoon awaiting the publication hour of the evening papers are either fairly rolling in wealth or their conversation is to some extent imaginative. Said one of them to another:

"Billy, did per buy that $50 plaid summer suit I seed yer lookin' at in a winder Saturday?"

"No, Blinkey, I didn't take it in. Ther wuz only one watch pocket in the trowsers an' I allus carries two tickers, one ter c'rect t'other by."

"But yer ain't goin' ter wear yer army britches all summer, be yer, 'specially when yer go drivin' evenin's?"

"No, Blinkey, my dear, I ain't," was Billy's grave reply, "but don't yer worry about me. It's silk undercloz as preserves my precious health. Silk's the thing, Blinkey."

A Wholesome Lesson.

There is a wholesome lesson for children in the following little story, and it may not be unprofitable to the many grown-up ones who take a strange delight in the painful exhibitions of men under the influence of liquor: A little girl in Reading, Pennsylvania, saw an old drunken man lying on a door-step, the perspiration pouring from his face, and a crowd of children preparing to make fun of him. She took her little apron and wiped his face, and then looked up so pitifully to the rest, and made this remark: "Oh, say, don't hurt him! He's somebody's grandpa."

His Peculiarity.

"Every man," said Mark Lemon, one evening at his club, "has his peculiarities; though I think I am as free from them as most men; at any rate, I don't know what they are!" Nobody contradicts the editor of Punch, but after a awhile Albert Smith asked, "Which hand do you shave with, uncle?" "With my right hand," replied Lemon. "Ah," returned the other, "that's your peculiarity; most people shave with a razor."

The silver glut is ruining the burglars. Solid silver is scarcely worth stealing at current London rates, and as for plated-ware, thieves are above taking it. The Brooklyn burglar who tested the silver on the sideboards in Monroe place and threw aside the plated ware betrayed the business instinct of the profession. In Nevada burglars consider it low-toned to steal silver in any form, and the San Francisco Bulletin is forced to admit that unless there is a speedy advance in the silver bullion the California thieves will have to abandon the trade and earn an honest living like other folks.

A Lightning Bolt Writes God's Name on a Blasphemer.

Some of our contemporaries seem disposed to question the truth of our statement that a negro man who was killed by lightning a few days ago in Campbell County had the letters "GOD" on his body. Dr. Thomas E. Moorman, whose postoffice address is Mt. Zion, Campbell county, has furnished the Richmond Christian Advocate an account of the circumstances, from which we extract the following:

"On the evening of the 6th inst. Perry Jones and George Brown, colored men, notoriously the most profane, wicked persons in the whole community, with three other colored persons, took refuge, during the rain accompanied by a good deal of lightning and thunder, in a tobacco barn on the land of Mr. Geo. Creasey.

"From their several positions one would have thought that two of the others were in more, and the third in as much danger as Jones and Brown were. They, as their custom was, were engaged in cursing and swearing. Suddenly the lightning descended upon them, and while the other three were comparatively uninjured, Jones was killed and Brown was stricken down senseless and almost lifeless for a time. He revived after a few minutes, and soon seemed to have regained all of his strength, but was dumb and bereft of his mind for several hours. The lightning had set fire to his clothing, and he was burned on his chest and left side and arm before the fire was extinguished. In his maniac efforts to free himself from those who were restraining him the skin was rubbed from the burned flesh and presented the following characters, GOD. Very close representation, to say the least of them, of the capital letters used in printing the name of Deity, while around and between them the skin was unremoved, and apparently not burned. The above characters occupied the angles of an equilateral triangle, which, as you are doubtless aware, was in ancient days the symbol of Deity. This man then appears to have been branded with the name of his Creator in the symbolic language, it may be of his forefathers three thousand years ago, and in the printed language of the nation to which he belongs."—Lynchburg News.

Our Indian Enemies.

The entire Indian population of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, is estimated at 295,084. The numbers seem small, but the extent and remoteness of the territory they occupy, its capabilities for Indian warfare and the natural instincts of the savages therefor, render those who take the field formidable quite out of proportion to their numerical strength, as we have always found from King Philip's day down to the present. With regard to the contest now on the Government's hands, involving the hostile Sioux and their allies, we find in one of the late reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the location of the different agencies given, with the number and condition of the Indians on each reservation, substantially as follows:

In Dakota, Montana and Wyoming there are nearly 70,000, divided as follows:

DAKOTA AGENCIES.	Men.	Women.	Total.
Sisseton Agency (Sioux)	861	583	1,834
Devil's Lake (Sioux)	434	596	1,030
Grand River (Sioux)	....	....	6,269
Cheyenne River (Sioux)	....	....	6,000
Upper Missouri (Sioux)	1,600	1,395	2,995
Fort Berthold (Gros Ventres, Mandan and Arickarees)	901	1,262	2,103
Yankton (Sioux)	....	....	1,947
Ponca	383	355	738
Whetstone (Sioux)	2,350	2,650	5,000
Flandreau special (Sioux)	....	....	100
MONTANA.
Blackfeet Agency (Blackfeet, Bloods and Piegans)			7,500
Milk River Agency (Sioux)			10,625
At other agencies and wandering			14,000
WYOMING.
Red Cloud Agency (Sioux and Cheyenne)			9,177
Total number in hostile country			68,008

According to the estimates given by the same report, about 60 per cent. are women; this gives about 27,000 Indian warriors within this territory, which, considering the number of bands that have never settled at any of the reservations, is a low estimate of their strength. According to the same calculation, the Sioux and Cheyennes, now openly at war, would be able to bring nearly 22,000 men in the field. From all accounts received from the seat of war, one fact seems clear, and it is that the estimate made as to the number of Indians actually on the war-path and operating against the troops is below the real number.

The Fenians are once more about to drive out the ruthless invader from the gem of the say.

The Mortgage.

I've been sitting by the west window,
And thinking the livelong day,
Of the mortgage foreclosed to-morrow
When my home's to be taken away.

'Twill be just three years to-morrow,
How well I remember that day,
When my husband went out to borrow
And mortgaged our homestead away.

How little he then thought the future
Would leave us no friends or a home,
Or that we'd be driven abroad
And left in the wide world to roam.

But life is made up of changes,
And soon the great change will come,
When I shall find rest with my Saviour,
Nevermore in the wide world to roam.

Ah! then there will be no mortgage,
No house to be taken away,
But I shall dwell in a mansion,
A house that's ne'er made up of clay.

Around the Farm.

Sunflower leaves are good for forage, green or dry; the seed for oil, horses, hogs and chickens.

Bless the seedsmen, but don't buy "novelties" for market; it takes too long to learn people the new names.—Conn. Courant.

Mr. T. C. Henry, the Kansas wheat king, figures it out and says a man can take raw prairie land, hire it broken and sown to wheat, and with an average yield realize a profit of 156 per cent. on his investment.

Before the butter is gathered, and while in lumps about the size of wheat or buckwheat kernels, draw off or strain out the buttermilk, and thoroughly wash the butter with clear, cold water at about 55 degrees, but do not pack the butter together. Then sprinkle on and carefully stir in, stil avoiding packing, about one ounce of salt to each pound of butter. Set the butter away in a sweet, cool place, not above 60 degrees, nor below 55 degrees, until the next day, when it is ready to work and pack for market.

Two new and distinct breeds of sheep have lately been introduced into England from the west coast of South America. The first are two fine, white-wooled sheep, each having four long massive horns, two of which have a forward curve over the head, while the other two curve downward under the eyes, giving the head a singular appearance. Of the second, which are said to be a species between the llama and alpaca, there are three, one male and two females, which are thickly covered with long dark brown, but exceptionally fine hair, or wool, which is highly prized by the native Indians for the manufacture of their more delicate fabrics. The male stands about three feet high at the shoulder.

George R. Drew, a Vermont farmer, had the following to say at a farmers' festival: "Farming can be made more pleasant by making a business of it, and not attending to too many other things at the same time. And then by not overworking. I think there has been improvement in this respect, but there is need of more still. I have said I would not take the gift of a farm and be obliged to work as I did when a boy. I now see the policy of giving children and young folks a great deal of recreation. I am sure that more work can be done in a long run by working ten hours a day than by being actively engaged for fourteen hours. Also, we should not be too much confined at home; we should go away occasionally, and many times we might gain enough to make up for our lost time."

At a recent meeting of the alumnus club of the Agricultural college, Prof. Gulley spoke of the management of hired help. He said there are two requisites: first, you need the right kind of men as managers, and secondly you need the right kind of employes. Some men always have trouble with their help, while others get along well with everybody. In general, the nearer help approaches to a mere machine, it is practically the most valuable. Educated help would be better, provided they would be content to do their work well for the wages paid. He gave a detailed description of the management of the help on his farm at Dearborn, and also of the way in which Ferry's seed farm is managed. Prof. Gulley boarded his hands and worked them from daylight to dark, giving them one hour for nooning. He allowed them no responsibility, but gave them directions for doing everything.—Michigan paper.

Rams at a certain season of the year develop combative propensities, and their fights frequently terminate fatally. A correspondent of the Ohio Farmer has hit on a novel method of preventing a display of their rude butting warfare. He says: "It is well known that they always 'back up' to get a start to butt. Stop their backing up and you disconcert them entirely. To do this, take a light stick (a piece of broom-handle will do), about two or two and a half feet long. Sharpen one end, and lash the other end securely to his tail; the sharpened end will then draw harmlessly on the ground behind as long as his majesty goes straight ahead about his business; but on the attempt to "back up" he is astonished to find an effectual brake in the rear. Don't laugh and call this 'all gammon,' but if you have a butting ram, try it, and the time to laugh will be when you see him jump out sideways, and whirl round and round, trying to upset the machine, which will keep behind him."

About the House.

A lady correspondent of the Germantown Telegraph says that few people know that pieces of horse-radish, with a small bag of allspice, added to the vinegar of pickles improves their flavor and prevents mold.

Tomato Omelet.—Tomatoes, ripe, peeled, sliced and thickened with bread crumbs, and seasoned with salt, pepper, chopped parsley, sugar and butter. To every pint of this mixture add one beaten egg. Sprinkle bread crumbs over the top; bake forty minutes in a vegetable dish. This is a nice dish for dinner.

One of the most frequent causes of leaky roofs is the forming of an ice-dam, beginning at the gutter and gradually backing up till the water flows through under slates or shingles. A simple way of preventing this is to detach the gutters an an inch or two from the eaves and hang them on iron stirrups, or otherwise, so that the water can flow freely over the backs as well as the fronts.

Pickled Eggs—A Relish.—Boil the eggs twelve minutes, throw at once into cold water, which will cause the shell to come off easily. Boil some red beets till very soft, peel and mash them finely and put into cold vinegar, enough to cover the eggs. Add salt, pepper, cloves and nutmeg. Put the eggs into a jar and pour the mixture over them. In two days they will be a beautiful color, and a very palatable as well as ornamental dish for the dinner table.

It is necessary for us to bathe often and thoroughly during warm weather in order to be clean; but this is not the only good that comes from the bath, even to healthy persons. After seven days labor, either mental or physical, after a person is so tired and nervous as to be in no condititition even to rest, and long hours of the night pass slowly away with no tendency to sleep, nothing is better for this condition than a bath in tepid water. There is something restful about it, and the weary frame is refreshed, the nerves quieted, and sleep soon comes sure and sweet. A simple bathing of the spine, with gentle rubbing, will quiet the over-tired so that the normal resting condition—sleep—soon comes on.

Fish-balls.—Two cupfuls of cold-boiled cod, fresh or salted; one cupful of mashed potatoes; half a cup of melted butter, with an egg beaten in. Season to taste. Chop the fish when you have freed it from bones and skin; work in the potato and moisten with the melted butter until it is soft enough to mould, and will keep in shape; roll the balls in flour and fry quickly to a golden brown, in lard or clean dripping. Take from the fat so soon as they are done; lay on a colander or seive and shake gently to free from every drop of grease; turn out for a few moments on clean paper to absorb any lingering drops, and serve on a hot dish.

Useful Recipes.

One of our patrons sends us a recipe for a liniment which is easily prepared and should be kept in every farmer's house or barn, to be used in case of bruises or sprains: Diluted alcohol, seven ounces; oil wormwood, one-half ounce; oil hemlock, one-half ounce.

Gutta-Percha Cement for Fastening Leather.—Dissolve a quantity of gutta-percha in chloroform, in quantity to make a fluid of honey-like consistence. When spread, it will dry in a few moments. Heat the surface, at a fire or gas flame until softened, and apply them together. Small patches of leather can be thus cemented on boots, etc., so as to almost defy detection, and some shoemakers employ it with great success for this purpose. It is waterproof, and will answer almost anywhere, unless exposed to heat, which softens it.

How to Cure a Bone Felon.—Of all painful things, can there be any so excruciatingly painful as a bone felon? We know of none that flesh is heir to, and, as this malady is quite frequent and the subject of much earnest consideration, we give the latest recipe for its cure, which is given by that high authority, the London Lancet: "As soon as the pulsation which indicates the disease is felt, put directly over the spot a fly blister, about the size of your thumb nail, and let it remain for six hours, at the expiration of which time, directly under the surface of the blister, may be seen the felon, which can be instantly taken out with the point of a needle or lancet."

Sick Headache.—This distressing complaint can generally be relieved by soaking the feet in very warm water, in which a spoonful of powdered mustard has been stirred. Soak as long as possible, or till the water gets cool; it draws the blood from the head. Another quieting remedy is to scald sour milk till it wheys off; make a bag of thin muslin, and strain it off, not very dry, and put the curd, in the bag, upon the head, as warm as it can be borne; it will relieve the pain in a few moments. Some such simple remedies are preferable to drugs or doctors' prescriptions; they relieve as quickly, and are cheaper, as well as more readily applied.

The Length of Days.

At London, England, and at Breman, Prussia, the longest day has 16½ hours.

At Stockholm, in Sweden, the longest day has 18½ hours.

At Hamburg, Germany, and at Dantzig, Prussia, the longest day has 17 hours, and the shortest 7 hours.

At St. Petersburg, in Russia, and at Tobolsk, Siberia, the longest day has 19 hours, and the shortest 5 hours.

At Tornea, in Finland, the longest day has 21½ hours, and the shortest 2½ hours.

At Wardneys, in Norway, the day lasts from May 21 to July 2, without interruption.

At New York the longest day, June 20, has 14 hours and 56 minutes; at Montreal, 15½ hours.

Wheat Harvest of the Northwest.

There are conflicting and contradictory accounts about the probabilities of the wheat harvest in the Northwestern States. Some declare that the rust and the chinch bug have committed such fearful havoc that the five States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and Nebraska, which usually raise about 120,000,000 bushels of wheat, will not raise more than 100,000,000 bushels in 1876. And neither is the quality very good, as the berry is much shrunken. But we think it will be found that the harvest is very variable; in some localities it is very bad, and in others very good.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Effects of Lightning.

A singular occurrence lately transpired in the northern part of Putnam and the southern portion of Dutchess counties, New York. After a violent thunder-storm, accompanied by an unusual amount of chain-lightning and torrents of rain, dead wild-geese were picked up by the hundred. Numbers of them had previously been observed alive in the shallow ponds in the vicinity, and they were seen to act strangely during the storm, as though they had been fired upon. The heads of the dead fowl were badly torn and in some cases their feathers were burned to a crisp and their bodies burst open.

THE CHICAGO TRAGEDY.

Killing of Hanford by Sullivan, and the Causes that Led to the Homicide.

Of the shooting and killing of Mr. Francis Hanford, Principal of the North Division School, of Chicago, by Mr. Alexander Sullivan, Secretary of the Board of Public Works of that city, the Chicago Evening Journal says:

"The trouble grew out of movements in connection with the public schools of this city, Mr. Hanford having, in a communication to a member of the Common Council, accused the wife of Mr. Sullivan (formerly Miss Maggie Buchanan, who, some years ago was a teacher in Detroit, and of late years a writer for the Chicago press in Chicago) of having conspired with Mayor Colvin and Catholic members of the Board of Education for the control of the actions and appointments of the latter board. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan, denying this accusation, proceeded to the residence of Mr. Hanford to call him to account. The parley, which took place in the street in front of Mr. Hanford's residence, resulted in the tragedy, Sullivan shooting Hanford, who died in half an hour afterward, and the murderer being locked up by the police.

"What ground Mr. Hanford had for his accusations, we do not know, and it may never be known. It matters little, as regards the merits of the shooting, whether he was right or wrong, for, conceding that he was entirely in error, his slayer was nevertheless without justification. According to Mr. Hanford, Mrs. Sullivan has been very officious in securing changes and appointments by the Board of Education in the interest of the Roman Catholic Church. This was the charge made by Mr. Hanford. He made it in a communication to Alderman Van Osdel. It was not signed, nor yet was it an anonymous letter, in the ordinary sense of the term, for the receiver knew who wrote it. It was intended simply for the personal information of the Alderman, and should not have been made public. But he laid it before the Council. The accusation did not reflect at all upon the private character of Mrs. Sullivan, which is above question. Had it done so, the case would be very different. She is a lady of high culture, fine literary powers and irreproachable reputation. It is generally allowed that a husband may vindicate a wife's virtue at any cost; but no one can claim that the statement in question was at all derogatory to her moral standing.

"Mr. Sullivan, like his wife, is quite well known and universally respected. None who know his uniform gentleness of deportment in official or private life can realize that he could be guilty of deliberate murder. Yet it looks as if he went to Hanford's house with blood in his heart and death in his purpose. Certain it is that the shot was fired under circumstances necessitating the inference that it was with malice aforethought."

Death of the Tongueless Woman.

Mrs. Mary C. Burnham, whose misfortune of losing her tongue attracted so much attention two years ago, died in Rootstown, Friday, July 28, 1876. Mrs. Burnham had been afflicted for about twenty years with a bronchial or throat difficulty. Her tongue became paralyzed, and she gradually lost the use of this member. During this time her health was generally good. On Tuesday, January 25, 1874, she had a spell of bleeding of the tongue and throat in the forenoon. While at dinner, being, to all appearances, choked with a piece of meat, with an effort to expel it her tongue fell out of her mouth. A council of physicians was held, at which it was disclosed that under her tongue there was a cancer, which, enlarging, had destroyed that member, as above stated. Soon after this decision a new theory was developed, some of these medical men denying that there was a cancroid condition of the tongue and throat. They asserted that the tongue had been destroyed by catarrh, which had severed the nervous connection of the tongue and throat, paralyzing the tongue, which was followed by the natural decay of the connections of the tongue. The basis of this theory was the sound condition of the tongue and the apparent healing of the throat and mouth. Mrs. Burnham felt no unusual pain at the time. Strange as it may seem, Mrs. Burnham, while her tongue was paralyzed, so cultivated a control of the other organs of speech, that after her tongue was lost she was able to make herself understood by those accustomed to hear her. The singular loss of the tongue produced considerable astonishment at the time, and occasioned not a little comment. The death of Mrs. Burnham was occasioned by the same disease that destroyed her tongue. After the loss of her tongue the same disease attacked other organs, consuming vital parts; producing eventually a stroke of paralysis, after which she was unable to swallow, and literally starved to death. Mrs. Burnham was able, after the loss of her tongue, to perform her household duties as usual up to this spring, when she commenced to fail. She was confined to her bed for almost twelve weeks prior to her death.—Ravenna (O.) Democrat.

Poisoned Arrows.

The arrows by which Commodore Goodenough, of the British navy, was killed were poisoned by plunging into a human corpse for several days. This form of blood poisoning is made familiar in civilized countries by the occasional death of a medical student from inoculation by morbid virus. The least scratch is sufficient to insure death, though the poison does not develop for several days. The Papuans, who use this method for poisoning, are very warlike, and it is said that they do not leave their dwellings even to work in the fields, without taking a bamboo bow and arrows. Those arrows which are poisoned are distinguished from their more innocent fellows by being highly ornamented, carved and painted. They are barbed with human bone, sharpened as fine almost as a needle.—Chicago Field.

Real Estate in London.

The ratable value of property in the metropolitan district of London has more than doubled in twenty years. In 1856 it was £11,283,663; in 1876 it is £23,111,318. The district is divided into forty-seven parishes. In all but two of these divisions there has been an increase. The real estate in this portion of London is rated at about half its real value. A house which rents for £80 per year can be purchased for £1,600, and the like rate holds good in all other transactions in real estate.

EDUCATING THE IGNORANT.

How Society is Polished up in New York City.

The London News says: "One of the most trying of all the teachers' occupations must surely be the instruction of persons of 'mature age'—perhaps especially of ladies of mature age—'whose early education had been neglected.' Without entering in any way into the merits of a case lately tried before Lord Coleridge, we may say that the plaintiff in that case who, being a widow, was obliged to earn a living by the teaching of such persons, was entitled to be regarded with respect and sympathy. The complete system, if we may call it so—that which educates, polishes, and then puts out to advantage in society—is not carried to much success in London. It is more largely practised, we are informed, in Paris; more largely still in New York. In the latter city, people say it is a thriving and a systematic profession. There a lady of mature years, whose education has been neglected, and who has yet had time to enter the world of fashion, can have everything done for her to order, under the same guidance and direction, from her earliest lesson in writing or in French up to the providing of guests for her first dinner party or ball. A man may have suddenly made a fortune in Oil City, Penn., or Poker Flat, Cal., and he comes to New York to live and enjoy himself. He cannot send his wife to one of the ward schools, and wait in patient obscurity until she has first been educated, and then by force of merit and graces, made friends. He easily finds a kindly dame who will take her in hand, teach her enough to make her seem as if she had once learned something and forgotten it, hire a house for her and furnish it, dress her, take her out, and provide her at a proper time with a splendidly-appointed ball-room, guests included. In this case the mature lady is probably quite happy. The house, the furniture, the clothes, and the jewels are the real things; the education and the guests suit her just as well as if they were the real thing. Such instances of mutual satisfaction, however, could hardly be frequent in our slower and less shifting society here in London, and we doubt whether this system of complete social education, including the launch into society, is much of a business among us. In the more restricted sort of undertaking, that of simply teaching persons of middle life and neglected education it would be interesting if one could know the proportion of successful cases. There must be so much to unlearn that the wisdom of the new education must have to linger a long time before it will make its way in. Whoever really unlearned even a provincial accent, or an old-fashioned way of looking at things, say at 40 years? Certainly the teacher who is successful in this popular branch of education well deserves praise and pay; the teacher who is unsuccessful a lenient pity."

Untraveled Presidents.

Some of our best Presidents never got across the ocean. Washington, when a very young man, sailed as far as Barbadoes with his elder brother (or rather half-brother) Lawrence, who was in failing health. The trip was undertaken for his recovery, but was unsuccessful, and Lawrence died soon after his return. He bequeathed his estate (Mt. Vernon) to his affectionate brother, of whose subsequent greatness he little dreamed. John Adams was abroad in the service of his country, and his son (afterward President) accompanied him. Jefferson also crossed the ocean on a mission to France, but Madison never left the American shores. Monroe was abroad as the American Ambassador to Paris. Jackson, however, never took a sea voyage. His successor, Van Buren, was a traveled man, and then came Harrison and Tyler, neither of whom crossed the Atlantic. The same statement may be made of Polk and his successors, Gen. Taylor and Franklin Pierce. Buchanan was abroad, and then came Lincoln, Johnson and Grant, neither of whom ever tried the perils of the ocean.—New York Letter.

"Drowned" Persons.

A French physician makes the remarkable statement that one-half, at least, of the so-called drowned persons are buried alive, and that they may be brought to life by proper treatment after having been "several hours under water." His remedy is to get out the water, pour in and inject alcoholic stimulents, and use a whip energetically, or hot irons in bad cases. His statement has been partially confirmed by the resuscitation of a man after he had been under water in one of the Seine baths for more than twenty minutes.

A Plucky Woman.

An old lady in California refused to allow a railroad corporation to lay rails through her property. The track-layers took advantage of Sunday—a day on which she could not appeal to the courts—and put down the rails. She was outwitted but not defeated. When the locomotive came along over the branch line she took up a position on the track and would not stir. The locomotive backed out and left her at her post.

The "'76 stone house" at Tappan, which was a village tavern at the time of the capture of Maj. Andre, and in which he was imprisoned until he was hanged, is fast crumbling. The wooden piazza is so decayed as to be unsafe to step upon. The room where Andre was confined remains the same as when occupied by him.

Murad V. is a Turkish Sultan of rather a different type from those who founded the Ottoman dominion. His proclamation to his army in Bosnia winds up with the words: "Far from you, I shall yet pray for the glory of your arms."

HEAVENLY FIREWORKS.

The August Epoch of Meteors and Fire-Balls—Former Great Star Showers.

[From the New York Herald.]

The earth having now fairly entered that portion of its orbit round the sun during which it comes in contact the first time this year with meteoric showers, we may look during the next few evenings for displays in the heavens of fireworks on a magnificent scale. It is true that meteors appear in their grandest aspect and in greatest number every thirty-three years, but this law, as determined by observation of astronomers, is not unchangeable. The phenomena occur to a greater or less extent twice every year, August and November.

The origin of meteors was long without receiving a satisfactory explanation, that most generally accepted being that they were caused by the existence of inflammatory gases in the atmosphere. The ignis fatuus, no doubt, is produced in this way, for it has been found to change its motion by the slight current of air preceding a person walking toward it. But the immense velocity of the meteors that appear in August and November, which is about equal to twice that of the earth in its orbit, or thirty-six miles in a second, and the great elevation at which they become visible, the average being sixty miles, indicate clearly that they are not of terrestrial but cosmical origin—that is, they originate from the interplanetery regions, innumerable fragments of heavenly bodies that have been shattered to pieces traversing space, and, being brought within the sphere of the earth's attraction, precipitate themselves upon its surface. Moving with the great velocity mentioned through the higher regions of the air they become so intensely heated by friction that they ignite, or are at least rendered visible, and are either converted into vapor, or, when very large, explode and descend to the earth's surface as meteoric stones or aerolites. Prof. Thomson, of the British Association, says that they are "small bodies which come into the earth's atmosphere, and the instant they touch it their surfaces are heated beyond the point of fusion or even of volatilization, and the consequence is that they are speedily and completely burned down and reduced to impalpable oxides." The brilliancy and color of meteors are variable; some are as bright as Venus or Jupiter. About two-thirds are white, the remainder yellow, orange or green. The problem of their origin must be regarded as the same with that of the asteroids, revolving around the sun between the orbs of Mars and Jupiter, and of the planets themselves. Some astronomers consider their origin precisely the same as that of the comets, which may be regarded as only meteors of vast size.

The shower of 1799 was awful and sublime beyond description. It was witnessed by Humboldt at Cumana, in South America, and is thus described: "Toward the morning of the 13th of November, 1799, we witnessed a most extraordinary scene of shooting meteors. Thousands of bolides and falling stars succeeded each other during the four hours. Their direction was very regularly from north to south, and from the beginning of the phenomenon there was not a space in the firmament equal in extent to three diameters of the moon which was not filled every instant with bolides or falling stars. All the meteors left luminous traces or phosphorescent bands behind them, which lasted seven or eight seconds." The same phenomena was seen throughout nearly the whole of North America and South America and in some parts of Europe. The most splendid display of shooting stars on record was that of Nov. 13, 1833, and is especially interesting as having served to point out the periodicity in these phenomena. Over the northern portion of the American continent the spectacle was of the most imposing grandeur, and in many parts of the country the population were terror-stricken at the awfulness of the scene. The slaves of the Southern States supposed the world was on fire, and filled the air with shrieks of horror and cries for mercy. The shower of 1866 was anticipated with great interest, and in New York and other places arrangements were made to announce the occurrence during the night of Nov. 14 by ringing the bells from the fire towers. The display, however, was not witnessed in this country, but in England was quite brilliant, as many as 8,000 meteors being counted at the Greenwich Observatory. Another shower of less extent occurred in 1867, and a record has been kept at the Naval Observatory, Washington, of the number of shooting luminous bodies that appeared in the months of August and November in each year since.

Joy and Grief Hand in Hand.

About two weeks since a gentleman of this county was united in marriage with an accomplished young lady from one of the cities of the bay. The union took place on Sunday, and very early on Thursday morning the bridegroom was awakened by hearing his young bride at prayers. Suddenly her praying was changed to singing, and this was followed by loud laughter. The bride had become a raving maniac, wild and violent, requiring the strength of several persons to hold her. Her husband's grief was terrible beyond expression.—Marin (Cal.) Journal.

What a Blind Girl Did.

A blind Swiss girl, who is an adept at fine needlework, recently sent to the Emperor of Germany a table-cover exquisitely worked with her own hands, and to avoid the appearance of having sent the present in expectation of getting something in return, she omitted her address and simply signed herself, "A Blind Girl in Switzerland." The old monarch was so pleased with the gift and the manner of sending it that he caused the German Minister in Switzerland to ascertain the girl's name and address, whereupon he sent her a valuable brooch and an autograph letter of thanks.

The Yankee and the Duke.

Bayard Taylor tells of a Yankee, who, walking the streets in St. Petersburg one muddy day, met the Grand Duke Constantine. The sidewalk was not wide enough for two to pass, and the street was very deep in filth. The American took a silver rouble from his pocket, shook it in his closed hand, and cried out, "Crown or tail!" "Crown," guessed the duke. "Your Highness has won," cried the American, looking at the rouble, and stepping in the mud. The next day the Yankee was invited by the Grand Duke to dinner.

A ragged boy was, years ago, cared for by a benevolent young man in Baltimore, who has just married. The boy grew up intelligent, educated and enterprising. Mark the power of gratitude. A few days ago he eloped with his benefactor's wife.

It is given as a piece of fashionabl gossip that one person in twenty-nine a Newport gets drunk once in every twenty-four hours. This of course doesn't include those who stay drunk all the time, and so the figures are valueless as a gauge of sea-side sobriety.

Fernando Wood is reported as having said that the popular idea of the cost of living at Washington is largely erroneous. He entertains more than any other person in the city, except Secretary Fish, and his own expenses are, he says, not more than $10,000 per annum.

Boston is gradually growing accustomed to the ways of Anna Dickinson. When she thrusts her hand under her bustle, where her pistol-pocket hangs, and says with horrible calmness, "Keep away from me, sir," everybody knows that there's a dramatic critic somewhere around.

In Jefferson county, Fla., is found a black mineral which resembles graphite, but which, under the blowpipe, gives off a strong smell of petroleum. The inhabitants black their boots with this substance and claim that in susceptibility to polish it is not inferior to Day Martin's best.

The Ætna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, has introduced into its policies a clause which vitiates the contract should the policy-holder die by his own hands, "sane or insane." Any man, says the Baltimore Underwriter, who would understandingly accept such terms is a fool."

A young and very promising clergyman, in preaching one of his earliest discourses, made this remark, says the Salem Register: "The minister is sometimes called upon to preach upon unwelcome subjects, such, for instance, as depravity, the necessity of regeneration, hell, foreign missions, etc."

The Birmingham Post says the ignorance of some people as to the faith of Islam was illustrated in a most ludicrous manner at the Liverpool police court. A man was being sworn on the Koran, and the cryer of the court, in concluding the administration of the oath, said, in a most solemn manner, "So help you, Koran." The cryer afterward explained that he thought Koran was the Mohammedan name for God.

According to a Poughkeepsie newspaper published in 1806, they used to have nice times there seventy years ago. Upon the 14th of October in that year a big African lion was put in Capt. Hendrickson's large field, and six bears and twelve bull-dogs were set upon him. The admission to the scene was one dollar for grown persons and twenty-five cents for children. The lion destroyed the bears and the bull-dogs.

A youth in Tennessee contributes the following beautiful lines to a local paper:

Wonder why it should be,
In this gay world, one so lovely should,
Lonely hours, and earnestly wish,
Down in the "lonesome grave" to be laid for bliss.
From all such unpleasantness,
Loved one, I sincerely trust the goodness
Of the Supreme One will ever cause thy stay;
Waft far from thee, each day I pray, He may.
Every thought and feeling, that might Render thee so unhappy as to desire to be laid out of sight.

A farmer residing in Beverly, Canada, has discovered a new method of getting rid of his grasshoppers. He keeps fifteen pigs, and during the summer months they live on nothing but grasshoppers. He keeps two of the summer litter over till the next spring to teach the young brood. Last summer, for seven weeks, his pigs lived on the grasshoppers, and came out fat and ready for fall-feeding on grain.

At a meeting of the London Aeronautical Society, several schemes were propounded for the construction of flying machines, and one gentleman, who expressed an opinion that balloon sailing was a game not worth the candle, announced that he had in preparation a machine to be worked by a thirty-horse power steam engine, which would travel through the air at a rate of 200 miles an hour as safely as a railway train.

A MAN OF PARTS!

A Few of the Stories That Will be Told Before the Canvass is Over.

"What do you think of the ticket?" asked Mr. Magruder, in the boarding-house, last night.

"Tolerable," said Mr. Magumn, "tolerable. Down in the custom-house this morning, I saw a clerk behind the counter trying to stave off a lot of fellows who wanted to get their invoices verified. I asked him what he thought of it, and he stopped work at once."

"Think of it?" he said. "It's a blazer. It'll draw like a house on fire."

"Think Governor Hayes will be a Reformer?"

"Reformer! I don't know anything about that, but just look at his war record. I was in a regiment that served under Hayes at Shiloh. The Governor was a brandishin' his sword and urgin the boys on, when along come a bullet and knocked of his right arm. He just shifted his sword to his left hand, had a tournaquet put on the stump of his right arm, and then plunged into the fight again. Good ticket? I should say so!"

Over in the Appraiser's office I found the enterprising young man that used to put the figures in Charley Lawrence's invoices. I asked him how he liked the ticket.

"Like it? It's a roarer."

"Believe the Governor will go in for reform?"

"I don't know what he'll go in for; but you will cast your eye on his war record? I was in a rigiment under him at Antietam. The Governor was brandishin' his sword and shoutin' to the boys to git in, when along came a bullet and snaked off his left arm. He just shiffted the sword over to his right hand had a tasty tourniquet put on the stump of his left arm, and then bolted into the fight again. Draw? He'll draw like a blast furnace!"

Happening in at the post office, I asked one of the boys who were 'rastlin' the mails, how the ticket struck him.

"It'll sweep the country!"

"Do you suppose Hayes will reform the goverment?"

"Hey? I didn't catch that;" and the young man put his hand up to his ear. I repeat the question

"Oh, yes, reform. Well, now, I realy can't say whether he be a reformer or not; but will you just let your eyes rest on his war record for a moment? I was in a regiment that served under him at Gettysburg. The Governor was brandishin' his sword and hollerin' to the boys to let themselves loose, when along come a bullet and carried away his right leg. The Governor stopped just long enough to have his leg coopered up and then he drove into battle again. Good ticket? The country was crying for it."

Then I dropped in at one of the United States court rooms, up stairs, and asked one of the officials what he thought of the ticket.

"A boon of the country, sir: a sweet boon!"

"Think he'll root out the corruption that defiles the service?"

"Just how much rooting he'll do, I am unable to state; but may I invite you to consider for a moment his war record? I was in a regiment that served under Hayes in the wilderness. The Governor was brandishin' up his sword and callin' on the boys to rush forward, when along comes a bullet and lopped off his left leg Governor did not even get off of his horse. He just tied a waist belt around the leg and went ahead again. Will the people vote for him? My friend, they'll have to enlarge the ballot boxes."

In a room across the hall, met a United States Marshal making out bills for extra charges. I asked him about the ticket.

"Magnificent," he roared "magnificent."

"Think the governor is likely to reform the administration?"

"Now, really, I hadn't given the reform question much consideration; but let me ask you to look at his war record I was in a regiment that served under him at Cold Harbor. The Governor was brandishin' his sword and whoopin' the boys forward, when along come a shell and struck him square in the breast. It busted outside of him and tore him into fine hash. We raised him into a rubber blanket and were carrying him to the bivouac of the dead, but the Governor wouldn't have it. He jumped out of the blanket and sprung on his horse and went forward, brandishin' his sword Will he be elected? Just wait and see!

"Anatomically speaking, Mr. Magruder, the Governor is or was a man of parts; much so; but I don't believe they can get him together in time for election."

The Republican Senate has distinguished itself for reform by restoring the franking privilege. It provides that it shall be lawful to transmit through the mails free of postage, letters, packages, or other matter relating exclusively to the business of the government of the United States; and also that senators, representatives, and delegates in congress, the secretary of the senate, and the clerk of the house of representatives may send and receive through the mail, free of postage, letters and documents. This restores the old abuses in all their baldness. But it remains to be seen whether the house is ready to stultify its record by passing the bill.

All Goods Retailed at Wholesale Prices

This is the Only Secret of Our Immense Trade.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. The importer has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and wholesale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prunes, Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these intermediate profits. No middlemen with us. We are having a great run on Prunes. The Finest

FARMERS, READ

WHAT THE

New York Times

SAID OF

Governor Tilden!

The "New York Times" which is playing the same disreputable role in the east that "The Tribune plays here, is just now making itself the conduit of all the whimsical abuse which the partisans to put upon Tilden in the way of slumgullion abuse, while rational argument is entirely remitted. From the files of the "New York Times" the friends of Tilden are resurrecting tributes to his character, fitness, and integrity which show the man in a better aspect than those who have gone reluctantly to his support were aware of before. Tilden's support from "The Times and other independents arises solely from the conviction that there is a better prospect of a reform under his vigorous administration than under the amiable complaisance of Hays. But the tributes which "The New York Times" pays him go to show that other reasons exist for his support. From the testimony of "The Times" he is an independent man, detested by the common class of politicians, and capable of turning from them in the path of a well-considered duty. In August, 1871 when Tilden was pushing tweed to the wall, the "Times," which now reviles, said:

"There were a few indignant protests against the scheme [Tweed's charter for New York city] uttered by such high-toned democrats as Samuel J. Tilden and others of his character, but they were without effect, for Tweed and Sweeny had the voters already bought up."

This was before the Tweed regime began to tumble, and the testimony of the "Times" goes to show that Tilden was the first to confront the swollen power of the great forerunner of Belknap and Robeson. In October of the same year 1871, "The Times" testified further:

"If anything can arouse the New York public to that pitch of indignation which alone become them in the present crisis, it is the accounts which we publish to-day. Here we have, thanks to the labors of Mr. Samuel J. Tilden, full and conclusive evidence that William M Tweed differs only from a common thief in having stolen tens of thousands instead of tens of dollars. * * * We refer to the affiavit of Mr. Tilden for a detailed account of how the disposal of the money was traced."

Yet, now, to hoodwink the voters the same paper affects to doubt Tilden's conduct and even speaks of him as the friend to and of Tweed A month later "The Times" bore this strong testimony to the character and independent honesty of Tilden:

"The voters of the Eighteenth assembly district ought to esteem it an honor and a privilege to elect Samuel J. Tilden to the legislature. He has shown himself a gallant, conscientious, efficient foe to corruption. We appeal to every republican to vote and work for him, and to do so the more cheerfully—as we make this appeal—because he is an honest democrat."

In November, 1871, Tilden was an honest democrat whom to elect would be an honor and privilege to the republicans! "He has," said "The Times, "always shown himself a gallant, "conscientious, efficient foe to corruption," In 1871, mark, Tilden had shown himself a gallant, conscientious foe to corruption at a time when the power of his party was lodged in other hands. That is testimony of real value to the masses who have been repelled from Tilden by the honor of supporting a party behind him. If he was bold, resolute, and aggressive enough to fight such a colossal power as Tweed, it can not be possible that he would succumb at this late day supported as he is by a great following independent of party. If he were independent and resolute enough to select that eminent republican publicist, John Biglow, whom Lincoln sent to France to represent his administration, he certainly would not be restrained from broadening this wise policy of non-partisan selection in the more enlarged sphere to which he seems morally certain to be called.

These preceding testimonies of the chief journalistic maligner of Mr. Tilden were published from 1870 to 1873.—In 1874, before the state nominations, "The Times" bore this conclusive witness to the irreproachable character of this extraordinary man, when his candidacy for governorship was only mooted:

"Mr. Tilden would make a very good candidate, for he is a gentleman, able man, and a man of very high character. Mr. Tilden is not much liked by the less reputable portion of the democratic party, and perhaps there are men even in Tammany hall who do not exactly love him. * * * He is at any rate a Democrat of long standing in the party; a man of unsullied honor, public and private; a good, public spirited man, who would be no discredit but much the reverse, to our state. This we may say with perfect sincerity. Nevertheless, if Mr. Tilden was to ask us, as his old friends and advisers, whether he should stand for governor if he were invited to do so, we should feel it our duty to dissuade him from that course. We should like much to see him happy, but would it render him so, to undergo a signal defeat? If the Republicans nominate Gen. Dix, Mr. Tilden could not run successfully against him. Incidentally he would do his party a great deal of good, for he would improve its moral tone."

So soon as nominated, the same journal reiterated the testimony and made a vigorous fight against him. He was elected by 53,000 majority, against the most popular democratic-republican in New York, Gen. Dix. The day of his election the Times prophesied his nomination for the presidency, and declared him unassailable and bound to win. Yet at present, grotesque as it may seem, this very same journal, which is on record, week after week, filled with unmeasured laudation of the admirable character of the man and his yeoman services in the expulsion of Tweed, serves as the fountain-head of the amusing missdeeds charged upon the eminent reformer. It is a suggestive spectacle. How must the regular readers of such a sheet regard it? For the things that were said of Tilden in the past were not haphazard utterances of journalistic free lances,—it was in pursuance of a well matured policy. Frequently before nominations a journal deeply interested in the selection of a candidate will deepen the shades and broad the defects in an adversary, but there was nothing of this sort in the Tilden testimonies which the Times day in and day out for years put on record against its mad defamation of to-day. Doubtless Tilden is not so perfect a man as the early utterance of the journal in question urges, but it is equally fair to infer that he is not the mingled pirate, purjurer, and law-breaker that the present rathful declamation of the same sheet seeks to prove. Unless there is a better reason than Tilden's personal unfitness shown, the organs might just as well throw up the fight,—on personal fitness, Tilden will win.

The wether is getting cool and the days lessening fast, and ere a little longer the Republican party will see its last.

The people are crying for a change in governmental affairs. They want less taxes and more money in circulation, less stealing and more honesty. The election of Tilden will bring about these results.

TESTIMONY OF KILPATRICK.

BLOODY SHIRT & MONEY

AND INDIANA IS SAFE!

HONEST MEN READ!

We copy the following from the Indianapolis Sentinel;

On yesterday General Kilpatric, at present itinerating the State in the carmine interests of Morton, Harison & Co. left in the reading-room of the Grand Hotel, a letter addressed to Gov. Hayes, of Ohio, in which Kilpatrick furnishes Gov. Hayes with what he terms "reliable information" of the condition of the canvass in this State. We below give our readers the text of Gen. Kilpatrick's mournful story, adding that its genuineness is incontestable, and it will be in vain that the Republican press may seek to deny it.

GRAND HOTEL,
INDIANAPOLIS, August 21, 1876.

DEAR SIR: I have now finished a tour of six counties in Indiana, and feeling that my reliable information from this State will interest you, I write:

In the first place the canvass is well conducted, the people are enthusiastic and determined, and the OLD WAR SPIRIT thoroughly aroused, and if it were not for one thing we could rest certain of victory in October. There is an Independent party in this State, confined, it is true, to a few counties, but formidable, AND IT WILL DEFEAT GEN. HARRISON. There is but one way to overcome this movement. The leaders of the Independents are poor, needy and in debt. They must be lectured to; documents be placed in their hands that they may be convinced of their folly.

A BLOODY SHIRT CAMPAIGN WITH MONEY, AND INDIANA IS SAFE! A FINANCIAL CAMPAIGN AND NO MONEY, AND WE ARE BEATON.

The National Committee has done nothing for Indiana. Alone they are fighting this battle, and bravely; but unless the National Committee wakes up and does its duty to you, to the party and the country, DEFEAT IS CERTAIN IN OCTOBER.

I never in all my life felt so certain that I was doing my duty as in this contest, and my desire for success, my dear sir, is my only excuse for writing you.

Your friend, J. KILPATRICK.

To R. B. Hayes, Governor, &c.

COMMENTS OF THE "SENTINEL."

The letter which we publish this morning from Gen. J. Kilpatrick, the distinguished Republican orator, sent out by the Republican National Committee to this State from New York, to Gov. Hayes, the Republican candidate for the Presidency, is a document so characteristic, and so clearly developes the rottonness of the Republican party, that its publication to the world is deemed a plain duty that no patriotic citizen should shrink from. It developes several facts disgraceful in the extreme to the leaders of the party, Gov. Hayes included.

Gen. Kilpatrick's letter to Gov. Hayes shows that the Radical power in this State is already defeated, and the effort is to be made to defraud the will of the people by corrupt means,

It shows the estimation in which the greenback men are held by the Republican party, "poor bankrupt set," that can be bought with money and changed by lying Republican documents.

It shows that Gov. Hayes, the spotless incorruptible statesman, who is the candidate of the Republican party, can be approached in a familiar way with corrupt propositions.

It shows that Gen. Harrison is to secure an election by the use of money. Gen. Kilpatrick is one of the leaders of the ring, and is constrained to tell Hayes how the Republican National Committee, in not furnishing money, is neglecting the opportunity to carry the State.

It shows that the lowest political debauchery is to be used to carry the State of Indiana for Harrison. Gen. Kilpatrick has been in close communion with the Central Committee here. He is working at their bidding, and, according to the Journal, he is doing effective work. The Journal, on his arrival in the city, gave him the fullest endorsement. He therefore represents the views of the party.

The letter further shows that two of the basest means used by the Republicans in carrying the elections, the bloody shirt and money, are the only means that can now save the State. The bloody shirt argument has been used effectually by Gen. Kilpatrick, and his friends say that he is accomplishing wonders, as witness the following from the Journal:

Ladies, citizens and the General's old comrade vied with each other in giving him a patriot's welcome. To describe the General's speech would be a useless task; it must be heard to be appreciated. It will be sufficient to say that it was one of the most effective, eloquent campaign speeches ever delivered in this town, and has done us great good. It has aroused again the old spirit of '64 and '68. Such cheers as went up from the vast audience for Harrison and Hayes and Kilpatrick, as the gallant soldier and brilliant orator sat down, were never heard before in Bedford.

But Gen. Kilpatrick turns away mournfully from the ovation, and reports from here as headquarters to Hayes himself, after seeing the Central Committee, that war speeches alone will not do, but that "bloody shirt and money" would do this work. War speeches for Democrat soldiers, we presume, and money to purchase the "poor bankrupt greenbackers."

Citizens of Indiana, voters of the proud old Hoosier State, can the corrupt means be used by the radical party by you to support a man who is acknowledged to be defeated? Can you give your support to a presidential candidate who can be familiarly addressed by his friends with such propositions? Independents of Indiana, you who have been battling against the money power are you willing for the Republican ringmasters to buy your leaders and sell your "poverty" for so much?

If anything more insulting has ever been conceived in the management of a political party we have yet to see it. This letter places Gov. Hayes in a new light; it snatches away that spotless robe in which his friends have clothed him, and places him at once on the level of the low political ring that has made General Geant's administration a stench and a by-word of reproach. It presents Gen. Harrison in a new light as a candidate for a place to be bought with money. It places the Radical party in the disgraceful position of wailing supplicants, begging for meney to help out their bloody shirt policy. It ought to deteat and politically damn the whole crew. Let the people read and ponder.

Indiana State Fair and Exposition.

For this year of the great Centennial Exposition, the managers of the Indiana State Fair and Exposition have deemed it advisable that a Fair proper be held during the first week of the Exposition instead of the last as headtofore. It is believed that this arrangement will prove to be generally satisfactory to exhibitors and visitors.

The number of entries and applications for space, stalls, &c., at this early day, is indicative of the usual grand display, and clearly shows the interest felt in these "annual reunions" that have so greatly aided in the advancement of the various industries of the country; and, notwithstanding the general depression in business, the people, encouraged by most bounteous crops, begin to feel relief, and take hope that there is a better day coming, and will take this occasion to rejoice thereat.

The railroads, with their accustomed liberality, will transport passengers and articles for exhibition at reduced rates; and the managers will leave nothing undone to make the Fair and Exposition a complete success.

Glass jars of a beautiful pattern have been provided, in which to exhibit and preserve grain, and seeds, and it is expected that, throughout the Agricultural Department, there will be a magnificent show. Indeed the indications are that the show in all departments will be unusually fine.

Let everybody attend the State Fair and Exhibition this centennial year.

Premiun lists furnished on application.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 31, 1876.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

Four boys were drowned in the North river, opposite New York, a few days ago, the boats in which they were rowing being run down by steamboats....Four colored persons who were attending camp meeting at Red Bank, N. J., were drowned by the overturning of their boat in the Shrewsbury river, last week.

THE WEST.

Advices from the seat of war in the Indian country report that Terry and Crook effected a junction on the 10th of August. They united their commands and started on an Indian trail in the direction of Powder river. The Fifth infantry was detached from Terry's column and ordered back to the stockade with instructions to take 40,000 rations and embark on the steamer Far West and patrol the Yellowstone river as far as the mouth of Powder river, and ascertain whether or not the Indians had succeeded in crossing the Yellowstone. If not, to use his force to prevent, while Terry and Crook would come down on them with their combined forces and force a general battle. It was not positively known whether they were on the Tongue or Powder rivers....Well-armed Indians recently ran off a herd of 400 beef cattle from the Black Hills, killing all but one. A large number of horses have also been run off. The boys killed an Indian, and his head, preserved in alcohol, will be sent to Washington when an opportunity presents. There are now about 7,000 white people in the Hill country.

The yacht Sylvia, with six young men aboard, while en route from Milwaukee to Chicago, last week, to take part in the regatta, was overtaken by a squall and capsized, and two of the crew perished.

James Bowman, register clerk in the San Francisco postoffice, and former member of the California Legislature, has been arrested for robbing the mails. His depredations extend over a period of several years....Ex-Mayor John A. Harris, of Cleveland, is dead. He was for many years proprietor and publisher of the Cleveland Herald....A Cheyenne dispatch says that "all but twenty-seven of the Utes who left Fort Fetterman, after having been feasted and armed, and having indulged in numerous war-dances, deserted at Cheyenne river on Friday last, taking with them the arms which were furnished them to fight the Sioux with."

A reporter for a Chicago journal called at Military Headquarters in that city, the other day, and made inquiries of Gen. Drum, Gen. Sheridan's Chief of Staff, as to the probable future movements of the troops now in the Indian country, in view of the fact that it has been pretty definitely settled that the hostile savages have broken up into small bands and do not intend to give the troops battle. Gen. Drum assured the reporter that it was the intention of the commander of the department to continue the fight through the winter. There is to be no let up, and wherever a band of savages can be struck they will be hit—hard, too. None of the ground occupied is to be relinquished. Material for barracks is to be at once forwarded, and shelters will be erected on Tongue river and Goose creek. Here the army will remain during the winter, doing whatever they can toward trouncing Sitting Bull and his followers, and will be on the ground in the spring, if necessary, to complete the job.

The following order has been sent to nearly all the Indian agencies by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: "You are advised that all sales of arms or ammunition to either whites or Indians by parties holding licenses as Indian traders issued by this office must be stopped instantly. You will so notify your traders, and will be vigilant in seeing that no violation of this order is allowed. If an instance of such violation occurs, you will revoke the license of the offending party, and report the case to this office for further action."

Advices from Bismarck to Aug. 24 furnish the following items of frontier news: A white scout named Burke has arrived from the mouth of the Rosebud with dispatches. Gens. Crook and Terry, after making a juncture and following up the main Indian trail, left their wagons, tents, etc., took thirty-seven companies of cavalry and eight of infantry, and were making forced marches, expecting to overtake the Indians before the reached the Yellowstone river. Night before last a large war party of Sioux appeared on the opposite bank of the river from Berthold agency and demanded supplies. Upon being refused they opened a fire, which lasted about fifteen minutes. They then withdrew and struck south toward Fort Lincoln. A large party of Black Hillers, which left Bismarck a few days ago for the Hills, and which has been unable to break its camp, four miles from Lincoln, owing to heavy rains, was attacked Sunday night, and lost seven horses....The question of separating the city of St. Louis from the county of that name has been defeated by a vote of the people.

THE SOUTH.

A bold robbery is reported from Dallas, Texas. Two highwaymen rode into the city, about noon, proceeded to the State Savings Bank, dismounted, entered the bank, jumped over the counter, and attacked E. H. Gruber, the President of the institution. Felling him to the floor by a blow on the head with a navy six-shooter, they helped themselves to what money they could find. When the alarm was raised they ran into a back alley, where their horses were hitched, and rode off south....Willis Jones was killed near Holly Springs, Miss., last week, by Marsh Walker, colored. They, being leaders of base ball clubs, disputed about the right of their respective clubs to a certain field. Walker struck Jones over the head with a bat, killing him instantly, and then fled.

A serious accident occurred to a south-bound passenger train on the New Orleans and Jackson railroad, eight miles south of Jackson, Miss., a few nights ago. A bridge gave way, making a complete wreck of the train. Four persons were killed and sixteen wounded—five or six seriously.

WASHINGTON.

During the session of Congress just closed there were introduced in the House of Representatives 4,105 bills and 164 joint resolutions, and in the Senate 1,045 bills and 25 joint resolutions, making a total of 5,150 bills and 189 joint resolutions. Of this number about 140 public acts, 130 private acts, 13 public joint resolutions, and 5 private resolutions have become laws....The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has given permission to Gen. Sheridan to raise 1,000 Pawnee scouts for the Sioux war....The Secretary of the Interior has appointed the following gentlemen as a Commission to treat with the Sioux, as provided for in the Indian Appropriation bill passed by Congress at the last session: H. C. Bulis, Iowa; George W. Manypenny, Ohio; A. G. Boone, Colorado; N[illegible] Edmunds, Dakota; Bishop H. B. Whipple, Minnesota; A. S. Gaylord, Michigan.

The President has made the following public announcement of the death of Speaker Kerr:

> It is with extreme pain that the President announces to the people of the United States the death of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Hon. Michael C. Kerr, of Indiana. A man of great intellectual endowments, large culture, great probity and earnestness in his devotion to the public interests, has passed from the position of power and usefulness to which he had been recently called. The body over which he had been selected to preside not being in session to render its tribute of affection and respect to the memory of the deceased, the President invites the people of the United States to a solemn recognition of the public and private worth and the services of a pure and eminent character.
> (Signed) U. S. GRANT.

A Washington dispatch states that the instructions to the Sioux Commission appointed under the present act of Congress are nearly completed. One of the most important subjects of the negotiation is that represented by the fifth clause of the instructions, and the President is strongly impressed with the belief that the agreement which shall be most calculated to enable the Indians to become self-supporting is one which shall provide for their removal at as early a day as possible to the Indian Territory. If, however, they decline to agree to such removal, they should be informed that they will be obliged to go to the Missouri river to receive such supplies as shall be provided under any future act of Congress and treaties with them now in force.

The Secretary of the Treasury has concluded the contract for the sale of $300,000,000 4½ per cent. bonds to be issued under the funding acts of 1870 and 1871, and due in 1891. The combination unites the three parties who have been competing for the loan. The amount taken by each firm is $40,000,000 at par and interest, less ¼ per cent. commission, out of which all expenses are to be defrayed, including the preparation and delivery of the bonds....Emory Storrs, of Chicago, has been retained to defend Gen. Babcock in the approaching trial for complicity in the safe-burglary conspiracy.

POLITICAL.

A Washington dispatch states that the President, at the instance of the Republican Congressmen of Mississippi, made an extensive change of Federal officers in that State, including the Marshal for the Southern district and the principal postmasters.

The Kansas Democrats have nominated John Martin, of Topeka, for Governor....The Republican State convention of New York met at Saratoga, last week, and nominated the following ticket: Governor, E. D. Morgan; Lieutenant Governor, Sherman M. Rodgers; Judge of the Court of Appeals, George A. Danforth; Canal Commissioner, Daniel C. Spencer; State Prison Inspector, Charles T. Trobridge; Electors at Large, Abraham X. Parker and Wm. H. Seward.

Hon. G. A. Finkelnburg has withdrawn his declination of the Republican nomination for Governor of Missouri, and consented to make the race....The Republicans of Tennessee, at their State convention at Nashville, last week, resolved to make no nomination for Governor....Hon. Frank Hurd has been renominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Toledo (Ohio) district....The Prohibition party of Connecticut have nominated the following State ticket: Governor, Joseph Cummings, D. D., late President of the Wesleyan University; Lieutenant Governor, —— Rogers; Secretary of State, R. P. Cowles; Comptroller, John A. Rockwell; Treasurer, M. A. Dean. Presidential Electors were also nominated.

GENERAL.

The death of Rev. E. P. Smith, ex-United States Indian Commissioner, is announced from Accra, on the west coast of Africa, where he had gone under the auspices of the American Missionary Association to survey the missions of that society.

The Fenian prisoners who escaped from New South Wales in the American bark Catalpa arrived at New York a few days ago. They were met by a large number of their sympathizing countrymen, and escorted to O'Donovan Rossa's Hotel. The prisoners have all the appearance of laboring men, and were dressed in overalls and jumpers, some wearing belts....Hon. Michael C. Kerr, Speaker of the lower house of Congress, died at Rockbridge Alum Springs, Va., on Saturday, the 19th of August. Mr. Kerr was born in Titusville, Pa., March 15, 1827, and he was something over 49 years of age. He had an ordinary school education, greatly amplified by subsequent study. Was admitted to the bar in Kentucky, and settled in New Albany, Ind. His first official life was a two-years' term in the Indiana Legislature, beginning in 1856. During the war he served as reporter of the Supreme Court of the State, being appointed to fill a vacancy. It was not until 1864 that he was heard of in national politics, when he was elected to Congress, his term beginning in 1865. He was elected again in 1866, 1868, and 1870. In 1872 he was nominated as candidate for Congressman-at-Large, and was beaten by less than 200 votes by the Hon. G. S. Orth, late Minister to the Court of Vienna. During the later years of his service he served on the Committee of Ways and Means. In 1874 he was again elected to Congress, and was chosen Speaker of the House.

Hon. S. S. Cox, in a telegram to a friend announcing the death of Speaker Kerr, says: "His last hours were painless, as he so much desired. His composure was as remarkable as it was heroic. He was thoroughly content, and prepared for the unseen world. He was conscious and intelligent, gentle and brave to the end. His disease was consumption of the bowels, but toward the last his lungs were involved. He has been for days past, in fact, a disembodied intellect—a mere skeleton. Everything possible to be done at this remote spot to soften this blow to his family by throwing the tenderest care around his dying bed has been done."

It is stated from Washington that, under instructions from the Attorney General, all pending whisky prosecutions are to be taken up and disposed of at the next terms of the courts having them in charge.

The Canadian Government has decided to allow American vessels the free navigation of Canadian waters for the remainder of the season....A dispatch from Ottawa, Canada, says that "the Sioux now on the war-path against the United States not long ago sent presents of tobacco to the Blackfeet, and requested the latter to join them. The Canadian Indians replied that they would keep peace, but would not join them in fighting. The Sioux sent a message in return that, when they had finished with the Americans, they would cross over and capture the Blackfoot country."

The Cape May Conference, composed of delegates of the two great bodies of Methodists, the Churches North and South, have come to an understanding on the question of union. The Church will thus signalize the centennial year by the grand consummation which has for years been devoutly wished and labored for.

The Supreme Lodge of the World of Knights of Pythias have just held their annual session in Philadelphia. The total membership is now 98,276. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: H. S. Davis, New Hampshire, S. C.; N. B. Woodruff, Georgia, V. S. C.; C. D. Lucas, Missouri, S. P.; J. Dowdell, Ohio, Supreme Keeper of R. and S; J. B. Stumph, Indiana, S. M. E.; A. Ewing, Texas, S. M.-A.; W. H. Mayster, Tennessee, S. I. G.; J. W. Thompson, District of Columbia, S. O. G.

FOREIGN.

Aristarchi Bey, the Turkish minister at Washington, has received an official declaration of the Turkish government, dated at Constantinople, Aug. 19, giving the history of the commencement of the hostilities with Servia and Montenegro. It sets forth the concessions made to Servia under the treaty of Paris, and speaks of the efforts of the Porte to aid in developing the prosperity of the principality. The strife was caused by a few ambitious and restless men who sacrificed to vain popularity the true interests of the country, and from the beginning of the insurrection in Herzegovina have, by every means in their power, aided the insurgents.

A serious financial crisis prevails in Portugal, and the Government, as a measure of relief, has issued a decree for the suspension of all monetary engagements for two months. The embarrassment is due to the scarcity of silver coin....Reports have been received at Alexandria, Egypt, from Abyssinia, that Waldo Mikael, the insurgent chief, has defeated the Abyssinians at Zakraga, and 1,500 women and children have been massacred.

A severe battle was fought near Alexinatz, on Sunday, Aug. 20, between 40,000 Turks and the main Servian army. Both sides claim a victory....The dory Centennial, which left Gloucester, Mass., in July, has arrived safely at Liverpool....A fire last week destroyed almost the entire business portion of the town of Brussels, Ontario, together with a number of dwelling houses. Loss, $100,000.

A London dispatch of Aug. 23 says: "A special from the Bucharest correspondent of the Daily News, who accompanied Schuyler in his tour of investigation, says Baring's report of the sixty villages burned and 12,000 persons killed by the Turks in Bulgaria does not include the outrages committed in the district north of the Balkans, nor in the district of Sophia. Forty villages were burned north of the Balkans and seventy south. Schuyler has not completed his investigation, but he estimates the number of killed at 60,000 in the district of Philippopolis alone. The regular troops are more cruel than the Bashi Bazouks. Schuyler thinks there is immediate danger of additional massacres. He will suggest to his Government the following measures: The hanging of the four leaders in these atrocities, the disarming of the Mussulmen, and the rebuilding of the burnt villages at Government expense.

Until the war in the revolted European provinces comes to an end, Turkey will not consider the question of ameliorating the condition of the Christians in Crete. That is the reply Constantinople sends to the representatives of the Greek Government....His Majesty the King of Dahomey has a goodly number of Europeans who are now making an involuntary sojourn in his dominions. He has them at a most decided disadvantage, if the foreign dispatches are to be credited. In other words, they are cooped up like so many luckless chickens, awaiting the moment when their heathenish captor shall see fit to commence their slaughter.

The Next United States Senate.

Twenty-nine new United States Senators will be elected next winter. The Senate is divided between forty-two Republicans, twenty-nine Democrats and two independents, giving the Republicans a majority of eleven. The next Senate will consist of seventy-six Senators. If the Democrats hold their present seats and elect nine other of the twenty-nine Senators to be chosen, then, with a Democratic Vice-President in the chair, they would control the upper house of Congress. The sixteen Republicans whose terms expire with the present Congress are from the States of Arkansas, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Jersey, Rhode Island, South Carolina and Wisconsin. The nine Democrats going out are from Alabama, Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, North Carolina, Oregon, Tennessee, Virginia and West Virginia. One of the retiring Senators—Hamilton, of Texas—is classed as an Independent. In addition to these the new State of Colorado, whose politics are in doubt, will elect two Senators, and Louisiana will elect a second Senator to fill the vacancy for which Pinchback contended.

Grass and Leather.

A citizen of the Cass farm has a vacant lot fenced in to preserve the grass, and, notwithstanding his many signs of "Don't touch the grass" posted upon the fence, he yesterday morning found a man mowing away for dear life, while a boy was loading the grass into a wagon.

"Who gave you permission to cut that grass?" shouted the owner.

"Nobody," replied the man, as he rested from his work. "Grass is a natural product of the soil, nursed and cared for by nature, and it is as free to one animal as another."

"Leather is a preparation made from the hides of grazing animals," said the citizen as he stiffened the muscles of his legs. "It is made by tanners, worked up by shoemakers, and I'll give you all you want for nothing."

The old man kicked back, but right and justice must ever triumph, and when he went over the fence his eyes had a wild expression, and he yelled to his boy:

"Git that hoss on a gallop, Sam, or we'll never see home again."

Our Coast Line.

There are only two States in the Union which have a longer shore line than California. These are Florida, with 1,144 miles of gulf coast and 363 miles of Atlantic coast, and Texas, with 1,209 miles of shore line. According to the report of the coast survey, California has 1,136 miles of coast line, 272 miles of island shore, and 240 miles of tide-water river shore, making altogether 1,648 miles of shore line. The whole shore of the Pacific coast, including island and river, is 3,874 miles, not including Alaska, which has, all told, 9,830 miles. The aggregate of shore line of the Pacific coast belonging to the United States is 12,784 miles; while the total for the Atlantic States is set down at 11,840 miles, and for the Gulf States at 6,843 miles.

They All Died While Fighting.

Gen. Terry publishes a contradiction of the stories of the capture alive and torture by the Indians of some of Custer's command. He says all the evidence leads to the belief that every officer and man died while fighting. This is gratifying intelligence. Indian tortures are so horrible in their cruelty that, at the time of the Custer massacre, one of the most sickening thoughts which occurred to those who know what they are, was that perhaps some of the ill-fated command had been put to a lingering death by means of them. A soldier had better shoot himself than fall alive into the hands of hostile Indians.

A New Pacific State.

For several years past the project of a division of the State of California has been earnestly talked of in a quiet way, without any formal proposition for division having been made, until there is said to be a probability that the next few years will bring it about. Many prominent and substantial citizens of San Francisco have removed to Southern California, in contemplation of the event, and are doing what they can to bring it about. The proposed line of separation cuts across the State at the Santa Cruz county boundary, giving fourteen counties to the new State, with 30,000 voters, and a taxable wealth of $100,000,000. Los Angeles is named for the capital.

Thomas Kelly went to sleep on a pile of hay on the levee in St. Louis. During the night he slid down the side of the pile, so that his feet projected into the roadway, without the rest of his body being visible. At half-past 3 o'clock next morning an express wagon passed over the projecting members, crushing them very badly, and eliciting a tremendous whoop from Kelly, which made the express horses dash off, and brought an officer to the scene. The officer took Kelly to the city hospital.

THE CENTENNIAL.

France—China—Silks—Bronzes—Jewelry—Philosophical Instruments, etc.—The Tonometer.

[Special Correspondence.]

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 18, 1876.

An afternoon in the French department, in the main building, with one of the always polite and obliging French commissioners, ready to give information and answer questions respecting the exhibit of la belle France in this Exposition, resulted in more memoranda than I can put into readable shape in one letter. The superiority of the French in is noticeable by all observers. It is harder and denser than the English China, and less liable to breakage, and is as non-porous as glass. The glazing is thinner and does not obscure the figures. It is not liable to craze (have fine cracks in the glazing) after much using, as is the case with inferior ware. There is one exhibit peculiarly fine—one gold-enameled dinner set, worth 20,000 francs. Another set, in same collection, is sold to Restaurant Ermitage, Moscow, for $26,000. Tea sets, with cups and plates, all different, and Sevres ware exquisitely painted, in cases, like the rarest and most costly jewelry. There are perhaps a dozen of these exhibits of fine porcelain and china, and some exceedingly beautiful Palesso ware, made at Limoges. It is a very fine sort of terra cotta, highly ornamented, in which the colors are put on with a brush. The body is of common clay, the enamel and colors giving brilliancy and beauty almost equal to oil painting. Here is a dinner set—"Saxon"—on claws, decorated with ornaments and flowers. Another set—"Vegetable"—the knobs models of vegetables, each cover presenting a different sort. The "Water Lily," with dish and cover modeled from the leaves of the plant, the ornaments representing the flowers, with characteristic decorations, is quite attractive. Then there are plates representing "Morning," "Noon," "Night," "Moonlight," a "Thunder-Storm," a "Snow-Storm," etc., painted in a style entirely new. A dessert set, with lace edges, is new and difficult to make. Here are also cups, saucers and plates, fac similes of those presented to Lady Washington by the French officers, in 1790, and a few teacups made by the process of casting, showing extreme lightness.

But the principal pieces in this collection are two vases—the largest ever made in Europe—commemorative, the one of American Independence, and the other of the completion of our first century as a nation.

The vase "1776"—"The Struggle"—has for its base a barren rock washed by angry waves; on top a battery of Revolutionary cannon; on the body of the vase an eagle with outspread wings, with the United States colors on either side; above the eagle the names of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. The vase is surmounted by a bust of Washington, and has a statue of "Victory" on one side, and on the other, "Renommee."

The vase "1876"—"Prosperity"—has emblems of peace, the fruits of the earth, and implements of industry at the base; on the body are the eagle and the colors, above the names of the Presidents of the United States, with their terms of office. On top is a bust of America, and on each side are "Victory" and "Renommee." Very difficult to make.

This house has also an exhibit of patetendre, or soft porcelain, the most difficult kind of ware to manipulate, because it can neither be thrown nor cast into molds. The shapes are obtained by casting it in thick plaster molds, and then carefully turning and shaping it by hand. It is liable to collapse and lose its shape, but it has a great affinity for the vitreous mixture forming the glaze, and the result is that the glaze retains all its softness, and so thoroughly impregnates the colors of the painting that, after firing, it appears as if sunk into it. The paste in casting is so thin as to flow like water, a part of which is absorbed by the plaster molds, leaving only a thin covering adhering to the sides. But it takes the most brilliant coloring. There is a fine collection in blue, in imitation of Sevres ware.

Another important staple in which the French excel, is of which there is a magnificent display, especially from Lyons, renowned for its silk and velvet manufactures. Here are silks in all varieties, colors and styles, plain and figured, as well as silk in skeins and spools. Also, the finest camel's hair shawls. Of laces there is a large and elegant display. Also, damasks and curtain goods. Of tapestries there are several choice exhibits from the leading houses, especially of Duplan, some pieces of which cost fabulous prices. So also a case of Jouvin's gloves, the first house in France. Pictures, photographic and lithographic, from Coupil & Co. Millinery and flowers, suits, costumes and dresses in the best Parisian style, which the ladies view with admiration and regrets.

There are two remarkable exhibits of bronzes and marble, the latter holding the post of honor by the grand stand in the main aisle.

JEWELRY.

Of jewelry there are two magnificent displays, eclipsing all others by their richness and artistic excellence. In one exhibit is a necklace worth $40,000, a pin $20,000, a rose $3,000, and a diadem $42,000. In another, representing one of the very best houses in Paris, there is the most workmanship combined with the costliest goods. A single bonbonnere, of transparent ceramel, required the labor of a most skillful workman two years.

A large case of prize silver pieces, given by the Government at agricultural fairs, attracts much attention.

The most conspicuous objects are two mirrors, ten feet wide and twenty-two feet high. The glass is three-eighths of an inch thick. By Compagnie du St. Cobain.

There is a large and superior exhibit of chemical and pharmaceutical preparations.

PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, ETC.

In instruments of precision—balances for determining the smallest appreciable weight—the French excel. There is an automatic machine for weighing standard gold coin. The pieces are put into two feeders; those of the standard weight come out in the center, those of light weight come out on one side, and those of overweight on the other. There is an oilometer for testing the purity of oil.

There is a large display of astronomical and philosophical instruments, telescopes, field-glasses, spy-glasses, spectroscopes, optical, opera and magnifying glasses of all kinds, physicians' glasses, eye-glasses, and glasses for cameras, etc.

There is a fine display of traveling bags, valises and trunks, with all the apparatus for needle and toilet work, lunches, etc. Le Bazar du Voyage, the French term it—a great convenience for travelers.

A grand gymnasium, upright, occupying when folded a very small space, but when opened, displaying apparatus for complete gymnastic exercises, attracts much attention.

I name in this letter one more remarkable exhibit, brought to perfection through years of study and experiment by an ingenious and philosophic mind—the tonometer, an instrument for measuring sound, or tune. A set of tuning forks are arranged so as to form eight octaves. Each octave represents sixty-five sounds, and the whole gives 50,000 vibrations. By means of a battery, two cylindrical instruments can be made to give sounds, as regulated by keys, as low as a whisper or as loud as distant thunder. It is a most interesting application of science to acoustics, and I felt more interest in this exhibit than in anything I have seen in the Exposition. But as I had not time then to fully examine it, so as to give a proper explanation of it, and did not even get the inventor's name, I shall defer further notice till another letter.

An Ancient Religion on the Decline.

The vast population that compose the Buddhist Church present the most formidable sect known to the world. In [illegible] the tooth of Buddha is shown as a sacr[illegible] recently exhibited by the p[illegible] to the Prince of Wales during [illegible] visit to that island. Millio[illegible] and China bend the [illegible] temples, and so fixed in the popular [illegible] is this religion that Christian missionaries have made slow progress. But in Japan Buddhism is rapidly declining. Within the last six years [illegible]00 temples have been closed and devoted to other purposes, and since 1873 seventy-one have been converted into private dwellings or made secular institutions. At this rate, but a comparatively few years will elapse ere Buddhism will be but the religion of the minority in the populous Japanese islands.

WORD-MAKING.

Additions to the English Language.

The English language was, a day or two ago, enriched by a new adjective at the hands of a correspondent of the Times. The wish was expressed that a certain street in London might become "walkable." It might be dangerous to affirm that the word "walkable" was never used before; but it certainly sounds strange even to ears which are quite used to "passable" and "laughable," and to which "reliable," if it has a grievous sound, has not a new one. To make a street "walkable" seems to mean to put it in such a state that people may walk along it with safety and comfort. And it certainly would not be easy to put that idea into so short a space in any other way.

But the question further suggests itself whether, if the street is to be made "walkable," it also needs to be made "drivable" and "ridable." And then a number of questions would spring up. First, as to spelling; should it be "drivable" and "ridable," or "driveable" and "rideable?" Then comes the further question about having such words at all. In all these words the Latin ending stuck on to the English root is always offensive as long as the word is new; and that caprice which rules so many things in matters of language sometimes accepts one word and rejects another which is formed in exactly the same way.

Then, again, some draw a division between words which can be used in the passive voice as they stand, and those which cannot except with the help of a preposition. There are those who would admit "readable," and reject "reliable," because a book is "read" while nobody is "relied," but only "relied on." The word then should not be "reliable," but "relionable." The friends of "reliable" answer that nobody quarrels with "laughable," which, by the same analogy, should be "laughatable." To this it might again be answered that, though we cannot speak of "laughing a man," we can speak of "laughing him down," "laughing him to scorn," "laughing him out of a thing." A practically better answer would be that no other word exactly expresses the meaning of "laughable," while "trustworthy" does perfectly well for "reliable." But the real difference, doubtless, is that "reliable" is still a word of yesterday; while "laughable," which is recognized by Johnson on the authority of Dryden, has long got over any difficulties which may have beset it when it was new. "Walkable" may assert itself that people do "walk the streets," while nobody "drives" or "rides" them. But "drivable" and "ridable," if they ever spring up, will take refuge under the shadow of "reliable"—perhaps under that of "laughable."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Perilous Predicament.

Hon. Joseph Mosby, of Rolla, Mo., wished to make some slight repairs on the top of his residence, and for this purpose had occasion to tear up a few shingles. In doing so in a quiet and inoffensive manner, he was astonished to find that he had disturbed a hornets' nest. The hornets swarmed out upon Mr. Mosby. They made it hot for him at the very first onset. He rushed to the ladder, attacked from behind, when, horror of horrors, a neighbor had borrowed his ladder. Mr. Mosby cavorted, he tumbled, he rolled from one end of the roof to the other, screaming as he went, "Ladder!" "Ladder!" The hornets continually increased; they flew at his nose, his ears, his cheeks; they danced on his forehead, they crawled down his back, they flew up his breeches leg, they met half way and fought each other. They stung, here and there and everywhere—before, behind, above, and below. Mr. Mosby's wild gesticulations and terrific shouts attracted the attention of the whole neighborhood. His friends mistook the shouts of "Ladder!" "Hornets!" for "Hayes and Wheeler," and thought he was raitfying, but so much seriousness was depicted on his face that a ladder was finally procured and a rescue effected. Mr. Mosby is laid up for repairs now.

Our Fresh Beef Export Trade.

To-day the first shipment of fresh bee from New York to Europe is to be made by the Abyssinia, which will take out the dressed carcasses of 120 head of cattle. This beef is chiefly from prime Western and New York State stock, and the agents of the steamer say it can be placed on the English market in a perfectly sound condition. It is inclosed in a refrigerator, the outer portion of which is constructed of iron and the inside lined with wood, and contains pipes connected with an air-exhausting apparatus for the purpose of keeping the meat free from all the impurities that might arise from the accumulation of air.

As yet the shipment of fresh beef as a branch of our foreign commerce has not attained a position that admits of an estimate of the probable success of the business; but from what can be learned from shippers there does not seem to be other than a few minor obstacles in the way as regards operations on this side of the ocean. The market on the other side appears to be sufficiently large to take all the beef that can be shipped with the present allowance of freight room on the steamer.—Albany (N. Y.) Journal.

Increase of Neuralgia.

Neuralgia in the faces and heads of women is largely on the increase, as compared with the number of instances of the disease among men; and this is believed to be due to the inferior protection afforded by the mode in which women now cover their heads. It is not only one of the most common of feminine maladies, but one of the most painful and difficult of treatment. It is also a cause of much mental depression, and is regarded by physicians as leading more often to habits of intemperance among women than any other disease.

GEN. PUTNAM DISCOUNTED.

A California Bear Story.

The party of Sacramentans who recently left for Mendocino county on a hunting trip, and of whose fit out we gave a brief description, were yesterday heard from through a brief letter received here. They reached their hunting-ground without more than ordinary trouble, but had an adventure the first day they got into their permanent camp, which was immediately adjoining the farm-house of a gentleman who used to reside in Sacramento. Shortly after they arrived, the ranchman intimated to them that he had discovered that a bear, supposed to have been the cause of the disappearance from the ranch of sundry young pigs and goats, had secreted himself in a crevice in a ledge of rocks not more than 100 yards from the house, and they could kill him easily if they "meant hunting." We doubt whether a bear had ever been killed by these hunters, but what could they do? Of course they declared, with more or less emphasis, that if there was anything they wanted it was a chance at a bear. The ranchman volunteered to show them Bruin's headquarters, and after thorough preparation, they started out to do battle. Arrived at the rocks, it was determined after careful survey that the bear had crawled through a narrow opening into a cave, which might be large or small, there was no way of judging. George G., the quietest man of the party, now showed the most pluck. Evidently he had heard of Israel Putnam's exploit, for, after a careful reconnoissance, he announced that he would crawl in with his gun after the bear, previously affixing a rope to his ankles, and when the parties outside heard him shoot, they were to pull on the rope and help him to crawl out, as the bear might institute a vigorous pursuit. Once outside, the other members of the party could cover his retreat with their guns. That was excellent. He carefully made his way through the hole until he caught sight of Bruin, then took good aim and fired.

Meanwhile the remainder of the party had been standing outside, nervously clinging to the rope, and when the shot was fired, giving a loud and very peculiar sound, to which the bear responded with a terrible roar, which, rushing to them through the narrow opening, seemed to indicate that the animal was making a terrific charge, they started on a rush for camp, and, though unconscious of the fact, dropped their guns but clung to the rope. The result was that George found himself snaked out of the hole like greased lightning, and bumped along the ground at a famous pace. The more he yelled the faster his friends ran, believing that the ferocious beast had made short work of him and soon would operate upon them. They never stopped until they reached their wagon, and then, hearing a large amount of fragmentary catechism at the end of the rope, they investigated and found George barer than the bear had ever been, and with every bit of sun-burn skinned off his face, while his hands were lacerated and full of slivers. It took a long time to explain to his satisfaction. Afterward some one thought about the other bear, and he was found to be dead in the hole.—Sacramento Record.

An Unfortunate Question.

They had company to tea (says the Danbury News). The table was set out spledidly. The biscuit were as white and light and flaky as snow, and the cake was just lovely. The company were delighted with everything, and were enjoying themselves hugely, and getting the modus operandi of making the biscuit, which were too lovely for anything, when the infant of the household unfortunately whispered:

"Ma, why don't you have such a tea when there ain't company?"

Simple as the query was, it "floored" ma.

A fire in Hamburg, Germany, destroyed the large theater called the Central Halle. It being Sunday, and the weather favorable, the theater and gardens were crowded, and when the fire broke out a panic was created, women fainting, and children crying piteously; and about a dozen people were crushed and burned to death. Several of the ballet girls and some of the actors were severely burned.

Ice cream has become an article of peddle on the cars. It's nicer than the scream of the engine, and the peripatetic peanut prosecutor appears to be perfectly petrified with the perpetual success of his summer rival.—Inter-Ocean.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

To a Grasshopper.

Tiny, pea-green harlequin!
What of wonder can describe
All your odd, gymnastic tribe,
To the kangaroo akin?
Unless Darwin goes amiss,
With his queer hypothesis.

Chirping chimer, clover climber,
Insect athlete! never stumbling,
In your ground and lofty tumbling.
Strange it is a thing so fragile,
Should be so extremely agile.

Go it, then, spasmodic leaper!
Seize your pleasure while you may;
Blow your horn and have your day;
When the primrose days are over,
And all dead are vines and clover,
That austere, remorseless reaper,
Time, will turn us all to hay!

When October,
Like a varlet,
Robs the woodland's summer dress,
And the maple, blushing scarlet,
As the ruffian winds disrobe her,
Shrinks in timorous distress;
When no longer leans the lily
By the mill-pond's mossy edge,
And an influence damp and chilly
Blasts the rose and daffodilly,
And the vines along the ledge—
When the cricket
Leaves the thicket
To creep under kitchen rugs;
Then, O mountebank of bugs,
Unique acrobatic vaulter,
Your frail powers will fail and falter
And some chill, autumnal morning,
Lying, dying,
Without warning,
You will find it useless trying
Leaping, creeping, singing, flying;
With some early robin waiting,
Cool and calm, and aggravating,
Like some grim and hungry wizard,
Obviously deliberating
When to pop you in his gizzard.
Farewell butterflies and clover,
Death is fate the wide world over.

Around the Farm.

WOOL RAISING has become an important industrial feature of Oregon.

THE orchards of this country are estimated to occupy 500,000 acres and contain 20,000,000 trees.

THE only effectual cure for a sheep-killing dog is a large dose of leaden bullet from the barrel of a rifle, with plenty of powder to give it force.

THE cultivation of the castor-oil bean could be made profitable in South Florida beyond doubt. It grows here for an indefinite period after being once planted, and produces abundantly and continuously.—Tampa Guardian.

PASTURES are usually short during the month of August, and if cows are not fed extra, the flow of milk will be correspondingly lessened. It is much easier to keep it up by feeding than to restore it after it has decreased to any considerable extent.

A CONNECTICUT farmer spread some refuse from a brewery as a fertilizer, this spring, and then planted potatoes on the field. The potato bugs, though devouring everything else in the neighborhood, have never touched the plants where the brewery stuff was put.

THE difference in the amount of labor performed by a well-fed man or animal and an ill-fed one is considerable. There is no real economy in placing the laborer upon a starvation diet. Abundant and good food give bodily strength and contentment of mind, which is an important item.

I WOULD urge upon the youth the importance of studying the history of the world down to the present period, and let him carefully note the large number of great men who were agriculturists, who owed their success to the judicious training and good discipline of country life.—Western Rural.

I AM glad to know you are calling attention to the Holsteins. The cow I purchased last season has made a remarkable milk record. Her butter, too, is excellent, particularly in keeping quality. This cow, and others in this vicinity, satisfy me they are the cows for the Northwest.—Western Rural.

MANY despise poplar as a timber, but it has one golden property—it will not burn. Some years ago a factory at Nottingham took fire on the second floor, and burnt to the top furiously, but not downward; although the floors lay a yard thick with hot clinkers and melted machinery, yet it did not get downward, because the floors were of poplar.—The Garden.

AS MUCH as I detest being in debt, I would not hesitate to recommend a young man to run in debt moderately for a farm, if he loves the occupation, and who has a wife who does not mind living on a farm; for I think with these requisites, if he be cautious and frugal for a few years, he will be better off and take more comfort on a farm than in a city.—Boston Cultivator.

THE State of New York alone has now nearly 1,000 cheese manufactories, which use the milk of more than 250,000 cows, making therefrom 80,000,000 pounds of cheese, which is 1,000 pounds for every three cows. The cheese production of the whole United States is over 250,000,000 pounds, of which 96,600,000 are exported. England scarcely exports 25,000,000, while little Holland, which used to be the principal cheese producing country of the world, exports at present 60,000,000 pounds.

THREE noted bulls died in Kentucky during the very hot weather in July, as follows: The seventeenth Duke of Airdrie, 6629, owned by Simms & McClintoch, Williamsburg, died on the 19th of July. He was bred by R. A. Alexander, of Kentucky. His sire was Royal Oxford, dam fourth Duchess of Airdrie. This fine bull was for several years at the head of the herd of George Murray, Esq., of Racine. In December last he was sold at J. B. Taylor's sale, at Toronto, for $4,500. Louan's tenth Duke, owned by Gen. L. Desha, of Cynthiana, died also on the 19th. He was 4 years old; was sired by the fourteenth Duke of Airdrie, dam Louan tenth. The last of the three was the Duke of Bloomfield, 11689, owned by C. M. Clay, Jr.—a fine bull sired by Duke of Geneva, dam Lady Bates.

About the House.

JELLY-MOULDS should be washed with the white of eggs to insure a clear impression.

APPLE PUDDING.—Eight apples grated; the same quantity of stale bread; three eggs; one and a half pints of milk; sugar and flavoring to taste. Bake one hour in a slow oven. To be eaten with cream.

SPICED CURRANTS.—Three pounds of sugar to seven pounds of currants, one teaspoon each of ground cinnamon, allspice and cloves, a pinch of red pepper if liked. Boil a half hour. Very nice to eat with meat.

POTATO SOUP.—Boil eight potatoes and one good-sized onion until tender; strain through a sieve; add one quart of milk, salt and pepper to taste, and nearly one teacup of butter; put all in a saucepan and let it come to a boil. Serve hot.

MUSTY COFFEE AND TEA-POTS.—The best way to clean the inside of tea-pots, coffee-pots, or old iron pots and pans, is to fill them with water in which a few ounces of washing soda are dissolved, and set them on the fire. Let the water boil till the inside of the vessel looks clean.

TO HAVE a good light the wicks of kerosene lamps should be changed frequently. They may be washed, if not too short, or replaced by new ones. The unsatisfactory light sometimes afforded by kerosene lamps is often caused by the pores of the wick being filled refuse matter, which obstructs the free passage of the oil.

CAULIFLOWER PICKLE.—Select the closest and whitest flowers; put them in bunches, spread them on earthen dishes, sprinkle salt on them; in three days put them in earthen jars, pour scalding salt water upon them; let them stand six or eight hours, drain them carefully, then put them in glass cans, cover with vinegar, and seal up tightly. Elder flowers and buds add a very high flavor to pickles and horseradish. Either the leaves or the root will keep pickles from molding

PRESERVING TOMATOES.—In order to preserve tomatoes through the year, it is not necessary to resort to the expense of canning them. If stewed in the ordinary manner, but without butter or crackers, only a little salt and sugar, they can be put into jugs—two-quart or gallon, according to the size of the family—and if corked up tightly, will keep for a year. To make assurance doubly sure, some melted wax may be poured around the corks. Tomatoes may also be dried easily. Skinned and prepared with a little sugar they make a good substitute for figs, and are sold under the name of tomato figs.

Capturing Ostriches.

The greatest feat of an Arab hunter is to capture an ostrich. Being shy and cautious, and living on the sandy plains, where there is little chance to take it by surprise, it can only be captured by a well-planned and long-continued pursuit on the swiftest horse. The ostrich has two curious habits in running when alarmed. It always starts with outspread wings against the wind, so that it can scent the approach of an enemy. Its sense of smell is so keen that it can detect a person at a great distance long before he can be seen. The other curious habit is that of running in a circle. Usually five or six ostriches are found in company. When discovered, part of the hunters, mounted on fleet horses, will pursue the birds, while the other hunters will gallop away at right angles to the course the ostriches have taken. When these hunters think they have gone far enough to cross the path the birds will be likely to take, they watch upon some rise of ground for their approach. If the hunters hit the right place and see the ostriches, they at once start in pursuit with fresh horses, and sometimes they overtake one or two of the birds, but often two or three of the fleet horses fall, completely tired out with so sharp a chase.

American Silk Manufacture.

The manufacture of silk is becoming an important industry in this country, and contrary to the general experience in manufactures, it increased in amount and value during the year 1875. Last year, the value of this manufacture rose to over $27,000,000, being above that of 1874 by over $7,000,000. New Jersey produces nearly $11,000,000 worth of silks and silk goods of various descriptions, leading the business in the United States. New York follows with a product of nearly $6,000,000, and Connecticut with a product of over $5,000,000. There are establishments in fifteen of the States, Kansas, even, having made a commencement in this enterprise. It is observable that broad goods and ribbons figure only at a valuation of $6,000,000, the remaining product being spun silk, twists, laces, braids and trimmings. In dress silks the increase in 1875 over the previous year was over $12,000. In 1870 our manufactures of silk were less than one-quarter of the amount of foreign productions imported into this country, while in 1875 we produced silks amounting in value to over $2,775,000 more than the aggregate value of importations.—Providence Journal.

How Much is a Horse Power?

The New York Herald thus describes a horse power: "This question is frequently asked: What is understood by a horse power, and why came that way of reckoning to be adopted and brought into general use? Before the power of steam was generally known and applied to mechanical purposes, horses were used to raise coal and other heavy bodies. Mr. Moots, in his experiments, carefully compared the relative power of the different breeds of horses, and found its average equal to raising 33,000 pounds one foot per minute, or what is equivalent, to raise 330 pounds 100 feet, or 100 pounds 330 feet during that space of time, when attached to a level or sweep of a given length. This afterward became the standard of measuring power or force applied to mechanical purposes, and which is still retained in common use.

Curious Burial.

The recent cremation in South Carolina causes a correspondent to write to the Columbus (Ga.) Enquirer: "Many years ago, Wm. Mitchell, a bachelor, and planter on the Cooper river, near Charleston, and who, by the way, was a kinsman of mine, had a cast-iron coffin made, and when he died his will bequeathed his overseer $500, provided he had his remains put into this iron case and reduced to ashes on a pyre of twenty cords of wood. The key was then to be dropped inside through a hole made for the purpose, and the case and its contents thrown into the Cooper river. The entire programme was faithfully carried out by the overseer."

VANDERBILT.

Stories of the Dying Millionaire.

[From the New York Times.]

It is conceded by all his physicians that the ability to withstand the shocks of disease evinced by Commodore Vanderbilt is due to his strong constitution and magnificent physique, aided by his abstemious habits and love of exercise in the open air. As an instance of how active he was in his 58th year, it is related that in 1852 he was on board the steamer Prometheus, of the Nicaragua Line, as she was being moored to her berth at pier No. 4, North river. A single hawser had been run from the ship to the pier, but owing to the strong current the vessel could not be moored. The Commodore became impatient at the delay, and throwing his cane on the dock, swung himself, hand over hand, on the hawser from the ship to the pier. Then picking up his cane he said: "I was not going to stay there all day," and walked slowly up the dock.

Many stories showing his strong prejudices and peculiarities in those days, in regard to his business, are told of him. On one occasion, in 1852, a Mr. Loper, of Philadelphia, who had built a number of propellers, and who was strongly in favor of that class of vessels, called on the Commodore to try to induce him to use propellers instead of side-wheel steamers on the Nicaragua Line. He exhibited a model to the Commodore, and predicted that in ten years from that time not a single side-wheel steamer would be built, as the propellers were superior to them, both in speed and economy. After hearing all that Mr. Loper had to say, the Commodore said: "All you say, Loper, may be true, but I'll tell you what I'll do. You build a propeller, and I'll build one of my walking-beam ships, and I'll run you a race from New York to Liverpool, ship for ship." Mr. Loper did not accept the wager, and the Commodore never built a propeller.

One of his peculiarities is that he signs his name thus, "Van Derbilt," pronouncing it "Wanderbilt," as if written with a W, the old Dutch pronunciation of the name. Many years ago, when Wm. H. Vanderbilt was a boy, the old gentleman made arrangements to send him to a boarding school in Bedford, Worcester county. It being necessary to procure a trunk for the boy, the father and son, who then lived in Madison street, went to the Bowery to purchase one. After they had selected a trunk William suggested that it would be well to have it marked with his initials. The Commodore acquiesced, and turned to the storekeeper and said, "Put 'W. We' on the ends," meaning W. V. "W. We?" said the storekeeper, inquiringly. "Yes," said the Commodore, "W. We." The man still not seeming to understand, the old gentleman said, "—— it, Bill, you tell him." William then explained what his father meant, and "W. V." was put on the ends of the trunk in bright brass-headed tacks, as was the custom in those days.

The title of Commodore was given him in the year 1834 by David Heywood, who was at that time Captain of the steamboat Champion, running between New York and Albany. The Commodore owned her as well as the steamboat Nimrod, with which he was running a day line to Albany in opposition to other lines.

Changes in the Earth's Surface.

It has been proved that the whole Pacific coast, especially California, with all its mountains, is perpetually rising, and that at a comparatively rapid rate. The land containing in its bosom our great American lakes is slowly sinking; while Southern Indiana, Kentucky and the surrounding States are rising. Geological investigations prove that our great lakes, except Ontario, had formerly a southern outlet; until, by gradual northern depressions and southern upheavals, a northern outlet was formed from Lake Erie into Ontario, about 40,000 years ago.

This outlet, the Niagra river, is still wearing its channel. The division line of the water-shed, south of the lakes and the Mississippi valley, has since that time been steadily traveling southward; and when Chicago recently turned the water of Lake Michigan through the Chicago river, into the Mississippi valley, the old state of affairs was artificially re-established.

New Jersey is sinking, with New York city and Long Island, at the estimated rate of about sixteen inches per century. The coast of Texas is ascending at a comparatively very rapid rate, some observers stating that it is as much as thirty or forty inches in the last half century.

Combining these observations with the results of the recent deep soundings of the United States steamer Tuscarora in the Pacific ocean, we find that the bed is evidently a sunken continent, abounding in volcanic mountains some 12,000 feet high, many of them not reaching the surface of the ocean, and others which do so, forming the numberless islands of the Pacific. The study of coral rocks proves that the sinking has continually been taking place during several centuries, and observations of the coast will undoubtedly reveal the fact that it has not ceased.

The most eminent German geologists and ethnologists now maintain that the locality of man's primitive origin, the so-called Paradise, was in the Pacific ocean south of Asia, westward to Africa, and eastward to Australia. When the great Pacific continent slowly sank, so that the ocean commenced filling up the valleys, man retreated to the mountains, which by continued sinking were transformed into islands, and now form the many groups of Polynesia. The insularity of the thus-preserved races was not productive of civilization, which requires conflict, in which the superiors in the end gain the victory over inferiors. In those islands the inferior races were preserved for want of this conflict, hence their savage condition even at the present day; while, primitively, the greatest advance took place at the spot of the most intense conflict, the continent of Southern Asia.

Turkey in Europe.

Dr. Yakshich, of Belgrade—said to be an authority on the subject—estimates the population of Turkey in Europe, exclusive of the Principalities, at 8,000,000, of whom 3,000,000 are Slavs. In addition to these, there are 1,500,000 Servians and Montenegrins, making 4,500,000 Slavs in a total population of 9,500,000. The number of Mohammedans is estimated by Dr. Yakshich at 3,380,000. They are fewer than the Christians, yet have the advantage of holding the reins of power.

Great Guns and Iron Armor.

The London Standard says: "The trial of the Armstrong gun of 100 tons, when it gets out to Italy, will be awaited with much interest. The test applied to the hydraulic machinery of the gun will also be practically valuable. Let us consider what is involved in the working of four 100-ton guns on board ship. In actual combat these guns may have to be fired simultaneously over the side. Although placed in turrets, and therefore occupying a central line, there will be a great shifting of weight when these guns recoil. Supposing the vessel to be rolling from the action of the waves in the direction of the recoil, it is possible that the instantaneous shifting of more than 400 tons from one side of the keel to the other may have an awkward effect. It would be a strange fate for a big ship to knock herself over by the recoil of her own guns. The Italians seek to get rid of this risk by making the recoil exceedingly short. The hydraulic machinery invented for this purpose by Mr. G. W. Rendel cannot fail to be well worthy of his fame, but the mechanical arrangements must be exceedingly strong and well contrived to bear the enormous strain they will have to endure. The gun recoils with the same force that the shot advances, and when we remember that the eighty-one-ton gun has put forth an energy of more than 26,000 foot tons, we may guess at the immense force which will have to be controlled in the case of the larger gun."

Maj. Andre.

A recent writer has furnished some particulars with regard to the parentage of the ill-fated Maj. John Andre, which are not generally known. His father, Anthony Andre, a merchant in London, was a native of Geneva, and the grandson of John Andre, of Nismes. He was naturalized by an act of Parliament in 1748, and died at Hackney, April 14, 1769, when John was a youth of 18. The wife of Anthony Andre was Mary Louise, daughter of Paul Girardat, of Paris. The two sons and three daughters born of the marriage all died single. The remains of Maj. John Andre, who was hung Oct. 2, 1780, were conveyed to England, by command of the Duke of York, in 1821, and a monument to his memory was erected in Westminster Abbey. His younger Brother, William, was created a baronet in 1781, in recognition of Maj. Andre's services; but the title became extinct with the death of the Baronet in 1802. The mother of Maj. Andre survived both her sons, and died at Bath in 1813, at the age of .91.

Bread.

Bread contains 80 nutritious parts in 100; meal, 34 in 100; French beans, 92 in 100; common beans, 89 in 100; peas, 93 in 100; lentils, 94 in 100; cabbages and turnips, the most aqueous of all the vegetables compared, produces only 8 lbs. of solid matter in 100 lbs.; carrots and spinach produce 14 lbs. in the same quantity; whilst 100 lbs. of potatoes contain 25 lbs. of dry substance. From a general estimate it results that 1 lb. of good bread is equal to 2½ to 3 lbs. of potatoes; that 75 lbs. of bread and 30 lbs. of meat may be substituted for 300 lbs. of potatoes. The other substances bear the following proportions: 4 parts of cabbage to 1 of potatoes; 3 parts of turnips to 1 of potatoes; 2 parts of carrots and spinach to 1 of potatoes; and about 3½ parts of potatoes to 1 of rice, lentils, beans, French beans, and dry peas.

Heroine.

It was a simple thing for a woman to woman to run up three flights of stairs for the purpose of warning a company of workers there that the building in which they were was in flames; but the woman who did this in the Globe mill, in Philadelphia, did it with the full knowledge of the fact that she thereby risked her own life, and the humble act of human kindness was as truly heroic as any deed recorded in the history of valor ever was. She was a poor working woman, without social recognition, without education probably, without refinement or beauty, or any of the things that are commonly supposed to constitute loveliness in woman; but in volunteering to die for the sake of other persons she has proved her nobility of soul and vindicated her right to recognition as an heroic spirit.

American vs. Russian Wheat.

A Liverpool newspaper says: "It is rather startling, and to Russia must be not a little alarming, to see how rapidly American wheat is superseding Russian in England. Ten years ago Russia exported nearly half the bread imported into England, and America only an eighth; now America furnishes half, and Russia only one-fifth. The difference is likely to be greater as years go on, for a vigorous attempt is to be made to improve the navigation of the Mississippi. This, if accomplished, will transfer to that river a large part of the transport now done by rail, and we shall then see wheat imported here at considerable less cost."

Imitating Bergh.

A few days ago a man drove his horse to the Winslow House, half way up Kearsarge mountain, and tying him under the stable went to the top of the mountain. The horse stood there all day with nothing to eat. The man came down at night and was about starting off when the landlord put in an appearance and demanded 50 cents. "What for?" said the man. "For cruelty to animals," replied the landlord, "in leaving your horse all day under my stable with nothing to eat. If you had done it in Massachusetts they would have fined you $30." The man paid his half dollar and drove down the mountain.

THE Richmond Dispatch, speaking of the proposed change in English spelling, remarks that in Virginia the word "horse" would have no "r," and tomatoes would be spelled "tomaytoz." In Maryland horse would be spelled "kritur," "tomaytoz" "tomatozes." In a hundred years there would be no two States of the Union which could understand each other's written language.

Sitting Bull the Greatest.

Gen. Jas. S. Brisbin, now with Terry as Major of the Second cavalry, has been interviewed on the Indian question. In answer to the question, "Are there any noble Indians, such as we read about in the books?" the General answered: "Yes, plenty of them, and greater chiefs now living on the plains than ever were Powhattan, Logan, Red Jacket, or Tecumseh. Sitting Bull, as a warrior, is a greater Indian than has ever appeared in America. The late campaigns on the Yellowstone show that he is equal to the best generals in managing battles. A few years ago he was a blanket Indian, without influence or wealth, and by his own energy he has raised himself to the head of the most powerful Indian tribe on the plains, and is the acknowledged leader of all the hostilities. Red Cloud will compare favorably with any chief that has ever lived, and Spotted Tail is not far behind him in ability. I remember Washakie, Chief of the Shoshones, who, if he had been born white instead of red, would have been a leader of the people in any State—a Governor or a Senator. In personal appearance this Chief strongly resembles the Father of his Country, as painted by Peale—tall, straight, white-haired and dignified—he is the personification of a noble red man. I have had him to dine at my house, and never entertained a more agreeable old man. He will not eat till he has washed, dressed his hair, and pared his nails. He is polite to ladies, and children are his delight, going to him instinctively as to a friend. It is almost impossible to disturb his repose, while his placid replies in council would do credit to the most dignified Senator. He has great abilities, and treats every question presented to him with such comprehensive knowledge as to astonish white men. He is brave as Julius Cæsar, and in every sense a savage statesman, orator, warrior."

The Bashi Bazouks.

The Turkish army is divided, like that of Russia, into regular and irregular troops. The former, called Nizams and Radifs, correspond with the standing armies and reserves of most countries in Europe. The latter are a wild herd of barbarians, fortunately unknown to the civilized countries, except Russia and Turkey. What the Cossacks are, and what the Bashkips used to be, in Russia, the Bashi Bazouks are in Turkey—irregular volunteers, said to number about 80,000, hailing mostly from the warlike tribes of the Ottoman Empire in the interior of Asia. The name of these Bashi Bazouks is quite significant, meaning giddy-heads or mad-caps. During the Eastern war, twenty years ago, they proved perfectly worthless. Neither the Turks, nor the French General Yussuf, specially called from Africa, nor the British General Beatson succeeded in teaching them anything like order or discipline. Repeatedly it became necessary to disarm them, and finally to send them back to their native haunts. In the present conflict the Ottoman Government uses these savages as a scourge upon the Christians, especially in Bulgaria, and with such efficiency that many thousands of the latter have been slaughtered, their villages burnt and their churches desecrated. Nothing has more justly provoked the indignation of Europe than the use to which these Asiatic hordes have been put by their masters.

Lost in the Tyrol.

William Whittaker Barry, a London lawyer who was an enthusiastic pedestrian, and had written several books about his remarkable tours afoot, was last fall lost in the mountains of the Tyrol. He registered at a hotel at Krimme, and said that he was going to walk over the apex of the mountain, 9,000 feet high, to Kasern, on the other side. The path which he took is only used in summer, and at that time the weather was cold and snow was falling. He wore thin clothing, and, under all the circumstances, the exploit was foolhardy in the extreme. On the way up the mountain he met a shepherd who was going down, and who tried to dissuade him from going any further; but, although darkness was gathering, a snow storm was commencing, and at least five hours of fast walking would be required to take him to his destination, he persisted in his attempt. He was never seen after that nor has his body been found, although extensively searched for.

Strange Case of Hydrophobia.

An extraordinary case of hydrophobia occurred in Augusta, Me., last week. A gentleman from Portland, while smoking with a friend in the front yard of his boarding house, remarked that a fit was coming on, as he felt the symptoms. He was soon rolling on the ground, frothing at the mouth and barking like a dog. Five persons attempted to hold him, but were unable to do so during his most severe convulsions. The poor fellow was in this condition twenty-four hours, and did not appear to be greatly exhausted when he came to himself. He remarked that the reaction always came two or three days after the attack. He said that twelve years ago he was bitten by a dog, and ever since has had an attack like this once a year. Last year he was attacked in June.

Getting Down.

Mr. Dorkins hurried into the house, and exclaimed, "I have got another, my dear—a good one. If you were on the top of a church spire on the back of a goose, how would you get down?" Mrs. Dorkins thought she'd jump down, slide down the lightning-rod, fly down on the goose, fall down, and then gave it up. "Why, if you wanted to get down, you could pick it off the goose," said Mr. Dorkins, exultingly.

A MAINE paper says: "They ought to have a new degree at Colby university, conferring the title of Independent Professor of Gluttony, which might properly be abbreviated into P. I. G. Last week a student went into Murray's saloon at the Waterville depot, and offered to eat ten ice creams in succession, on a wager. His offer was accepted by his fellow students, and the creams furnished, which he made way with in a few minutes. It is consoling to read that a short time afterward he was taken in great distress, and a doctor sent for, who brought him all right after a while. The same student offered to eat ten mince pies in twenty minutes, but the offer was not accepted."

Striking a Clock.

George III. was extremely punctual, and expected punctuality from every one. Lord —— was the most punctual man who attended on His Majesty. He had an appointment one day with the King at Windsor at 12 o'clock. On passing through the hall the clock struck 12, on which His Lordship, in his rage at being half a minute too late, raised his cane and broke the glass of the clock. The King reminded him that he was a little beyond his time, which he excused as well as he could. At the next audience, the King, as he entered the room, exclaimed, "H——, how came you to strike the clock?" "The clock struck first, Your Majesty." The King laughed heartily at the grave manner in which Lord H—— justified himself, the mock solemnity of the answer adding zest to the bon mot.

Judicial and Senatorial Convention.

The Democracy of the Judicial District composed of Noble DeKalb and Steuben County will hold a convention at Waterloo, Ind , on WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 6th, 1876,

for the nomination of a circuit Judge and Prosecutor.

A Democratic Senatorial Convention for the nomination of a State Senator for the counties of DeKalb and Steuben will also be held on the same day and place.

J. R. LANNING.
Chairman Co. Cen. Com.

Voters should remember that they have the assurance of Morton that Hayes' term, would be a continuation of Grantism.

If Hayes meant to endorse the resumption act of 1875, why did he not say so plainly and unequivocally as Wheeler does? It is beginning to be clear that weak as the Cincinnati ticket is, its principal weakness is in the head.

What a beautiful and graceful thing it would have been if Grant had written a letter of sympathy and condolence to poor Custer's widow. But he was suffering from "neuralgia in the head."

Grant is happy lolling on the porches of his Long Branch cottage smoking cigars and drinking his favorite cocktails. Meanwhile Morton, and Chandler, and Conkling, are running the best government the world ever saw.

Those twin relics of the halcyon days of Radicalism, Orth and Colfax, will not mount the stump during the campaign. They have wrapped the mantle of obscurity about their manly forms, and beneath its folds sadly ruminate upon the mutability of political affairs.

All sorts of slanders against Gov. Tilden are being invented by his assailants in the republican press. Nine out of ten of these slanders are too absurd to need contradiction. In the mean time, while this is going on, we are glad to see the Democratic press refrains from making false and slanderous charges against Gov. Hayes.

We regard all attemps to show that Mr Tilden or Mr. Hayes is not possessed of what is ordinarily considered a good personal character, as labor thrown away. The men are good enough, both of them There is no proper place or room for personal abuse and vituperation in the campaign. The battle is to be fought, and to be won by one side or the other, on principle; and it is fortunate that this is so.

After their little spurt of enthusiasm the radical papers begin to see the weakness of Ben. Harrison before the people. The News of last evening, after making comparison between the oratorical abilities of Harrison and Williams, says:—"But Mr. Harrison should bear in mind that there are other and more effective ways of making votes than by talking to a miscellaneous crowd from a platform. In the quiet work of the campain—among the plain people of the country—in which votes are made, the candidacts will be more nearly upon an equality, and that which many regard as the weakness of Williams may prove to be his strength." That will be an interesting sight to see Ben Harrison am'g the plain people, showing a feeling of fellowship and sympathy. Orth would win forty men with his bonds sticking out of his pocket while Harrison was getting off his kid gloves.

Mr. Tilden's Railroad Experience.

The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth in regard to Mr. Tilden's connection with bankrupt Western railroads, was told by Mr. Hewitt, in his brilliant reply to Mr. Kasson; and here it is:

"Gov. Tilden was called from 1857 to 1860 into almost every broken-down rail way corporation in the West: while he found them unable to pay even running expenses, he took them in hand in every case the bonds, whether first, second, or third mortgage, and the stock, preferred and common, all ultimately went above par; and he enriched the people that were wise enough and fortunate enough to have secured his services I am personally among the numbers of those who were benefitted by his wise and sagacious management; and I say, so far from having been overpaid in any of these transactions that his legal fees and his personal services were the cheapest and most poorly rewarded I have ever known in a long business career, dealing in large transactions in all parts of this country and in Europe."

Every word of this passage can be corroborated, if need be, by the testimony of men of the same character as Mr. Hewitt. Among the many concerns which Mr. Tilden thus rescued from ruin are the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad Company, the Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company, and the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company, all three, now, even in these times of depression of railroad property, first-class dividend-paying corporations, whose stock is a favorite investment with capitalists. Where he received a dollar for his services to these companies, their shareholders gained hundreds, and not one of them has ever expressed or felt any sentiments toward him but those to which Mr. Hewitt has given utterance.

Mr. Tilden has not only no reason to fear investigation into this matter, but, on the contrary, the more it is discussed the more conspicuous his administrative ability, as well as his integrity, becomes. The man who has shown such a practical talent for extricating gigantic railroad corporations from their embarrassments, is the man the country needs to take hold of its ruined affairs and restore them to prosperity. If he had no other qualification, this alone would be sufficient to give him the preference over Mr. Hays, who has never displayed any business talent whatever.

The Democratic heart of Connecticut has been delighted by the "coming out" of Colonel Augustus H. Fenn for Tilden Col. Fenn lost an arm in the war. The Hartford "Times" seems to be entirely upset by the accession, for it shouts:—"Just wait and hear what a gun Connecticut will fire on the 7th of November! It will wake the echoes from Main to the Louisiana canebrakes, though ours is a small State."

Reform is necessary to rebuild and establish in the hearts of the whole people of the Union, eleven years ago happily rescued from the danger of a secession of States, but now to be saved from a corrupt centralism, which, after inflicting upon ten States the rapacity of carpet-bag tyrannies, has honey-combed the offices of the Federal Government itself with incapacity, waste, and fraud, infested States and municipalities with the contagion of misrule, and locked fast the prosperity of an industrious people in the paralysis of hardtimes.

A correspondent of the World, writing from Ohio, says, the Hayes people out there circulating the story that Mr. Tilden is seventy-seven years old, and that the reason he isn't married is because he can't get any woman to have him. The tale is a lie from top to bottom. Sam. Tilden is not even sixty-seven and if he was so minded he would make a first-rate husband, a prize for any woman to get. He is bright and agreeable courtly in manner, and accomplished in speech. On horseback he looks like a young fellow of forty or thereabouts; and more than all, he carried on his shoulders a head that holds a plenty of good and sound brains.—Sun.

In view of the fact that the Republican papers of the country are endeavoring to prove that Tilden and Tweed were brothers in thievery, the following extract form the "New York Times" editorial on the Democratic State convention of 1871, will be interesting.

"Mr. Tilden proceeded to denounce the Tammany organization, and declared that he would not, this fall, vote for any of the nominations made for assembly by that organization, and if that was undemocratic or regular, he would resign his position as chairman of the State Committee, and retire to the bosom of his plundered fellow citizens."

Hon. J. D. Williams, of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee on Accounts cut down the expenses of the House and stopped the thousand little leaks of extravagance, even the lemonade so dear to the heart of Foster, of Ohio. He wears blue jean homespun, and the luxurious Republicans contemptuously call him Blue Jean Jimmy. A strong, clear-headed, practical, common sense man—in personal appearance an exaggeration of Abraham Lincoln—a hater of all frauds follies and shams. As Governor of Indiana, Uncle Jimmy Williams will be even less popular among the Republicans than as Chairman of the Committee of Accounts. What could be more offensive to the Mortonites than a Governor who wears blue jean and is plebeian enough to be particular about accounts?

Don't fail to attend the Democratic rally on next Monday, and see the next Governor.

Think for yourself.

Thousands lead miserable lives, suffering from dyspepsia and disordered stomachs and liver, producing biliousness, heartburn, costiveness, weakness, irregular appetite, low spirits, raising food after eating, and often ending in fatal attack of fever. They know they are sick, yet get little sympathy. The unfailing remedy, which is yearly restoring thousands, is Dr. Costa's Radical cure. Sold by F. E. Davenport, the Druggist, Cor. Main and Nineth streets. A 25c bottle will convince you of its merits. Don't delay another hour after reading this, but go and get a bottle, and your relief is as certain as live. Will you do it, or will you continue to suffer? Think for yourself!

Professor Parker's Pleasant Warm Syrup is perfectly safe and extremely palatable. No physic required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

Try the Auburn COURIER the campaign. It will cost but a trifle.

Local and Miscellaneous.

Go and see Slasher & Crasher to-night at Ensley Hall.

Mrs. A. J. Little left to-day for the Centennial.

The balloon went up last evening before a good crowd.

Reduced rates on all railroads to Auburn next Monday.

C. M. Dawson, Esq., of Fort Wayne was in town this week.

The "News" at Fort Wayne is now the best daily in that city.

A fine entertainment will be given to-night, at Ensley's Hall, by our dramatic troupe.

Our physicions report a good deal of sickness on hand in this locality, mostly fevers and ague.

A fine entertainment will be given to-night and to-morrow evening by our Dramatic troup, at Ensley's Hall.

Come in and see us smile over the receipt of a dollar or two, but be sure and bring the money, or there'll be no show.

A little son-of-a-citizens is added to our population. Time, last Sunday, weight, ten pounds, owners, Chas. Klotz and lady. 'Tis well.

Mr. Williams and Mr. Ensley will build two store rooms from the ruins of the Woolen Factory on the same ground. The foundation is already laid.

Pretty little Clara, a five year old of Mr. Lordier gave a birthday party last Friday which was attended by quite a number of her particular friends.

With a bloody shirt campaign and money, we are safe! With a financial campaign and no money, we are beaten! —General Kilpatrick to Gov. Hayes.

There is an Independent party in this State, confined, it is true, to a few counties, but formidable, and it will defeat Gen. Harrison.—Gen. Kilpatrick.

The Plymouth Democrat says, the meetings of Freeman Kelley at Tyner City and Bremen were well attended, and considerable enthusiasm manifested.

Unless the National Committee wakes up and does its duty to you, to the party, and country, defeat is certain in October.—Gen, Kilpatrick to R. B, Hayes.

Owing to Mr. Turpie having to go to Wayne to answer Harrison last evening he could not come to Auburn. The appointment here was made without his knowledge.

Mr. Ensley is adding another very creditable building to our place. Such structures give tone and character to a town, and strike the eye of the visitor most favorably.

Mr. William Mallory, father-in-law to the editor, died this morning quite suddenly, after a short illness. Funeral services at the M. E. Church to-morrow at 9 o'clock. He will be taken to Bucyrus, O., for burial.

Hon. J. C. STOUGHTON, of Illinois, will address the people, at Waterloo, on Friday evening, and at Garrett on Saturday at 8 o'clock P. M. Let everyone turn out and hear the gifted orator.

Special trains will run on the railroads to Auburn, at reduced rates, next Monday, for all who want to hear Mr. Williams and Voorhees, and we trust everybody will take advantage of them.

Because Alabama held a peaceful election a few days ago, and gave a Democratic majority of forty thousand there is a cry for troops, that an effort may be made to change the vote in November.

Our Dramatic Troupe will appear to-night and to-morrow evening in there fine plays with the assistance of Mr. Barberet, a splendid actor. 'Twill be delightfully enjoyable and we hope see a large attendance.

A. J. Douglass, Esq., of Columbia City delivered a very fine address last evening at the new school house to a large and appropriate audience. Mr. Douglass is a man of marked ability, a close student and an excellent speaker.

Maine holds her State election on the 5th and Vermont on the 11th of September. The Republicans are not stating how much the majority will be, for fear they may over-estimate the thing in their playful glee.

The old reliable store of Casebeer & Miller, was re-opened last week, and they done an immense business on Saturday. The re-opening of this house adds largely to the attractions of Auburn, and we are glad to know that not a single store room is closed in the place

Mr. Williams and Voorhees will positively be here on Monday, providence permitting. For authority in making this statement we have a letter from Indianapolis from headquarters, and we advise those who want to hear them to be here on that day.

When Gen. Lee comes here again he wants to act as a gentleman, and not insult respectable chambermaids, and force them, by his dirty insinuations to leave the room, as he did while here. A nice specimen of a man to advise people how to vote.

JUST NOW.

It gives us pleasure to say that we are now at home, and will be delighted to see those indebted to us come in and cash up. We must have a little of the money due us without delay, and we positively decline to wait longer. This is to those who owe us. We must have money and we expect it from you.

The new school house at Garrett is to be large and commodious. The foundation is about finished and the brick work will be pushed forward rapidly.—It will be a handsome, substantial structure.

The Fort Wayne Gazette says, Mr. Williams saved the government about $100, in not allowing Congress lemonade It cost the last Congress $1,800, and this one nothing, and the difference is more than $100. But that is as close as we can reasonably expect our radical friends to get.

A saving of over $29,000,000 by a Democratic House opposed at every step by a Republican President and Senate is a satisfactory record. It will be of much value to Democracy in this Presidential canvass. It will more than counteract the bloody shirt arguments of Radical stay-at-home major generals.

S. S. Shutt, came all the way from Spencerville, to hear Gen. Lee speak for Hayes and Wheeler.—Republican.

Yes, and a sicker man you never saw. If you want to win Democrats get speakers who will not confine their remarks to abuse, and won't get drunk and attend dances on Sunday.

The Warsaw Indianian is the only paper on either side that we have seen, which does not believe that Speaker Kerr, was an honest man. We believe with the Ligonier Banner, that no dying man who can write so calmly of the approaching event could ever have been mean enough to sell a West Point cadetship.

The Radicals are circulating the speech of one Tuttle, of Iowa, who was fool enough to expect office under the Democracy in Iowa, and has just recently found out that by changing he will be on the winning side. In the meantime he is being landing to the skies, while their abuse of Julian and Farnsworth is shockingly renemous.

The Republicans go to either one extreme or the other Orth was as hot as a lime kiln, and now Harrison is as cold as a lizzard. In fact he has to wear kid gloves to keep his hands warm. In the meantime Mr. Williams wears his "blue jeans" and is not ashamed to meet those with whom he is in sympathy, the farmer and the laborer.

Twelve men nominated General Harrison for no other purpose than to subserve the interests of the Republican perty. So Friendly, the chairman of the Republican State Committee, says and he ought to know.

Honest Old "Blue Jeans" was nominated by the people, to subserve their interests, and not the interest of one party.

PETIT JURORS—The following is a list of the Petit Jurors for the September term of court:

G. H. Hoffman, E. H. Taylor, James M. Johnson, John Harvey, Byron Hadsell, Chas. Scattergood, Chas. Raut, Jr., Wilson D. Dancer, Frank Culbertson, William Gorrell, John McOscar, Chas. Eckhart.

Ben. Harrison's chief objection to the governorship is the small salary. He says he cannot live on a salary of less than $10,000 a year. Blue Jeans Williams being a more economical man, with plain habits, says he is contented with the present salary, will not feed his cow nor entertain his visitors at the expense of the State as Morton did. It appears that the republican leaders have promised to increase the governor's salary if Harrison is elected.—Goshen Democrat.

The innovation on the wooden row, by the erection of three splendid brick store rooms is a grand feature in the improvements of Auburn. The gentlemen interested have shown an enterprise that might be imitated by others to great advantage. Where is our friend Fluke. We see his corner still remains on the ragged edge, but we still hope he will catch the contagion and out do all others.

The neat and beautiful structure now occupied by the Bank, is the admiration of every one. There is not a Banking House in the State that will excell it. It is most excellantly arranged internally for the business, and its appartments are rich and tasty. A man of taste can accomplish a good deal when he can freely exercise it, and be economical at the same. Boss Shepherd developed some good taste in the improvements of Washington, but great heavings, see what it cost. Thirty-eight millions of dollars ought to beautify any city.

The harangue of Gen. Lee last Wednesday evening, was only a repetition of what he said at Waterloo. Being somewhat under the influence of Benzine he was hardly responsible for what he said His effort to throw dirt on the reform achievements of Gov. Tilden, was mere twaddle, and left a poor impression. Let these radicals say something about the reform that Gov. Hayes talks about in his letter, such as the kicking out of Bristow, Pratt, Jewell and others, and the elevation to position Chandler, who was repudiated by his own people, of Babcock, Schenck, Orth and others, and the people may pay some attention.

ORGANIZE.

We hope every effort will be made by the Democracy in every locality to effectively organize for the coming battle of reform against corruption. To organize is to work in unison, both jointly and separately, and get out every vote. It is only a short time 'till election day. Call a meeting, appoint your rallying Committees and do your duty. Don't sleep on your posts. Be wide-a-wake. Be vigilant. Be ready. Organize at once, and organize thoroughly.

The M. E. Church, of this place, will give a grand excursion to Saginaw and Bay City, next Wednesday, Sept 6th, only $3 for the round trip. This will be a delightful opportunity to see the beauty of the lake scenery, at small cost.—A fine steamer ride will be connected with the excursion. Train leaves here at 4:45 in the morning. A sufficient number of good passenger coaches will be furnished.

The radicals says, "Brains" against "Blue Jeans," insinuating that because Mr. Williams wears blue jeans, he has no brains. The farmer who wearily follows the plow, the mechanic penned up in his dirty shop, the laborer bearing his arm to the heat of the sun should mark how the wealth and aristocracy of the country is pointing to them in derision. Because you cannot while away easy hours in a law shop, and enjoy the luxuies of this life, you are characterized as ignorant, and your clothes are pointed to with scorn. Mark this when you go to the polls.

The "Press" copied an item from the Indianapolis "Journal" last week, which we know from absolute knowledge to be full of the meanest falshoods "A fellow named Moriarty a pet of Speaker Turpie, and appointed at his special request had drawn as "Speaker's clerk," a position not known to the law, five dollars per day upon warrants drawn by himself and signed by the speaker." Mr. Moriarty was appointed by ourself as minute clerk, and not as Speaker's clerk, and we appointed him to draw warrants as we had a right to do according to law As long as the "Press" copies from the "Journal" it may expect to fearfully misrepresent.

We served in the senate with Hon. J. D. Williams, present democratic candidate for governor, during the war and therefore took it upon ourself to flatly contradict the statement going the rounds of the republican press that Mr. Williams voted against mustering and sustaining our troops for the war. In his speech at Salem, Mr. Williams also nails this lie to the counter as follows:

"I hadn't been a candidate three weeks until the papers said I was a rebel sympathiser. The record don't bear them out in the assertion. While in the legislature I voted for every bill and contingent fund for defraying the expenses for carrying on the war—all voted for it."—Goshen Democrat.

The Republican party cannot be very well acquainted with the names of its men. We heard the name of Beecher announced in the convention on last Saturday as a candidate for Prosecutor, and were still more astonished to hear soon after the name Nippers mentioned.—Who are they, was the question, when it was discovered they meant Pinchin, our Abner. By the way we never saw Ab. look so well as he did in his regalia when Lee spoke. Could he have imitated a Comanche yell we could have believed we were on the far plains with Terry, such terrible impressions he made upon us. Darling Abner, "we see thee in our dreams"

Mr. Nimmons met with a serious accident at Waterloo, last Saturday. As he was driving in the gate at the Fair grounds with two horses, and a double seated carriage, in with Judge Best and his chileren were seated, the gate blew shut, which frightened the team, and they started, turning short and upsetting the carriage. They ran across to a tree in the west part of the ground, against which one of the horses colided, breaking its leg above the knee It was not the first time it ran away, but it proved the last, as it was bled to death to relieve its suffering. Mr. Best had presence of mind enough to hold the spring of the vehicle up as he struck the ground or perhaps one or two of the children might have been fatally injured. The carriage was considerably injured.

Amid the excitement for the Centennial, our citizens should not forget that great preparations are going forward for a splendid fair at Waterloo in October. The managers have so far been successful in making these annual meetings a success, and we believe the great interests of the farmer have been elevated and developed to the advantage of all. Then there is a familiar comming-ling of all classes, which gives these associations a social feature that must not be undervalued. People do not attend fairs because they have something to exhibit alone, but as much for the friendly greetings, the cordial shake of the hands, the pleasantness that everybody seems to carry to these places. It also affords an admirable opportunity for that relaxation from the cares of busy toil, and the daily strife of life. There is no good reason why the fair should not be a success because everyone owes it as a duty to himself and neighbor to attend and contribute all he can to that end.

GRAND RALLY.

—AT—

AUBURN, NEXT MONDAY!

SEPTEMBER 4, 1876.

Indiana's Favorite Son

Honest Old "BLUE JEANS!"

THE HONORABLE

J. D. WILLIAMS,

Our Candidate for Governor,

AND HONORABLE

D. W. VOORHEES

The most gifted Orator of the country, will be here to address the people.

Let every township come with large delegations. Let those who want to hear the live issues of the day discussed attend. Let this be the grandest rally ever known in the country.

An Emphatic Denial.

There are rumors concerning the candidate for Sheriff on the Democratic ticket which have never been publicly denied by himself or friends, (whether false or true we do not assert,) are certainly damaging to his "good name," and before the close of the campaign must be made clear and satisfactory in order to restore him to his full confidence, even of his party. The editor of the News must "be careful" how he challenges investigation.

The above item appeared in the Auburn Republican, of last week. We now furnish the following card from Mr. McClure, our candidate for Sheriff:

A CARD.

EDITOR COURIER.—I see by the last Republican that my enemies are working up a rumor affecting my character, and charging me with dishonesty. I take this time to most emphatically and unequivocably pronounce them false and untrue. The charge or insinuation that I appropriated to my own use, clover seed left for Mrs. Long in my barn by one Burns, is unqualifiedly false, and I hereby challenge and defy any one to bring proof to sustain such an assertion.

J. A. McCLURE.

There is a fair square denial, the inherent consciousness of an honest man. No citizen in DeKalb County, of whatever politics, who has even a limited acquaintance with Mr. McClure, will for a moment entertain the dirty, contemptible insinuations, for they have not dared to make a direct charge, with which they wish to black mail and defeat him for Sheriff. Now come on with your proofs, if you have any, or else acknowledge that they exist only in the imagination of irresponsible parties without character, or that good name they so delight to tarnish.

The fair at Fort Wayne promises to eclipse all former efforts of that association and arrangements are being made for a magnificient exhibition. The management is in new hands, under men of large and varied experience, men whose standing in life cannot fail to lend a prestige that will insure success. By a little extravagance last year the association became involved in debt, but by a rigorous course, and yet a liberal heartedness, that which seemed a mountain last year, will prove but a mole hill under a discreet management this season. A very new and attractive feature this year will be the Hippodrome on a mammoth scale. Rome in her varied games is to be reproduced in those fashionable pastimes that used to delight the Roman youth. Beautiful females decked in gorgeous costumes, with gaily caparisoned horses, in the regular war chariots which Tiberius used when he went forth to do battle, will be the great attractions. Four horses abreast darting around the arena and several such teams in active competition will make up a thrilling scene that none should fail to see. The Hippodrome has been engaged for three days at enormous expense, but we have no doubt that a liberal patronage will be extended.

DeKalb County Soldiers' Association.

Pursuant to previous notice the Committee of Arrangements met at Auburn, Aug. 29th, and took such steps as they deem necessary to make the re-union a grand success. In the opinion of the Committee Thursday would be a more convenient day for the reunion than Tuesday. Therefore the time was changed and the reunion will take place at Auburn, Thursday Sept. 28, 1876. The Committees will be announced next week, and the programme in due time.

COMMITTEE.

Corunna Items.

—Lafe Miller is taking in wheat and oats at a rapid rate. Corunna claims the largest wheat trade in the county.

—Dr. Mercer, nominee for Senator has a new drug sign.

—Edward Orr lost one of his fine sheep last week.

—James Finch has erected a new livery barn.

—R. Zacher has traded his stock of groceries to parties in Kendallville.

—M. Bowland, our next Recorder, has a girl that brought the scales down to twelve pounds.

—Uncle Geo. McMillen has erected a new meat market, where he will put in a refrigerator.

Judicial Elections.

Four years ago the Democracy of this district through its Central Committee, met at Goshen, and unanimously adopted the following:

WHEREAS. The Democratic and Liberal Republicans, held at Columbia City on the 6th day of August, 1872, referred the subject of the nomination of a candidate for Judge of 14th Judicial Circuit to the Central Committee, and, whereas James I. Best is now a candidate for that position, and, whereas, it is believed by this committee that the office of Judge should be kept from political influences, and all candidates for judicial positions should abstain from political and partisan controversies. Therefore, resolved, by this Committee, that no nomination be made for the office of Circuit Judge.

J. R. BAKER, Sec'y.

Did this resolution embody a sound principle four years ago? If it was right, then, why is it not right to-day?

T. Corwin Mays is "at home" again and the COURIER will now enter the campaign with vigor.—Waterloo Press.

Thank you. Now C. Kelly Baxter, we ask you to be fair in your vigorous campaign. You published that "infamous circular" about Tilden, and now we would ask you to publish the denial under Tilden's own name. If you have it not at hand, we give you the gist of it below.

Mr. Tilden, in a letter to the New York Evening Post, published Nov. 4th 1868, denied writing, signing, issuing, or authorizing the above letter. He said:

"No such paper was ever written, issued or authorized by me, or with any participation or knowledge on my part. I have read it for the first time in your columns. * * * *

Very truly yours,

This is only a specimen, however, of the sort of warfare resorted by the Republican press. Indeed, it is monopolizing the indecencies of the Presidential canvass. The Democratic press have treated the Republican candidates with exceptional courtesy and fairness. The names of Hayes and Wheeler are rarely mentioned; they are amible, unobtrusive gentlemen, almost without a record, and the Democrats are content to leave them undisturbed and unnoticed in the expositions of their party's crimes But the Republican press refuses to accord the same courtesy to the nominees on the other ticket. Tilden and Hendricks are not mere dummies; they are eminent statesmen, each with a long and brilliant record, and they are assailed with calumny on every side accused of crimes they never dreamed of, and defamed as men unworthy the confidence of their countrymen.

The Judicial and Senatorial Convention of the Republicans, at Waterloo, last Saturday was well attended, and that was its best feature. The nominations suit us very well being the very weakest on the list. The nomination of Mr. Rose for Judge, while he is a clever gentleman, is a sad commentary on ring conventions. Kinsely and Chapin who that know, of these gentlemen, but what will acknowledge their superior legal ability when compared with Mr. Rose. Where is there one important litigation, one clear important plea that he has ever made, one prominent case he has ever conducted in our courts? While the ability of Chapin and Kinsely has been recognized throughout the district, Mr. Rose has not even a local reputation for that legal acumen that qualifies a man for the bench.

But the nomination for Prosecutor is still more gloriously weak. The Republican last week said: "W. L. Penfield, Esq., candidate for the nomination for Circuit Prosecutor, has been doing some good work for the Republican cause in different parts of the State." As a reward for these and former services, as a recognation of his marked ability, of years of laborious study, and a continued and successful practice, he is thrust aside and is supplanted by a man who never had one hour's practice in our courts. The convention positively stood between the people and their intesests; their claims before the law when in nominated Mr. Bixler. Now, Mr. Bixler is a pleasant, agreeable gentleman, as we have met him many times in Washington, but as compared to Mr. Penfield in ability and legal experience he dwindles down to the merest shadow. For several years past Mr. Bixler has not even resided in the State, but has held a clerkship at Washington taking a few odd hours to read Blakstone. Will an intelligent community commit such a miserable piece of folly, by placing him in such a position. True he was a good soldier, but will experience in the army fit him for such an important post before the people?

The Senatorial convention did but little better. Mr. Lewis, a man of broad views and practical experience, one from the laboring masses, is set aside for a mere pill juggler, a village doctor, who has not even advanced to mediocre in his profession.

Sop that Cough.

No pulmonary complaint however obstinate, can resist the healing influence of Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound.—Nothing that we have ever sold acts so promptly and effectually in coughs, colds, hoarseness, sore throat, asthma and all diseases of the throat lungs and chest, leading to consumption. It is a certain cure for Hooping Cough and Croup Contains no opium and is pleasant to take.—Cough-worn victims whose lungs are racked and torn with paroxyims that threatened to choke them, find speedy relief in its use. Trial size 10 cents Ask for Dr. Morris' Syrup take no other.

A GARRETT SCANDAL

Love, Seduction and Abortion.

The Value of a Brother-in-Law.

A scandal that would do credit to New York or Washington, has invaded the glorious precincts of our prospective Garret. It don't seem to startle the citizens very much, however, and from their indifference one would conclude it to be a very tame affair. That would furnish material for neighborhood gossip in Auburn for an unlimited term, but what does the great expansive city of wonders care about such trifles. Pshaw, they may tickle the palate of small towns, but they are mere common-place affairs in a city.

A man by the name of Gregg, a sewing machine pedlar, duly married is the author of this mischief. An attractive Sister-in-law is an inmate of the household. The wife is ignored for the sister. An entangling alliance is the result. She is led astray and to prevent an exposure an abortion is produced, which has a nearly fatal termination. Gregg was arrested and taken before Justice Barne, where a change of venue was demanded and the case came to Auburn yesterday.

EX. GOV. BLAIR,

of Mich., will address the people at

BUTLER, IND'A.

Saturday, Sept. 16, '76

Every fair, candid man in the county should hear him on the issues of the day and we hope he will be greeted with an immense crowd.

EDITOR COURIER.—Will you allow me the privilege of addressing you through the columns of your well filled Journal upon a subject, which needs, I believe, but proper ventilation to bring about a result that will confer vast benefits on the land owners, farmers, storekeepers and in fact all who are residents along the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. running between Chicago Junction and Chicago.

I have observed as a constant traveler since the opening of the road into Chicago, and a frequent visitor to the towns adjoining, the entire absence of progress that is exhibited in most of the towns in question, and that apathy, want of energy and enterprise seem to pervade the storekeepers resident therein, so much so, that they are absolutely unmindful of an industry provided at their very doors, yet one which they allow to pass them by, to benefit other towns where residents possess that needed spirit and seize the golden opportunity offered to them.

The industry to which I allude is to be found in the free and enterprising use of the elevators that I have noticed at many of the stations on the road.—These elevators are, as I am informed, provided by the company at a large expense practically for the free use of shippers of grain, who has also provided for them routes and low rates to all the grain markets in the country viz: New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Toledo. At Baltimore are to be found "par excellence," the best elevators in America with a large fleet of vessels for the transport of grain to Europe. The grading of grain at Baltimore and Toledo has been proved to be very favorable and these markets, with the numerous advantages that they offer, are very desirable points for the trade referred to. There are besides numerous private interests along the line of the B. & O. road eager and willing to purchase for manufacture all the available grain that can be obtained with such facilities as these It occurs to me as strange that the storekeepers and others resident in these towns on the road, would allow this trade to pass thereby, to be bought up in adjoining towns, which thereby evidence the result by a steady progress.—Do they forget that in letting the grain pass them, they are loosing the trade of the farmers who sell it, for where the grain is sold, there, as a rule, are supplied the wants of the class referred to! Are they not aware that but little, if any capital is needed to enter upon this business, one into which I may observe, I would myself go, but that my hands are already too well filled? The Co's bills of lading are marketable, and advances are readily obtained on them. Let these gentlemen whose enterprise I would fain rouse to action remember, that for every load of grain purchased in their towns there is a sum of money little or much, expended either with them or their neighbors that thus new customers are added day by day that the commercial wants of the towns grow, that commercial men who are ever on the watch for a rising town flocked there and filled the hole that with fair and proper dealing, confidence is established and need I then observe that, with such a state of things, progress is rapid and fortune is sure to come to those who set the wheel going.

I do not go the length of Col. Sellers, who says of his speculation of mules that "there are millions it in;" but it is undoubtedly a certain road to fortune, if only treated with a clear head and a clever hand.

It is also worthy of mention that the Co. already referred to run lightning express cars twice a week from Chicago, for the conveyance of butter & eggs to New York and the attention of shippers should be given to this: New York affords them a market at all times and for any quantity.

I would take the liberty of suggesting to the farmers both in Ohio and Indiana the usefullness of cleaning their grain better than hitherto it has been done, as by attention to this, the grading of the grain is more easily done and the result is more favorable to the interests of all concerned.

You will, I am sure, join me in the wish to see the towns along the section of the B. & O. referred to, rise rapidly and to accomplish this it needs that energy on the part of the land owners farmers and storekeepers with unity of action for the common benefit of all.

I am Yours, &c,

AN OBSERVANT TRAVELER.

WIDDER GREEN'S LAST WORDS.

"I'm goin' to die," says the Widder Green,
"I'm goin' to quit this airthly scene,
It ain't no place for me to stay
In such a world as 'tis to-day,
Such works and ways is too much for me,
Nobody can't let nobody be;
The girls are flounced from top to toe,
An' that's the hull o' what they know;
The men is mad on bonds an' stocks,
Swearin' and shootin' an' pickin' locks,
I'm real 'fraid I'll be hanged myself,
Ef I ain't laid on my final shelf.
There ain't a creeter but knows to-day
I never was a lunatic anyway,
But, since crazy folks all go free,
I'm dreadful afraid they'll hang up me.
There's another matter that's pesky hard—
I can't go into a neighbor's yard
To say 'How be you?' or borrow a pin,
But what the paper'll have it in:
'Were pleased to say the Widder Green
Took dinner on Tuesday with Mrs. Keene;'
Or 'Our worthy friend, Mrs. Green, has gone
To Barkhamstead to see her son.'
Great Jerusalem! Can't I stir
Without a raisin' some feller's fur?
There aint no privacy—so to say—
No more than if this was the judgment day.
And as for meetin'—I want to swear
Whenever I put my head in there—
Why, even Old Hundred's spiled and one
Like everything else under the sun;
It used to be so solemn and slow,
Praise to the Lord from men bel-w—
Now it goes like a gallopin' steer,
High diddle diddle! there and here,
No respect to the Lord above,
No more'n ef he was a hand and glove
With all the creatures he ever made,
And all the jigs that ever was played.
Preachin', too—but here I'm dumb,
But I'll tell you what! I'd like it some
Ef good old Parson Nathan Strong
Out o' his grave would come along
An' give us a stirrin' taste o' fire—
Judgment and justice is my desire.
'Tain't all love an' sickish sweet
That makes this world nor t'other complete.
But, law! I'd better be dead
When the world's a turnin' over my head;
Sperits talkin' like tarnal fools,
Bibles kicked out o' deestrict schools;
Crazy creeturs a murderin' round—
Honest folks better be under ground.
So, fare ye well! this airthly scene
Won't no more be pestered by Widder Green."

THE SNOW FLOOD.

"They're up, I tell you, and out in force, and there will be blazing roofs, and blood spilling all along the Chinese frontier, from Kara Sou to Dostvernik. We are safe enough, of course, here in Kiachta, behind our strong stockades and brass cannon. But there is scarcely a post to the eastward that can be called secure, now the Mongols are over the border."

"Surely, however," said I, looking up from my desk and the invoice in which I was duly recording packages of black tea, coarse silk, the white, sonorous brass peculiar to China, and other imports from the Flowery Land, "the Mongols will content themselves with sweeping off some flocks and herds, and not venture on attacking the settlements. The Russian military power—"

"It's a far cry, as they say in my country, to St. Petersburg, or even to the Wolga," grimly rejoined the first speaker, whose name was Gilfillan. "These Tartar thieves know well enough that, short of Irkutsk, there are but some weak detachments to bar their way. Even the sotnia of Cossacks has been withdrawn, and, for the moment, the whole of Eastern Siberia lies at the mercy of the Mongols."

This was serious news to me, for although my colleague from the Land of Cakes was quite correct in his assertion that we were safe at Kiachta, a fortified position too strong to be attempted by the barbarian foe, there was one whose life I held dearer than my own, and who, should the tidings of a Mongol inroad be confirmed, might be exposed to sore peril.

I, Frank Richards, had been, during two out of the three years which I had passed in this out-of-the-way corner of the Russian dominions, a clerk in the firm of Merton & Paulovitch, the managing partner of which resided at Irkutsk, and was, as his name implies, like myself, an Englishman. Mr. Merton, however, was one of those Anglo-Russians of whom many are to be found in the higher mercantile society of St. Petersburg, and who have taken root, as it were, in the country in which the greater part of their lives have been spent. He was a man of considerable property, and as a member of the Fur Trading Guild was possessed of certain valuable privileges, which almost amounted to a monopoly.

It was with anger and annoyance that the rich merchant learned that his clerk was in love with his only daughter, Ellen, and that the sentiment was reciprocal. Mr. Merton, as was very natural, had other views for his daughter's establishment in life. He was always looking forward to the day when, leaving the active conduct of the business in younger hands, he should withdraw to the capital, where Miss Merton, as a well-endowed heiress, might very probably marry a count, or possibly a prince. It was a pitiful antithesis to such exalted visions that she should bestow her hand on a mere subordinate in the house of Merton & Paulovitch.

"I like you, Richards," the merchant had said to me, not unkindly; "and if you, and Ellen, too, will but be reasonable and promise to forget this folly—Ah! well, then, there is no help for it, I see."

And thereupon we parted. I was a good linguist, and well trained to the routine of business in that remote region, so that it was easy enough for me to obtain employment in a mercantile house at Kiachta, at a higher rate of salary than that which I had hitherto drawn. I doubt, however, if I should have cared to continue any longer in my self-imposed exile from the civilization of Europe, had it not been that I could not muster the resolution to tear myself away from a country of which Ellen Merton was still an inhabitant. Even this poor consolation was, it seemed, soon to be taken from me, for the gossips of the colony were unanimous that the ensuing winter was the last that would see the Mertons resident in Siberia.

And then, preceded by certain threatening rumors, to which scanty credence had been attached, there had occurred the Mongol incursion, prompted, as there was reason to suspect, by the Chinese authorities, of whose sentiments toward the rival empire pressing yearly closer to their extensive frontier, few doubts could be entertained by even the most optimistically disposed of the motley European community, Russian, German, Polish, and British, whose task it was to develop the great natural resources of this long-neglected corner of the earth. We were well aware that, in reply to diplomatic remonstrances, the Mandarins at the helm of state would disclaim all responsibility for the acts of a tribe of turbulent marauders, while at the same time they would chuckle slily at the injuries thus vicariously inflicted on the detested Fan Qui.

On the fourth day after the outbreak of hostilities, there arrived in Kiachta a group of Englishmen, engineers and Cornish miners, from a valuable mine on the farther bank of the Amour, the whole plant of which had been wantonly destroyed by the Mongol raiders. They reported the station of Cherinsk, with all its factories and dwellings, to be in flames, while the European residents, with such of their property as they could contrive to save, were slowly retreating, under the protection of a military escort, toward Irkutsk.

"Toward Irkutsk!" I exclaimed, incredulously; "you mean, surely, toward Kiachta. It would be running into the lion's mouth to attempt the long march over the open plains that lie between the northern end of Lake Bakal and the mountains at the headwaters of the Amour. No one in his senses would give such an advantage to the fleet-footed enemy."

But my informant was positive as to the route which the caravan of refugees from Cherinsk had adopted. A Cornish miner, dispatched thither to purchase powder for blasting purposes, immediately before the inroad, had rejoined his comrades with the news. It appeared that the decision, perilously unwise as it seemed to me, to select the longer and more northerly line of march, had been formed by Count Annenkoff, who commanded the troops, and who was a young man, new to the country, and over-confident in his own judgment.

Hitherto, it was added, the Mongol horsemen had contented themselves with hovering, like hawks on the wing, around their destined prey, keeping at a respectful distance from the rifled muskets of the soldiery; but there could be no doubt that they were waiting the opportunity, in some unguarded moment, of swooping down upon the camp, while the movements of the fugitives, encumbered as they were by a heavy baggage-train, and accompanied by several ladies and children, were of necessity slow. That Ellen and her father were of the company was all but certain.

I could no longer endure the safe inaction of life at Kiachta, and accordingly I formed a resolve which to many of my friends appeared rash and willful. This was, to make my way, as best I might, to the caravan, the tardy pace of which would readily be overtaken by a well-mounted rider, and to persuade Ellen and her father rather to trust themselves to my guidance back to Kiachta, than to persevere in the arduous march that otherwise lay before them. Thanks to my love of field sports, and to a certain restless spirit of adventure, I had an acquaintance with the country for many a league around, having repeatedly accompanied Tartar hunters on their expeditions in quest of the elk, the bustard, and the antelope of the plains. I was excellently mounted, and felt that, should I fall in with the enemy, their shaggy ponies would not easily come up with my fine Turcoman steed from the distant deserts of Khiva. And of hunger, and thirst more terrible than hunger, those gaunt guardians of the steppe, there was not much risk. I was to traverse a country watered by many streams, affluents of the Amour, and where the provident care of the Russians had caused wells to be dug in the drier portions of the plain. The nomad tribes, with whom even the Mongols would not interfere, on the principle of dog not eating dog, were friendly enough to give me food in exchange for silver roubles, and the weather was as yet fine and mellow, although the season was winter.

The first long day's march brought me to a cluster of black felt tents, conical in shape, pitched on the bank of a shallow brook, while hard by grazed the sheep and buffaloes that made up the only wealth of the horde. I rode up to them without fear—for these ramblers through the plains of Eastern Siberia have little harm in them—and recognized in the headman of the camp an old acquaintance, who spoke a little Russian, and often brought in lambskins, yaourt, and wild strawberries to the market at Kiachta.

"I would not push on were I you, Gospodin," said the white-bearded patriarch, as he set before me the simple fare—milk, cheese, and mutton kabaubs, skewered on a twig of the arbutus—that he had to offer. "They were here with us yesterday, some hundreds of the light-fingered rogues from across the frontier, and it cost me ten fat sheep, and many fair words, to coax them into good behavior. They had two white men's heads, set on spear points, for their standards, and their leader swore by the Holy Tooth not to go back to Mongolia, without silver enough to plate the shrines of his joss-house. They're after the poor folks from Cherinsk by this time; not that they've any more fancy for the whistle of a leaden bullet than other people have."

The gift of a golden eagle, and the promise of two more coins of the same mintage, induced the headman to send with me a barefooted lad of his tribe, who would, I was assured, prove quite competent to conduct me to a place whence I could easily overtake the caravan, and also to keep up with my horse at any pace short of a gallop. And young Kasim (how he came by his Moslem name I can not tell, for all these tribes of the border are Buddhists, like the Mongols beyond it) ran gallantly beside my stirrup over weary leagues of grazing grounds, and stretches of stony barrenness, till at length he stopped, pointing triumphantly to a number of footprints, of horses, oxen, camels, and men, stamped into the half-dried mud of a shallow watercourse, and with a wave of his hand toward a distant wreath of blue smoke, sure sign of a bivouac fire, he received from mine the glittering eagles, wrapped the gold in a scrap of raw sheepskin and thrust it into the salt-gourd that dangled by a thong from his waist, and then, with a grin of leave-taking, trotted off homeward.

I had not ridden half a mile toward the camp fire, before I saw, approaching me, at a lumbering amble, ungainly enough, but swift and silent, some two-score of laden camels, urged on by four horsemen whose lances and the black Tartar caps they wore suggested their nationality as Mongolian. Two of them, as soon as they espied me, dashed at me with loud execrations and cries of, "Feringhee! Rusky! kill! kill!"

My revolver was out in a moment, and the sight of it produced some effect on the wild riders, for they wheeled off to right and left, galloping round me in circles, still brandishing their spears, until a third horseman spurred forward, calling out something which seemed as if by magic to suspend their murderous intentions, and then rode quietly up to my side, and held out his bony hand for me to shake.

"Brother!" he said, in a strange jargon of mingled Turkish and Russian; "very good friend, Batuschka! Has English lord forgotten poor Sing-Si?"

I looked at the man's broad, flat face, and did indeed recognize a Tartar of the name above mentioned, whom I had, a year before, bought off, at an expenditure of some six shillings sterling, from a Cossack patrol about to hang him on a dwarf oak for being captured, redhanded, as a sheepstealer. He had since then worked for us, as a porter, for some months in Kiachta, but the vagrant instinct was too strong in Sing-Si, and he had thrown up his employment and fled to the steppe.

The other three Tartars became amicable enough when they found that their companion hailed me as a friend, and I gathered from the rascals' talk that they had been acting as guides to the Cherinsk caravan, and had seized an opportunity of making off with forty camels and their loads, with which, as I made out, they intended to join their cousins the robber Mongols. All this Sing-Si, whose moral fiber was of the coarsest, related as an excellent joke; but when he learned that I was on my way to join those whom he had just deserted, his countenance assumed a graver expression.

"Hark ye, English Lord," he said, cautiously, as the others began to goad on their camels with blows and lance-pricks, "we of the steppe love a friend as we hate a foe. Sing-Si does not want his former protector to leave his bones to bleak on the plains, with those of yonder unbleached ones;" and he shook his fist at the far-off smoke; "and, sure as death, their shroud is spinning fast."

"What do you mean?" I asked, anxiously.

"I mean," hissed out Sing-Si, putting his ugly face close to mine, "that we of the old Tartar stock have no cause to be fond of the Muskov, and a pretty trick we have played them. Hist! did you never hear of the snow-flood?"

I had, in the course of my residence in Siberia, heard vague stories of such a phenomenon of the far northern steppes, and I nodded, waiting to hear more.

"The Russians will feel it soon," chuckled Sing-Si; "the blind moles! Already the wind is from the north, already the threads of the Fatal Spinners span the sky, and we have led them where there are no mountains to break the fury of the blast; no barrier to check the rush of the white wave that shall overwhelm man and beast. Away, Englishman, whip and spur, as you love your life, for even here you are not safe; and ride to the left, mark me, westward, to the shelter of the hills. As for me, I go."

And, spurring his rough pony, off he clattered in pursuit of his party. I rode at a brisk hand-gallop toward the camp fire. The snow flood! There crowded on my mind all the tales that I had ever heard, of caravans, of solitary hunters, or of detachments of troops, overtaken by the resistless drift on those illimitable plains, where not a tree, not a hillock, existed to stem the violence of the wind. And as I sped on, I felt convinced that Sing-Si's warning was a true one.

On reaching the encampment I found my predictions of impending evil received very much as were those of Cassandra in old Troy. Count Annenkoff, a vain young officer, with a supreme scorn for the civilians and foreigners, ridiculed my advice, and declined to regard my informant Sing-Si as anything but a scoundrel who had absconded with a portion of the baggage.

"Excuse my incredulity, mon cher," he said coolly, "but your snow flood, as you phrase it, appears too nearly related to Sinbad's Valley of Diamonds, and the other contes of the Thousand and One Nights, to command credence; and I shall use my own discretion as regards the route to be followed."

The other Europeans, if less supercilious, were almost equally deaf to all the arguments which I could urge. None of them had witnessed, though all of them had heard of, the fell force of that snowy tempest to which the Asiatics had given so picturesque a name; and none were willing to run the gauntlet of the prowling Mongols in order to elude a danger which might prove mythical. But Ellen, who believed in me because she loved me, used all her influence with her father, and with such good effect, that Mr. Merton yielded a reluctant consent to have his own and his daughter's horses re-saddled, and to set off, under my guidance, in the direction indicated by Sing-Si.

As we left the camp, lighted by a broad full moon that bathed the steppe with silvery brightness, I observed that the northern sky was growing very dark, and that the long filaments of gray cloud had become knit together, as though the Valkyrs were indeed busy at the loom of death. The wind also, blowing in fitful gusts, had become piercingly cold, and our very horses snorted and sniffed the air as though they scented the approach of some viewless peril.

By the time we had ridden, as I guessed, some two miles from the halting-place, the northern sky had darkened still more, and the low sobbing of the desert wind had swelled into a shriek, while the temperature was perceptibly lowered, so that Ellen shivered, more from cold than fear. We pressed on. Mr. Merton, as I have said, had been unwilling to take my counsel, in opposition to the scoffs and remonstrances of his friends, but now he said, in an altered tone:

"I begin to think, Richards, that you and the Tartar were right. God bless you for your unselfish kindness, my boy, whatever comes of this."

Before I could reply, a terrified outcry from Ellen's lips made me turn my head, just as the first quick snowflakes came whirling down, and there, behind us, throwing before it, as it came, a ghastly gleam of light, came from the north a shapeless whiteness, rolling pitilessly on.

"The snow! the snow!" we exclaimed, as with one voice, urging on our affrighted horses to their fullest speed, while behind us, like the tide rising fast over the sands of the seashore, swept on the white wave, burying beneath it, as it advanced, bush, and mound, and watercourse, and blotting out every feature of the landscape to the northward.

Then began a race indeed, the alarmed horses straining every sinew to outstrip the pursuing fate; but with all our speed the drift gained upon us, and presently we found ourselves plunging and floundering, up to our saddle-girths, in snow. The moon's radiance was now totally obscured, but afar off, to the westward, my eye had caught the ruddy glow of a fire such as charcoal-burners kindle among the hills, and never did storm-tossed mariners watch the welcome beacon of some harbor more eagerly than did I this saving light.

The fire, as I had conjectured, was burning high up on one of the wooded spurs of the mountain range near the sources of the Amour, but to reach it was no trifling task. Our exhausted steeds, worn out by the toilsome passage through the snow, could scarcely be urged to fresh exertions, while the rush of the deepening flood, and the blinding showers that dashed into our faces, threatened at each instant to overwhelm us. We reached the Amour at last, down the swollen current of which were whirling masses of snow, and here Ellen's horse fell, and could not be raised, while that of Mr. Merton, gasping and spent, no longer answered to the spur.

"Save yourself, Frank! leave us! why should all perish?" groaned the merchant.

There was some strength and spirit yet left in the gallant Turcoman that I bestrode, and snatching up Ellen's light form in my arms, I spurred into the river, and struggling through, deposited my precious burden on the turf beyond, under the shelter of a rocky boulder. I then recrossed the ford, and bidding Mr. Merton to cling tightly to my horse's mane, for the third time breasted the current, and half swimming, half wading, we got through, though on the farther bank my noble horse reeled and fell, with a faint, low neigh, and so died. The carcasses of the others were already buried beneath the driving snow.

The rest of our story—how, after some fatigue, we scaled the rocky ravine where stood the hut of the charcoal burners, and how these rough but kindly beings warmed and fed us, and finally enabled us to reach Kiachta in safety—is a tale of mere commonplace hardship. I have been for years the happy husband of Ellen, and a junior partner in the thriving house of Merton & Paulovitch, although our sphere of business has been removed to a less romantic region than that of Eastern Siberia. Of the fate of Count Annenkoff and the caravan under his charge no survivor ever returned to head-quarters to tell the tale. —All the Year Round.

Stunned by Lightning.

Mr. Styles Whiting, a butcher of Stratford, Conn., and his nephew Jewell, aged 15 years, having bought an ox in Bridgeport, started with their horse and buggy to drive the ox to Stratford. The clouds of a thunder-storm hung in heavy black masses close to the earth, and lightning played constantly about their heads. After they had made about half the distance there came a sudden blinding flash; the clouds were all aflame, and Mr. Whiting fell unconscious. When consciousness returned he found himself on his back in the road, about ten feet from the wagon. He arose and saw his nephew about eight feet away lying still and senseless, and apparently dead. He shook the boy roughly for several minutes ere the latter recovered. Mr. Whiting next went to the horse, which lay on its side in the road-bed in the place at which the bolt had descended. With great exertion Whiting and the boy aroused the animal. Not twenty feet away the ox was found on its side seemingly dead. It finally recovered, and the party went on to Stratford. The strange feature of the accident is that neither the man, the boy, the horse, nor the ox were injured in the least.

The Fenian Escape.

The escape of the Fenian prisoners from Freemantle, Australia, on the New Bedford whale-ship Catalpa, set the whole colony by the ears. The news of the delivery was hailed with delight by the people, while the authorities grimly made effort to retake the convicts. The latter had put to sea in a whale-boat, and the police-boat and the Catalpa opened a lively race for the possession of it. The American ship had the advantage, and swooping down gathered up the prisoners and put to sea. Next day the Georgetta took up the pursuit, and, overhauling the Catalpa, Supt. Stone demanded the return of the six escaped convicts to the Governor of Western Australia. The master of the Catalpa raised the American flag, and uttered notes of defiance. Supt. Stone pointed to a man standing with a lighted match in his hand, at the side of his gun, and announced that, unless the prisoners were given up, he would fire into the American ship and sink or disable her. There was no sign of capitulation, and Supt. Stone, remarking that his Government would communicate with the authorities at Washington, blew out his match and went home.

Sheep Statistics.

According to the most trustworthy authority, the present number of sheep in the United States is about 37,000,000, yielding an annual clip of wool of 150,000,000 pounds. The number of sheep slaughtered for mutton yearly is about 7,000,000. The capital invested in sheep and sheep husbandry in the United States is over $250,000,000. The annual product of these sheep is about $90,000,000. This is not a large exhibit for a country of the size and population of the United States. Brazil has 70,000,000 sheep; the British Islands, 34,500,000. England is the greatest sheep-producing country in the world in proportion to its cultivated land. The Spanish proverb, "The hoof of the sheep is gold," is true with the British, for they receive annually from their sheep the sum of $150,000,000.

Last year, during a comparatively cool summer, there was a continuous out-cry about mad-dogs; during the present unusually hot term hardly a case of hydrophobia has occurred.

The steamer Sumatra took out from San Francisco twenty-six Chinese lepers on a recent trip.

SITTING BULL.

Reminiscences in the Life of "Bison," the Rough-and-Ready Cadet—The Man Who Beats Our Generals.

[Correspondence Baltimore Gazette.]

Is Sitting Bull a West Point graduate? This question is asked in sober earnest, with the view of eliciting information, there being reasons for believing that this formidable warrior and so-called savage, now occupying so much of public attention, from the unquestioned skill and extraordinary courage with which he has met our soldiers, is really a graduate of the military academy. There may be some foundation for the reports as to his reading French and being familiar with the campaigns of the great Napoleon. Graduates of West Point, between 1846 and 1850, will remember a new cadet of both singular and remarkable appearance, hailing from the western borders of Missouri, who reported for duty in 1845, 1846 or 1847. Above medium height, apparently between eighteen and twenty years old, heavy-set frame, long bushy hair, growing close to his brow and overhanging his neck and shoulders, his face covered with thin patches of white fuzzy beard, the general get-up of this plebe was such as to cause the old cadets to hesitate in the heretical jokes usually played off on new cadets. Nicknames are often applied to cadets that they carry with them among their friends into the army, and even to their graves. The thick neck, broad shoulders and long, bushy hair caused the name of "Bison" to be applied to the new comer, and it adhered to him ever afterward. The West Point course he learned with ease, graduating in the upper third of his class. He had no disposition to be social, kept to himself, talked but little, and was never known to either smile or laugh. During hours of recitation he did not mingle with his classmates, but was often seen in solitary walks around the plain or scaling the neighboring mountains even to their very summits. He was often out of his quarters after night, eluding successfully the vigilance of sentinels and officers, visiting the neighboring villages in quest of strong drink, but never seen under its influence until after he had graduated.

This remarkable character passed his graduating examination creditably, received his diploma, but, before doffing his cadet gray, visited the village of Buttermilk Falls, below West Point a short distance, got intoxicated and became involved in a broil, in which stones and sticks were used freely. Several of the participants were badly hurt, and the Bison himself much bruised. This conduct was regarded so unbecoming and discreditable that, on the recommendation of the Academic Board, he was refused a commission in the army. He was heard of three times after leaving the Academy, once at Galveston, Tex. There he had a terrible fight with with some desperadoes, and was forced to leave. He was next seen on one of the California steamers, and going upon the western coast he got into an altercation with the officers of the steamer and was placed under guard down in the hold and made to work. The third and last time, as far as we know, he was seen and recognized under the following circumstances: In 1858, about ten years after the Bison had graduated, Lieut. Ives, of the topographical engineer corps, was engaged in making an exploration and survey of the Colorado river, emptying into the Gulf of California. While engaged in this work he would quite often leave his boat in the afternoon and go on shore and bivouac till morning. On one of these occasions a party of Mohave Indians came into his camp, and, after talking some time in Spanish, the chief said, in English: "Ives, do you know me?" The Lieutenant was startled at hearing his name called so distinctly in English by this naked and painted-face chief; he replied that he did not, and asked the chief where he had learned to speak English so well. The chief replied: "Never mind that; but do you know me, Ives?" The Lieutenant scanned closely the huge painted chief, with feathers in head, rings through his nose and ears, and again answered the the chief that he did not, and again asked the chief where he had learned English, and how did it happen that he knew him. The chief replied that he did not wonder at his not knowing him, as his change of nationality had brought with it a great change in habits, dress and appearance, and then added: "I am the Bison. We were together at West Point. I have, with this little party, been watching you for several days. My band wanted to kill you and your little party, but I told them we had better wait, and see, and try and talk; that we might do better than kill you. I have made them understand that after you have left and gone back trade will spring up, and we can then do better by trading or robbing the boats loaded with goods and supplies of all kinds." The Indians retired and were seen no more, nor did I bivouac on land any more. A year or two before this Capt. Lyon (killed in the late war), of the army, had a desperate fight with the Indians on an island in the Colorado river, the Indians supposed to have been commanded by the Bison. He was successful for years in raiding on the settlements and extending as far off as Arizona. It may be, and we think it probable, with the settlements extending from west to the east, and from east to west, and the Indian area diminishing constantly, that this Indian chief may have gone as far north as the Black Hills, and may be even the veritable Sitting Bull, for to the close observer Sitting Bull has shown as much skill and judgment as an educated, civilized soldier could have done. It would not be strange if Sitting Bull proves to have have been educated at West Point, and it seems to us probable that such is the case.

Sullivan's Defense.

Alexander Sullivan, clerk of the Chicago Board of Education, who recently murdered a school teacher, in that city, will not plead temporary insanity. His lawyers will adopt the theory that the fatal shot was fired in retaliation for the alleged striking of his wife. The widow of the dead man has stated that she will not proffer legal assistance to the regular prosecutor, but will depend on the justice of the court and the regular procedure of the law.

THOUGHTS AT A RAILWAY STATION.

'Tis but a box of modest deal,
Directed to no matter where;
Yet down my cheeks the teardrops steal—
Yes, I am blubbering like a seal;
For on it is this mute appeal—
With care.

I am a stern old man, and range
Apart; but those vague words, With care,
Wake yearnings in me sweet as strange;
Drawn from my moral Moated Grange,
I feel I'd rather like the change
Of air

Hast thou ne'er seen rough pointsmen spy
Some simple English phrase, With care,
Or This side uppermost, and cry
Like children? No? No more have I,
Yet deem not him whose eyes are dry
A bear.

But ah! what treasure hides beneath
That lid so much the worse for wear?
A ring perhaps—a rosy wreath,
A photograph by Vernon Heath,
Some matron's temporary teeth
Or hair.

Perhaps some seaman in Peru
"Or Ind hath stow'd therein [illegible]
Cargo of birds'-nests for his Sue;
With many a vow that he'll be true,
And many a hint that she is too,
Too fair.

Perhaps—but wherefore vainly pry
Into the page that's folded there?
I shall be better by and by!
The porters, as I sit and sigh,
Pass and repass—I wonder why
They stare.

A Georgia mule was struck by lightning and knocked insensible, and while lying on the ground another current came along and killed the animal—which proves that lightning does strike twice in the same place. And it is absolutely necessary when it wants to kill a mule.

A popular preacher recently, in his sermon, did a wise thing by inducing people to look on the sunny side of things. He said (and doubtless spoke after a careful search to confirm his statement) that the word "worst" appears only once in the Bible.

During the gale at Nova Scotia, a barber took a stroll to witness the destruction in process, and while contemplating the ravages of the storm some one came running up to him and exclaimed, "You have more need to be at home; your shop's blown down!" "Good man," coolly replied the barber, "how can that be, when I've got the key in my pocket!"

A young clergyman, modest almost to bashfulness, was once asked by an apothecary, of a contrary character, in a public and crowded assembly, and in a tone of voice sufficient to catch the attention of the entire company, "How happened it that the patriarchs lived to such extreme old age?" To which question the clergyman replied, "Perhaps they took no physic."

When a man, coming down to breakfast half awake and his uncertain feet shod in a a pair of slip-shod slippers, steps on a spool on the first step, he is generally wide-awake enough by the time he tries to break the last step to have a very vivid and not entirely incorrect idea of the power and indestructible force generated by the Keely motor. But that isn't what he talks about when he goes into the breakfast room and the folks ask him what made such a noise in the hall.

A RHYMED RIDDLE.

"I'm going to blank," with failing breath,
The falling gladiator said;
Unconquered, he "consents to death;"
One gasp—the hero-soul has fled.
"I'm going to blank," the schoolboy cried;
Two sugared sweets his hands display—
Like snowflakes in the ocean tide,
They vanished, melted both away.
Tell with one verb, or I'll tell you,
What each was just about to do.

"Succumb," the gladiator groans,
And breathes away his life with moans;
"Suck 'em," the schoolboy cries with glee—
You needn't, Doctor Holmes, tell me.

Just after dinner, yesterday, a boot-black secured a customer near the Soldiers' Monument, and had just commenced to shine the first boot when a man came along, jerked off his coat, and declared that he would punch the head of the fellow whose boots were being beautified. The latter was ready for a muss, and there would have been a fight if the bootblack hadn't been equal to the occasion. He blew his police whistle as hard as could, and two policemen came up on the run. One of them praised the boy for his promptness in preserving the peace, and the lad replied: "There was my job half done, and if they'd had a fight where would my nickel have gone to? When I saw my fellow getting red behind the ears, I thought of the poor-house, and blew till my hat lifted up!"—Free Press.

A Summer Shower in Colorado.

It was a regular waterspout. All at once the heavens seemed to open over the hill, and a solid sheet of water, which seemed to be about a quarter of a mile square, descended with almost the force of a stream forced through an eight-inch hydraulic pipe. Unfortunately the occupants of Stevens' block were not prepared for it, and the result was that the water poured down against the buildings like a river, and came with such force that in a moment one whole end of the room burst out, the back wall was washed in, and the water rushed through like a mill tail, to the depth of about two feet, carrying an immense amount of mud. Considerable water rushed through other houses on Main street. —Trinidad Pioneer.

STANLEY AFRICANUS.

Private Letter from the Explorer—An African Village—The Explorer's Hut and [illegible]—What Has Been Accomplished.

[From a private letter dated Knapshyi, Lake Victoria Niyanza, May 15, 1875, and published in the Boston Journal.]

Knapshyi is a straggling village of cone huts, twenty or thirty in number, which are built somewhat in the form of a circle, hedged round by a fence of thorn twisted between upright stakes. Sketch such a village in your imagination, and let the center of it be dotted here and there with the forms of Kidlings who prank it with the vivacity of Kidlings under a hot, glowing sun. Let a couple of warriors and a few round-bellied children be seen among them, and near a tall hut, which is the chief's, plant a taller tree, under whose shade sit a few elders in council with their chief. So much for the village. I am sure you will know it if you come this way. Now outside the village, yet touching the fence, begin to draw the form of a square camp, about fifty yards square, each side flanked with low, square huts, under the eaves of which place as many figures of men as you please—for we have many—and you have the camp of the Anglo-American expedition commanded by your friend and humble servant. From the center of the camp you may see the Lake Victoria, or that portion of it I have called Speke Gulf, and twenty-five miles distant you may see table-topped Magita, the large island of Ukerave, and toward the northwest a clear horizon, with nothing between water and sky to mar its level. The surface of the lake, which approaches to within 100 yards of the camp, is much ruffled just at present with a northwest breeze, and though the sun is glowing hot, under the shade it is agreeable enough, so that nobody perspires or is troubled with the heat. You must understand that there is a vast difference between New York and Central African heat. Yours is a sweltering heat, begetting languor and thirst; ours is a dry heat, permitting activity and action, without thirst or perspiration. If we exposed ourselves to the sun we would feel quite as though we were being baked.

Come with me to my lodgings now. I lodge in a hut but little inferior in size to the chiefs. In it is stored the luggage of the expedition, which fills one-half. It is about six tons in weight, and consists of cloth, beads, wire, shells, ammunition, powder barrels, portmanteaus, iron trunks, photographic apparatus, scientific instruments, pontoons, sections of boat, etc. The other half of the hut is my sleeping, dining and hall room. It is dark as pitch within, for light cannot penetrate the mud with which the woodwork is liberally daubed. The floor is of dried mud thickly covered with dust, which breeds fleas and other vermin, to be a plague to me and to my poor dogs. I have four youthful Mercuries, of ebon color, attending me, who on the march carry my personal weapons of offense. I do not need so many servants to wait on me, but such is their pleasure. They find their reward in the liberal leavings of the table. Did they not minister to me they know they would have to subsist on their rations, and black youths have such capacity of distension in their stomachs that would shame the veriest glutton in Europe. If I have a goat killed for the European mess, half of it suffices for two days for us. When it becomes slightly tainted my Mercuries will beg it and devour it at a single sitting. Just outside the door of my hut are about two dozen of my men, squatted in a circle and stringing beads. A necklace of beads is each man's daily sum wherewith to buy food. I have now a little over 160 men. Imagine 160 necklaces given for food each day for the last three months; in the aggregate the sum amounts to 14,400 necklaces; in a year it will amount to 58,400 necklaces. A necklace of ordinary beads is cheap enough in the States, but the expense of carriage makes a necklace here equal to about 25 cents in value. For a necklace I can buy a chicken or a peck of sweet potatoes, or half a peck of grain. I left the coast with about 40,000 yards of cloth, which, in the States, would be worth 12½ cents per yard, or altogether about $5,000; the expense of porterage as far as this lake makes each yard worth about 50 cents. Two yards of cloth will purchase a goat or a sheep, thirty yards will purchase an ox, fifteen yards is enough to purchase a day's rations for the entire caravan.

These are a few of the particulars of our more domestic affairs. The expedition is now divided into eight squads of twenty men each, with an experienced man over each squad. They are all armed with Snyder's and percussion-lock muskets. A dozen or so of the most faithful have a brace of revolvers in addition to their other arms.

We have had four battles since we left the coast. The first occurred in Iturn with a desperate set of savages, rivaling the Apaches in ferocity and determination. The battle lasted three days. I lost twenty-one men killed. Their loss was thirty-five killed and some hundred or so wounded. Twice we made a clean sweep through their country, burning and destroying everything we came across, and would have liked to exterminate the wretches had not my mission required my duty in another direction.

On water we were as successful as on land; but, as God is my judge, I would prefer paying tribute and making these savages friends rather than enemies. But some of these people are cursed with such delirious ferocity that we are compelled to defend ourselves. They attack in such numbers and so sudden that our repeating rifles and Snyders have to be handled with such nervous rapidity as will force them back before we are forced to death; for if we allow them to come within forty yards their spears are as fatal as bullets. Just think, I had twenty-one men killed in one day and but one wounded! The spear makes a frightful wound, while their contemptible-looking arrows are deadly weapons. I have, for the sake of experiment, sent an arrow almost clean through a bullock at twenty yards, and the arrow-head is so barbed and gashed that if a man is wounded a large piece of tortured flesh must be cut out ere it is extracted. We had a narrow escape lately. We were but twelve in our boat's crew, the savages several hundreds. As they came down to attack I ordered the boat to be shoved off, which was done so rapidly that with the impetus they had given it they were themselves carried into deep water, and only myself in the boat. I had to keep the beach clear of the rascals, and I emptied my elephant rifle, double-barreled shot-gun and revolvers at them, while the men swam with the boat off shore in a water infested with crocodiles. None of us, thank fortune, were injured, but each of us had some narrow escape to relate from whizzing spears and arrows.

Since I left Zanzibar I have traveled 720 miles by land, and 1,004 miles (by computation) by water. This, in six months, is good work. Over 100 positions settled by astronomical observations—for you must know that from the very day I got my commission I strenuously prepared to fit myself for geographical work, in order that I might be able to complete Speke, Burton, Baker and Livingstone's labors, which they left undone. Now Speke's work is done. What he commenced I have finished. I do not know whether you comprehend the drift of this expedition, but I will explain.

You must know that Speke, in 1858, came to the southwest end of Lake Victoria, and from a hill near the lake he discovered the vast body of fresh water. Having gazed his fill he returned to England, and was commissioned to find its outlet. In 1861 and 1862 he marched from Zanzibar to Ugawa, where he saw the lake again. At the Ripon Falls he saw the lake discharge itself into the Victoria Nile, and went home again, imagining that he had done his work. If his work was merely to find the outlet of Lake Victoria, he completed his task; but if his task was to discover the sources of the Nile, he had but begun his work. He went away without discovering the feeders of Lake Victoria, which in reality are the Nile's sources—extreme southern sources, I mean. Then Baker came to Central Africa and discovered Lake Albert. He voyaged sixty miles on the lake, and he ran home also without knowing anything of the lake's sources. Burton went to Tanganyika, saw it, and returned home without knowing its extent, outlet or affluents. Livingstone came next to the chain of lakes west of Tanganyika, and died nobly in harness. Well, we are sent to complete what these several travelers have begun. While they are content with having discovered lakes, I must be content with exploring these lakes and discovering their sources, and unraveling the complications of geographers at home. It is a mighty work, but a fourth of that work is already done. Until I can say I have done the half, I bid you farewell.

Beating the Barbers.

A man who had been nearly talked to death by loquacious barbers went into a shop the other day and handed one of the artists a card bearing the words: "Give me an easy shave."

The barber motioned him to a chair, and then turning around winked at his fellow-laborers and said: "Here's a deaf and dumb 'un, boys, wants an easy shave." "Well, if you gash him he can't talk," replied one who was waiting for "next." "No, you bet he can't," returned the first. "An easy shave be blowed! Why, he's got bristles like a Texas boar, and his skin looks tougher than a canal mule's."

The boys laughed, and the operator, who in the mean time had lathered the man's face, indulged in further comments as he urged the razor over the facial territory before him. "What a nose that is," said he. "If he should sneeze, where would I be?" "Well, his cheek is harder than a razor hone." "Do you want us to help hold his nose while you go over his lips, Johnny?" asked another of the idle razor wielders. "Don't know but what I will want a little help." "Be careful don't drop your razor down his ear or you'll lose it," admonished another. "What a dirty head he's got," observed Johnny, as he ran his fingers through the man's hair. "I say, some of you fellows write a card and ask him if he don't want a shampoo." The card was written and presented to the man, who shook his head at it, and, the job being finished, he arose from the chair.

"It's all right, boys," said he, as he laid down 15 cents. "I don't mind your talk any, I could stand it first rate so long as you didn't say anything about base ball, third term, or the whisky ring frauds." He disappeared, and those barbers sat down and thought about him.—Providence Journal.

Electricity as a Motive Power.

Daniel M. Cook, of Mansfield, Ohio, proposes to prove that electricity can be generated in quantities sufficient to take the place of all other methods of utilizing motive power at a merely nominal cost; and not only that, but that it can be used in lighting cities and dwellings, and for purposes of supplying heat. He refuses to divulge the means employed to generate the electric fluid. Mr. Cook estimates that he can furnish the electricity required to maintain one thousand telegraph stations fifty years for $100,000, and leave a handsome margin for profits out of this sum. And not only all this, but he expresses a belief that he will be enabled to navigate space by means of machines propelled by the same force, and in proof of this he says he has sent chunks of iron through the roof of a building into the air out of sight, and, in his opinion, clear beyond the influence of gravitation into the ether beyond.

[illegible]ause of Coughs.

An Italian (according to Les Mondes) attributes cough to the presence of a parasitic fungus in the air passages. In grave cases this parasite multiplies and reaches into the lung cells. Quinine has the property of stopping the development of microscopic fungi, and is therefore adapted as a remedy in the present case. Dr. L. has used with success the following powder: Chlorhydrate of quinine, 1 part; bicarbonate of soda, 1 part; gum arabic, 20 parts. The bicarbonate of soda is meant to dissolve the [illegible] gum arabic to increase the adheren[illegible] the bronchial passages. The in[illegible]tion (blowing in) of the powder should take place during a deep [illegible] of the patient, so as to faci[illegible]tration into the windpipe, which [illegible] principal seat of the microscopic fungus.

THE WAR IN THE EAST.

Attitude of the European Powers—The Obstacles to Immediate Intervention.

[From the New York Tribune.]

Servia may rapidly succumb to the force and the newly-aroused fanaticism of the Turkish armies, or she may succeed in prolonging her resistance until help comes from other quarters; but the struggle is no longer localized, as it seemed to be. It disturbs every Cabinet of Europe at this moment. It may be well, therefore, to glance briefly at the real interest which the question presents to each of the Great Powers, and which must always be borne in mind, whatever may be the policy temporarily avowed.

Russia, in the first place, has never been able to conceal her enmity to Turkey, or her ambition to possess Constantinople. Her great allies are her National church, which is that of the East, and the kindred Slavic blood of millions of Turkish subjects. She is not so impatient as to force her opportunity, because the best chances are already in her hands. Just now, she would prefer peace to war, if she could increase, or even preserve, her prestige by peace. Her seeming indifference to mediation may be chiefly designed to force England to take the first step, which, after the attitude of the latter power toward the Berlin Conference, would be a fine diplomatic revenge.

Germany has little or no direct material interest in the question. She would probably favor the policy of Russia, were she sure that the ambition of the latter is turned solely toward Asia, and that she were not thereby giving strength to some later combination against herself. She knows that France is still coquetting with Russia; that the Czarovitch is intensely anti-German in his sympathies; and further, that Russia is regarded with suspicion or dread by half her own population. The aggrandizement of Austria at the expense of Turkey would hardly be opposed by the German empire; for the reason that any event which tends to give a Magyaro-Slavic character to Austria as a nation separates her the more from her German provinces, and increases the chances of their final attachment to the empire. Germany's course, therefore, is dictated by the necessity of guarding herself against future dangers which may come through a combination of France with Russia or other powers.

Italy considers the Eastern question mainly with regard to Austria. She does not wish to see a strong rival occupying the opposite shore of the Adriatic—not, as now, holding the narrow line of coast, but possessing all the western provinces of Turkey. Singularly enough, the Pope and the Italian Government are in accord; for the former is said to regard the triumph of the Oriental "schismatics" (as they are terms in the Vatican) as being worse than the continuance of Moslem rule. But Italy is not, as yet, an important political factor; and she will undoubtedly accept any device which may temporarily restore peace.

England and France occupy relatively the same position as when they united to save Turkey, in 1854. But they are now confronted by a very different crisis. France has a new and powerful interest to consult—that of revenging herself upon Germany—and this changes her attitude toward Russia. Therefore, although she and England might succeed in agreeing upon an Eastern policy, so far as regards Turkey and its population, a wider complication of interests would probably separate them. In England, moreover, the popular sympathy for Turkey, artificially kept alive so long, is at an end. There must be—and will be—a relinquishment of that cold-blooded diplomacy which overlooked the late horrible barbarities in Bulgaria. The necessity of intervention is not only so strong, but also so earnestly felt by the people of England and the Continental nations, that we cannot doubt it will be speedily forced upon Europe. Turkey may still offer to accept this, or refuse that—she will have no alternative but to take what is presented. The difficulty lies not so much in forming a satisfactory plan of pacification as in uniting upon the necessary guarantees for its enforcement. If Turkey is unable to control the fierce prejudices of her population, Europe must undertake the task for her. This, we suspect, is the stumbling-block in the way of immediate intervention.

Indian Agents.

Being interviewed by a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, Gen. Brisbin, commanding the Second cavalry, thus answers the question—"What makes the Indians so bad?"

Utter cussedness, pure and simple. It is born and bred in them, and the natural instinct of the savage to steal and murder is encouraged by the Government. It sends out men who are to act as agents of the Indians and carry out treaty stipulations, but most of these men spend their time in defrauding, demoralizing, and abusing the Indians in every conceivable manner. I do not believe one-half, possibly not more than one-fourth, of the supplies annually voted by Congress ever reach the Indians.

The abuses that are perpetrated by these agents are perfectly shameful, and still it goes on from year to year, and there appears to be no relief from these public thieves. Why, if I were an Indian I would whet my tomahawk and and sink it into the brain of the first white man I met. If one has to choose whether he will die by starvation or fall fighting, he had better fight for his rights like a man than starve like a dog.

Personally, I know of but one really honest agent, Dr. James Irwin, for the Shoshones and Bannocks. Many years ago I was in command of the Wind river district, and these Indians had a fine reservation, ninety by eighty miles. On one occasion they rendered signal service to the Government and settlers by helping the troops to drive out the hostile Sioux, and I resolved that as long as I lived they should never need a friend to redress their wrongs. They had a dishonest agent, and I wrote to Washington and urged his removal. Afterward, when in Washington, a certain Senator pitched into me, saying the agent was his friend. I told the Senator that his friend was a scoundrel and a thief, and he ought not to sustain him. It was a long time before the dishonest agent could be removed, but it was finally accomplished. While I was up there in the Wind river country the chief, Washakie, came to me one day and said some white men were coming upon his land, selling whisky, and demoralizing his people. I examined the treaty and found by its terms that white men were not allowed to settle upon or even travel across the reservation without permission from the Government. There were then forty-six white men upon the reservation who had no business there, and I at once issued an order giving them fifteen days in which to leave. One band of desperadoes on the North Fork of the Popoagie defied me, and I sent Maj. Gordon with his cavalry to drive them off the reservation, and told him if they resisted to cut them to pieces. A few days afterward I was relieved of command of the Wind river district, though I was assured my being relieved had nothing to do with my enforcement of the treaty. I do not know that I am right in supposing so, but I have always believed if I had not issued the order expelling the white thieves from the reservation I would have been left there.

England and Her Monkey.

Some diplomates in Paris were talking about the Oriental question, and one of them expressed a wonder as to what England would do eventually in regard to Turkey. The Persian Ambassador said: "England will do as the monkey did." The Persian told how a learned man of the good old times, wishing to test the power of maternal affection in a she-monkey, took one, with a young monkey, and put both in a high, large tin box, which box was placed over the fire, where it gradually heated. When the box began to be hot the poor monkey seized the little monkey in her arms and jumped and danced about on the hot floor of the box. At last the floor was so hot that all her leaping was of no use. Then what did mother monkey do? She took her baby monkey, put it down upon the floor and stood on it! The poor little fellow roasted, but her feet no longer burned. Up to the present England has shown a mother's heart toward Turkey; but when the fire becomes intolerable she will cook her young monkey."—Rome Letter.

Modern Women.

It is a sad commentary upon our boasted civilization that the women of our times have degenerated in health and physique until they are literally a race of invalids—pale, nervous, feeble, and back-achy, with only here and there a few noble exceptions in the persons of the robust, buxom ladies characteristic of the sex in days gone by. By a very large experience, covering a period of years, and embracing the treatment of many thousands of cases of those ailments peculiar to Women, Dr. Pierce, of the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y., has perfected, by the combination of certain vegetable extracts, a natural specific, which he does not extol as a cure-all, but one which admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most positive and reliable remedy for those weaknesses and complaints that afflict the women of the present day. This natural specific compound is called Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. The following are among those diseases in which this wonderful medicine has worked cures as if by magic and with a certainty never before attained by any medicines: Weak back, nervous and general debility, falling and other displacements of internal organs, resulting from debility and lack of strength in natural supports, internal fever, congestion, inflammation and ulceration, and very many other chronic diseases incident to women, not proper to mention here, in which, as well as in the cases that have been enumerated, the Favorite Prescription effects cures—the marvel of the world. It will not do harm in any state or condition of the system, and by adopting its use the invalid lady may avoid that severest of ordeals—the consulting of a family physician. Favorite Prescription is sold by dealers in medicines generally.

WILHOFT'S ANTI-PERIODIC OR FEVER AND AGUE TONIC.—This invaluable and standard family medicine is now a household word, and maintains its reputation unimpaired. It is indorsed by the medical profession, and prescribed daily in the Charity Hospital and other Hospitals in New Orleans. Wilhoft's Tonic is thus highly recommended by the leading medical men of the country, and is worthy of such indorsement. G. R. FINLAY & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

CHAPPED hands, face, pimples, ringworm, saltrheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and rough skin made soft and smooth, by using Juniper Tar Soap. Be careful to get only that made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, as there are many imitations made with common tar, all of which are worthless.

A GENTLEMAN in the eastern part of the State, who was about having his leg amputated on account of its being bent at right angles, and stiff at the knee, heard of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. After using it a short time his leg became straight, and is now as serviceable as the other.

A GREAT many people have asked us of late, "How do you keep your horse looking so sleek and glossy?" We tell them it's the easiest thing in the world; give Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders two or three times a week.

ASK any druggist, for the best Ague cure, and he will give you Schallenberger's Pills.

VEGETINE has never failed to cure the most inveterate case of erysipelas.

MANY who are suffering from the effects of the warm weather and are debilitated, are advised by physicians to take moderate amounts of whisky two or three times during the day. In a little while those who adopt this advice frequently increase the number of "drinks," and in time become confirmed inebriates. A beverage which will not create thirst for intoxicating liquors, and which is intended especially for the benefit of debilitated persons, whether at home or abroad, is Dr. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic. Containing the juices of many medicinal herbs, this preparation does not create an appetite for the intoxicating cup. The nourishing and the life-supporting properties of many valuable natural productions contained in it, and well known to medical men, have a most strengthening influence. A single bottle of the Tonic will demonstrate its valuable qualities. For debility arising from sickness, over exertion, or from any cause whatever, a wine-glassful of Sea Weed Tonic taken after meals will strengthen the stomach and create an appetite for wholesome food. To all who are about leaving their homes, we desire to say that the excellent effects of Dr. Schenck's seasonable remedies, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, are particularly evident when taken by those who are injuriously affected by a change of water and diet. No person should leave home without taking a supply of these safeguards along. For sale by all Druggists.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 60 per cent. is added to price: the impor has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and whol

COMSUMPTION CURED.

AN old physician, retired from active practice having had placed in his hands by and East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering he will send free of charge to all who desire it this receipt with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp naming this paper.

No pulmonary complaint however obstinate, can resist the healing influence of Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound.—Nothing that we have ever sold acts so promptly and effectually in coughs, colds, hoarseness, sore throat, asthma and all diseases of the throat lungs and chest, leading to consumption. It is a certain cure for Hooping Cough and Croup Contains no opium and is pleasant to take.—Cough-worn victims whose lungs are racked and torn with paroxyims that threatened to choke them, find speedy relief in its use. Trial size 10 cents Ask for Dr. Morris' Syrup take no other.

Think for yourself.

Thousands lead miserable lives, suffering from dyspepsia and disordered stomachs and liver, producing biliousness, heartburn, costiveness, weakness, irregular appetite, low spirits, raising food after eating, and often ending in fatal attack of fever. They know they are sick, yet get little sympathy. The unfailing remedy, which is yearly restoring thousands, is Dr. Costa's Radical cure. Sold by F. E. Davenport, the Druggist, Cor. Main and Nineth streets. A 25c bottle will convince you of its merits. Don't delay another hour after reading this, but go and get a bottle, and your relief is as certain as live. Will you do it, or will you continue to suffer? Think for yourself!

Professor Parker's Pleasant Warm Syrup is perfectly safe and extremely palatable. No physic required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

Fowler, the phrenologist, is describing Hayes's bumps. The biggest "bump" will come in November.

All that the Republican party has any idea of doing in this canvass is to protest that it is not responsible.

They called for the Hayes and noes, down in Alabama, and most everybody voted "no."—Detroit Free Press.

Zack Chandler has inaugurated Gov. Hayes' idea of reform. He has issued instructions to clerks in his department for an assessment of 20 per cent. on all salaries of $1,200. This money is to go to the Republican campaign fund, and all clerks who fail to rally are to be immediately discharged.

The earnest cry for work in this city and elsewhere is the legitimate result of sixteen years of misgovernment, suicidal tinkering with the financial question, and general corruptions in the departments under Republican control. What we need is something more than the temporary assistance usually asked for—we need to cleans the fountains from which the evils have sprung.

It would be a pretty thing to undertake to repudiate Grant when Hayes is writing him confidential letters concerning the inside management of things. Such communications, too, look very much like reform, do they not? even the inside reform that was promised. Allowing that it could be done, this would be the first time that a political party repudiated the Administration on which it still relies for success.

Gov. Tilden will surround himself with men who will reflect credit upon the country which they serve, and will zealously guard and honorably discharge the trusts confined in them. The public officers who will not be disturbed in the enjoyment of their places, are those have proved their qualifications for the work required of them, and are willing to except the will of the people, in the ordering of those who employ them.

The country is determined to rid itself of every vestige of Grantism, and the only manner in which this can be accomplished, is to remove from office every man who has been instrumental Grant is doomed; but Gen. Hayes as President and the present horde of Grantites carrying on their despicable work of plunder and murder in the various departments of the service, Grantism would live and flourish.

Some of the Republican papers charge as a crime against Gov. Tilden, that when he takes office as a Chief Magistarte of the United States, he will begin his work of reform by removing every officer-holder in the country. There can be no doubt that such will be the case so far as regards the dishonest and incapable; but where a fitness for the duties of the office is displayed, there is no reason to apprehend wholesale removals on account of politics.

Gov. Tilden's War on the Canal Plunders.

Towards the middle of March, 1875, it became generally excepted as a fact in political circles that Gov. Tilden was preparing to begin a vigorous and effective campaign against the Canal Ring, and that he would shortly address a message to the subject. The Times thus anticipates the Governor's action:

[N. Y. TIMES, March 15, 1875.]

The Governor's message on Canals is said to be nearly ready, and it is reported to be a document calculated to spread dismay through the ranks of the Canal Ring. * * * * * As a political power in the State, the Canal Ring has been steadfastly opposed to him in the past, and he has certainly nothing but hostility to expect from it in the future. "His (Tilden's) natural antipathy to administrative" corruption will therefore be strengthened on this occasion, etc., etc.

Gov. Tilden's message was transmitted on March 19th. The Alabama correspondent of the Times thus describes the effect of Gov Tilden's famous message to the Legislature, on the Canal frauds

[N. Y. TIMES, March 20, 1875.]

ALBANY, March 10, 1875.

The campaign against the Canal Ring is fairly begun, and the first advance upon that stronghold of fraud and corruption was made by Gov. Tilden, who sent his anxiously looked-for message on this subject to both Houses of Legislature to-day. The document is a strong one, but is not to be deemed inexhaustive on the subject. A perfect state of panic exists among all those who have been and are involved in the matter. Since the contents of the message have become known, it is everywhere admitted that no such assault had ever before been made on this Ring and that its "momentum" was too great and too direct to be either resisted or averted.

The Bayonet in the Election.

Grant has seized the first moment after the adjournment of Congress to show his hand; and the people of the country can see that it grasps a bayonet, the point of which is turned toward the Southern States.

It is a feeling not of alarm, but of indignation, that will be raised throughout the land by the military order that was yesterday issued from the War Department to Gov. Sherman. It directs the General of the army to hold all the available military force in rediness to be used for the support of the Fifteenth Constitutional Amendment, and for the punishment of those who may attempt to interfere with the rights therein guaranteed. It directs him to have the military force so distrbuted as to be able to act with promptitude; and it informs him that he will receive other instructions from time to time concerning this business.

The order means that ten or twelve thousand troops of the regular army are to be concentrated in the Southern States—in those of them which have been, or, without this order, would surely be, wrested from Grantism in November next. They will doubtless be stationed mainly in Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama and South Carolina; and it is not improbable that, before the election, the Southern Department will be put in charge of Gen. Sherman, who has had some experience in the kind of work he will be called upon to perform.

Reform is Necessary.

The reduction in the public expenditures secured by the Democratic House of Representatives at the late session, will materially lessen the burden of taxation the coming year. It must be remembers that the Republican senate refused to assist the House in reducing the appropriations, claiming that the reduction proposed would cripple the government, and were revolutionary in their nature. The two Houses finally came together with the following result:

Appropriations 1874-5, $177,303,280.71.
Appropriations 1876-7, $147,719,084.85.

Reduction .... $29,584,395 as the people's money in one session under Democratic rule, when every obstacle known to trained and unscrupulous politicians was thrown in the way at every step, ought to satisfy the people the Democratic profession of reform is not a "barren ideality," but a living issue that will be carried out to the letter. In the appropriations was not only the only place where reform was inaugurated. Uncle Jimmy Williams, our candidate for Governor, as chairman of the committee on accounts materially reduced the expenditures under his control. In 1872, the cost of the folding room where documents are prepared and sent out, was $109,519.89. Under a Democratic House with Mr. Williams as chairman of the committee on accounts, the cost of the folding room was $69,791.21, a saving of $39,728.68.

Mr. Williams inaugurated another species of reform which we give. In 1872, under Radical rule, the committee clerks of the House cost the government $87,049.77. Under the administration of Mr. Williams, as chairman of the committe on accounts, this cost was reduced to $20,891.00, a saving of $16,156.76.

The above figures are correct, and taken from the records and certified to by the clerk of the House, as the certificate appended below will attest.

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug., 10, '76

HON. J. D. WILLIAMS, SIR:

In answer to your verbal inquiries of this date as to certain expenditures of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, I have the honor to state that the total amount expended during the period named for folding documents and for pay of clerks to committees is respectively as follows For folding document, $69,791.21, for pay of clerks to committees, $20,891.00.

Very Respectfully,
GEO. M. ADAMS,
Clerk House Representatives.

Mr. Williams introduced reform in many other expenditures. He cut off the supply of ice-tea, lemonade and other fluids, which members of congress had been supplying themselves with at the public expense of many years past without authority of law. He informed them that if they wanted soap and towels, hair bushes and combs pocket knives and autograph books, they must buy them and pay for them out of their own pockets, the same as other people. The Democracy have declared that "reform is necessary," and wherever they have the opportunity they have shown by their works that they intend to carry it out to the letter.—Plymouth Democrat.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE week ending Saturday, Aug. 26, was the most prosperous one of the Philadelphia Exhibition. The whole number of paying visitors during the week was nearly 250,000, and the cash receipts were about $108,000. Saturday, the 26th, was a 25-cent day, and the number of paid admissions was nearly 100,000....We now have another phase of the suit of Moulton vs. Beecher for alleged malicious prosecution. Counsel for the latter gentleman have applied for a change of venue on the ground that in the present conflicting state of public opinion in Brooklyn as to the merits of the controversy between these gentlemen it will be impossible to obtain an impartial jury....Coal has declined about $1.50 per ton in the New-York market.

THE Molly Maguire prisoners, Mundey, McGehoon, Carroll, Roarity and Boyle, who were recently convicted of the murder of Policeman Yost, at Tamaqua, Pa., have been sentenced to death....In view of the improved demand for prints, the Sprague mills, in Rhode Island and in Maine, and the Connecticut Print Works, which have been idle several weeks, will start up at once....A dispatch from Milford, Pa., says that "extensive forest fires are raging in the mountains on the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware river, near Pond Eddy. A vast amount of valuable timber-land has been burned over and the timber destroyed. The people are fighting the fire day and night."....The American Hosiery mills, at Amsterdam, N. Y., have been destroyed by fire. Loss, $80,000.

FABULOUS gains in oil, recalling vividly the outbreak in '64, are reported from the oil regions. A sudden demand from abroad, or some other unexplained cause, has run the price of the oleaginous staple up two and three dollars above the usual rates. Those who held stock have cleared enormous profits, one lucky holder as high as $600,000, while a score followed after in big bonanzas.

THE attendance at the Philadelphia Exposition is steadily increasing, and is likely to increase every week during the remaining two months, as people no longer feel afraid of encountering such hot weather as prevailed earlier in the season....Jesse Pomeroy, the Boston boy-fiend, has had his sentence commuted from hanging to imprisonment for life....A terrible prize-fight was fought the other day at Pennsville, N. J., between two human brutes, named Weeden and Walker, in which the latter was killed, his face being beaten and pounded till semblance of humanity had departed. Weeden, the conqueror, was a blacksmith in a foundry, and Walker was his helper. They were warm personal friends, and yet were led on by roughs and thieves to the contest which has made one a murderer and a fugitive, and laid the other in a dishonorable grave.

THE WEST.

JAMES MURPHY, a boy of 19 years, was hung at Dayton, Ohio, on Friday of last week, for the murder of William Dawson, in September, 1875. When the trap was sprung the first time the rope broke and the criminal fell to the floor. It was at first thought that his neck was broken, but it proved otherwise, and in three minutes' time the prisoner was a second time walked upon the death trap. The rope was then doubled, and in an instant he was dangling in the air and making a desperate struggle for life, but after a few contortions his limbs settled and the boy's soul had fled....Dispatches from the army operating against the Sioux Indians seem to leave little doubt that active field operations are about over for the season, and that the campaign will end without inflicting any direct punishment upon the savages for the butchery of Custer and his men. Gen. Miles, at last accounts, was engaged in constructing winter quarters for a regiment or two at the junction of the Tongue river with the Yellowstone, and it was considered possible that he might pick up a fight with a portion, at least, of the wild bands who are supposed to be pushing toward the Canadian border. But the probability of anything of this kind is slight. The pursuit of the principal trails of the savage hosts had failed, though further efforts were to be made to run down some of the bands. If these do not succeed, Terry's force will turn their faces eastward, leaving a strong garrison at the Tongue river post, while Crook, it is understood, will follow the trails leading to the agencies, beat up the camps of the predatory bands who infest the Black Hills roads, and move generally southward in the direction of Fetterman. The cut-throat savages who left the agencies are supposed to be all, or nearly all at home again, or on their way thither, while Sitting Bull and the untameables will get out of the way northward by the best routes open to them.

AT a Republican meeting in Raymond, Montgomery county, Kan., a few evenings ago, a keg of powder accidentally exploded while firing a salute, and John Banze was instantly killed, and Joseph Dodson, James Sharp, and Sylvester Kesslinger mortally wounded. On the same day Mrs. Issender and Mrs. Wright were thrown out of a buggy while riding in Louisburg, Kan., and killed....A shocking tragedy was recently enacted near Greenfield, Ind. A man named Jeremiah Reedy had a fight with his his son James, which ended in the father killing the son. The young man was lying on the floor, when the old man commenced striking him with a buggy whip. Some words ensued, when they got into the front yard, when a desperate encounter took place, the old man striking his son on the head with the edge of a sharp ax, inflicting a ghastly wound, from the effects of which he died in about two hours. As usual in such cases, whisky was the cause of the difficulty.

A GENTLEMAN who recently arrived in St. Paul from Winnipeg says that a prominent fur dealer of the latter city has just closed a contract with Sitting Bull for 25,000 pounds of rifle powder, to be delivered in five-pound packages, to be paid in furs during the coming winter. This seems to indicate that Sitting Bull contemplates an aggressive spring campaign. To confirm this idea, it is rumored that 3,000 braves have been detailed by Sitting Bull to hunt buffalo in the far west for a supply of provisions.

THE city of San Francisco was visited by a disastrous conflagration on the night of the 29th ult. The large block bounded by Brannan, Townsend, Third and Fourth streets, was swept away, and over 200 poor families turned out of doors. The loss will aggregate about $500,000. One fireman was killed and several injured during the progress of the fire....The boiler of a steam threshing-machine, at work at the farm of John Harris, near Lone Jack, Mo., exploded the other day, killing George Cobb and a young man Powell, and seriously injuring James Steward, John Harris, and a man named Potter.

ADVICES from Hays City, Kan., state that a water spout burst in Kill Creek Valley, Osbern county, one day last week, and flooded the entire bottom in about fifteen minutes. Horses and cattle, crops, etc., were swept away, and Mrs. Brighton and her two children and Mrs. Green were drowned.

THREE men were instantly killed and six more seriously injured—one of them fatally—by the explosion of a steam engine which was running a threshing-machine on the farm of C. B. Jones, four miles south of Dover, Minn., one day last week....A courier who left the camp of Crook and Terry on the 20th of August, at the mouth of Powder river, arrived at Fort Fetterman last week. The command was then on a trail which was estimated at 10,000 ponies. Camp-fires indicated seven distinct bands. There is reason to believe that the Indians are almost destitute of food, and traces left in the deserted camps indicate that they are reduced to the extremity of using raw hides for food. All the Snake allies have gone home, the Crows remaining. Gen. Crook fully expected to strike Sitting Bull in a few days....Advices from the Black Hills state that the Indians raided the road between Custer and Deadwood on the 20th of August and killed Weston Smith, a minister, and three miners named Ike Brown, Polline, and Mason, carrying off their stock. On the 22d Indians made a raid on a party five miles south of Custer City and killed James Kidd, Samuel Wallace, Jacob Welliy, and Thompson. The Indians are supposed to be Northern Sioux from the hostile camp on the road to the Agencies. Jones says the country is full of Indians....Four miners, Fred Henekauff, Sr., John Cox, August Shankerkauff, and Frederick Shankerkauff, Jr., were suffocated by foul air, in a shaft near Central City, Col., a few days ago. Shankerkauff descended into the shaft to prospect, with a view to resuming work on it. His protracted absence led his father to follow him, and the other victims followed the father. All were dead before relief could be brought.

THE SOUTH.

HON. JOSEPH R. UNDERWOOD, ex-Senator of the United States from Kentucky, died recently at Bowling Green, in that State, aged 86 years. He served in the Senate from 1847 to 1853....A Savannah (Ga.) dispatch records the destruction by fire of Kelly's block, four six-story buildings, Stoddard's upper range, three five-story buildings, Kelly's shed and wharf, the upper works of a schooner, and twenty-five bales of cotton. The loss is $200,000.

ADVICES from Decatur, Tex., say: "Rev. W. G. England, a Methodist minister, his wife, a step-daughter, and four sons were murdered at their home, six miles from Montague, last Saturday night, by a party of disguised men. The particulars of the fiendish affair have not been received, but it is supposed that the butchery was committed for money, as the family is rich."

WASHINGTON.

DIRECTOR LINDERMAN, of the United States Mint, reports that all the mints are now running on subsidiary silver coins to their full capacity, and that the monthly coinage of silver will be about $2,500,000. Since the passage of the silver act the amount of fractional currency presented for redemption has steadily fallen off. At first the daily average presented for redemption was nearly $100,000. In July it was $65,000, and the Treasurer estimates that in September it will fall below $60,000. The Philadelphia Mint alone can supply enough small coin to meet this demand.

THE Secretary of the Treasury has ordered that the Printing Bureau be hereafter closed to visitors.

THE new 4½ per cent. loan bonds are now being prepared by the Treasury department. They will be of the denominations of $50, $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000, and $10,000. Interest will be payable quarterly on the first days of December, March, June, and September. They will be free from taxation of all kinds; principal and interest will be paid in coin, and these conditions will be set forth on their face. The bonds first to be called for redemption in 4½ per cent. bonds are the five-twenties of 1865, interest on which is now payable in May and November, and of which there are now outstanding $150,558,650.

THE Washington Monument Society, which, under a charter from Congress now holds possession of the unfinished shaft in this city, and everything relating to it, held a meeting the other day to consider the appropriation of $200,000 by Congress at its late session and the conditions imposed by that law. The society decided to give a deed of transfer to the Government relinquishing possession of the monument and its surroundings, and drew and signed the document to that end. The monument has thus far cost about $2 0,000, and is only a third finished.

POLITICAL.

THE Republicans of the new State of Colorado held their convention at Denver, last week. John L. Routt was nominated for Governor, Lafayette Head for Lieutenant Governor, and James Belford for Congress.

CONGRESSMAN CLYMER has been nominated for re-election by the Democrats of Berks county, Pa.

THE New York Democratic State Convention was held at Saratoga on the 30th and 31st ult. Horatio Seymour was nominated by acclamation for Governor. Lieut. Gov. Dorsheimer was also nominated by acclamation for re-election. The remainder of the ticket is made up as follows: Judge of the Court of Appeals, Robert C. Earle; Canal Commissioner, Darius A. Ogden; State Prison Inspector, Robert H. Andersen....The Connecticut Republicans, in convention at New Haven last week, nominated the following ticket for State officers: Governor, Henry C. Robinson, of Hartford; Lieutenant Governor, F. J. Kingsbury, of Waterbury; Secretary of State, Gen. F. A. Walker, of New Haven; Treasurer, Jeremiah Olney, of Thompson; Comptroller, Eli Curtis, of Watertown. Ex-President Theodore D. Woolsey, of Yale college, and Hon. Marshall Jewell, were nominated for Presidential electors-at-large....The Democrats of Iowa held their State convention at Des Moines on the 30th ult. The nominations are as follows: Secretary of State, John Stuberauch, Marion county; Treasurer, Wesley Jones, Des Moines county; Auditor, William Groneneg, of Pottawattamie; Judges of the Supreme Court, Walter J. Hayes, Clinton; William Graham, Dubuque; Attorney General, J. C. Cook, Jasper county; Register of the State Land Office, Capt. N. C. Ridenour, Page county....The Democrats of the First and Second Ohio Districts (Cincinnati) have renominated Messrs. Sayler and Banning for Congress....Hon. Bela M. Hughes has been nominated for Governor of Colorado by the Democrats.

GENERAL.

ONE hundred and fifty masons and stone-cutters sailed from New York for Scotland, the other day, under contract with John Coghill, to work on the parochial buildings in Greenock. They are to receive 10 pence per hour for eight hours a day. One hundred and fifty more will follow in a short time.

THE funeral ceremonies over the body of the late Speaker Kerr, at New Albany, Ind., on the 25th of August, were of the most impressive character. All business was suspended, and emblems of mourning were to be seen on all the public and many private buildings. The cortege was composed of the civic societies of New Albany and neighboring cities, members of the city governments of Louisville, Jeffersonville, New Albany, and many prominent persons from other parts of the country, the procession being one of the largest of the kind ever seen in that city.

IN pursuance of the recent order of the President, the following transfers of troops in the South have been ordered: Three companies of the Second infantry from the Department of the Gulf to the Department of the South; the Sixteenth infantry, now in Kentucky and Tennessee, to Louisiana and Mississippi; companies A and E, Eighteenth infantry, from Atlanta, Ga., to Edgefield, S. C.; company K, Eighteenth infantry, from Greenville to Lawrenceville, S. C.; company E, Fifth artillery, from Summerville, and company H, Eighteenth infantry, from Columbia, to Blackville, Barwell county, S. C.—all to go into camp at the points named with sixty days' rations....The great celebration of the Swiss of America begun in the judges' hall at the Centennial grounds, Philadelphia, on Saturday, Aug. 26, Gen. John A. Sutter, of California, presiding. The exercises consisted of instrumental and vocal music, and an oration by Capt. John R. Millman, of Baltimore, which was replied to by United States Minister Howe, of Wisconsin. In the evening the delegates proceeded to the Schuetzen park, at the falls of the Schuylkill, where a banquet was given. Sunday the celebration was continued at Schuetzen park, when an interesting programme was given.

IT is stated from Washington that "Gen. Sherman is of opinion that the Sioux are tired of fighting, and are ready to make terms. Sitting Bull's not making any effort to prevent a junction between Terry and Crook is an indication to him that he is not going to fight any more, but is now ready to make the best terms possible."

UPON the call of its President, Gen. Sherman, the tenth annual meeting of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee will be held in Washington, D. C., on the 18th and 19th of October next.

THE American Association for the Advancement of Science has just held a very interesting session at Buffalo. The next meeting will be held at Nashville, Tenn....A Toronto dispatch says: "The great drought throughout the province has given rise to many bush fires. Live stock is suffering in many places for want of water, and others are driven long distances to obtain it."

FOREIGN.

THE soundings for the Channel tunnel to connect England and France have been completed. The engineers report the result as very satisfactory....A Belgrade telegram to the London Times, dated Aug. 26, says it is "almost certain that the war is about at an end. The Servians are ignorant of the fact that their Government is suing for peace. The news of Tchernayeff's victory is spreading like wildfire, and there is great rejoicing. Success at this time is unfortunate, as it will be made use of by the war party, but it may help Servia to secure better terms."...The steamship C. F. French, bound from New York to Antwerp, was recently destroyed by fire on the coast of Holland. Total loss in vessel and cargo estimated at $400,000.

A DANGEROUS conspiracy against the existing Government was recently discovered at Pampeluna, Spain. Two sergeants of the Spanish army were found guilty of high treason, and immediately shot. Some disturbances occurred at San Sebastian, but were at once repressed.

A LONDON dispatch says Mr. Schuyler's preliminary report of his investigation into the outrages in Bulgaria, addressed to the Minister of the United States at Constantinople, fully confirms the worst that has been told of the atrocities. Mr. Schuyler found that much of the slaughter was done by the regular Turkish soldiers, and he denounces the report of the Turkish Commissioner concerning these outrages as a mass of falsehoods. He declares that sixty-five villages were burned in these districts, and 15,000 men, women, and children killed.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch of the 29th ult. says: "A Cabinet council, at which all the grand dignitaries were present, has resolved to depose the present Sultan, Murad, and proclaim Abdul Hamid. The change will occur shortly, certainly before the beginning of the next Baldan, the great annual feast of the Mohammedans." A Vienna telegram of the same date says: "A Council of Ministers has been held in Constantinople to consider the peace proposals of which the outline has been given to the Grand Vizier by the powers separately. Russia strenuously opposed the condition that Servia should first sue directly for peace, and the Porte has abandoned its demand to that effect."...It is said that 24,850 Spanish troops, of all arms, with Krupp and Placentia guns, will embark at Santander and Cadiz for Cuba before Nov. 1.

TELEGRAMS from the Servian Capital represent that there is a keen anxiety among the people to hear of an armistice. The recent fighting before Alexinatz has been greatly exaggerated, the losses being no more than a few hundred killed on the side of the Servians. A feeling of jealousy has been aroused between the people of the principality and the Russians, the influence of the latter in the army overshadowing everything. To see Servia become a Russian dependency as the result of a war begun to secure her complete independence of Turkey, is not what the people want, and they appear to be ready to welcome a peace which would assure them as near an approximation to complete self-government as they possessed before the war.

A COUNCIL of ministers and great dignitaries of the Turkish Empire, held on the 31st ult., proclaimed Abdul Hamid Sultan, vice Murad, deposed.

THE INDIAN WAR.

Gen. Sherman's Impressions.

Gen. Sherman, says a Washington telegram, continues to be of the impression that the hostile Sioux have been divided up or that they are endeavoring to get out of the Powder river and Big Horn country! He says that he is of the opinion that they do not want to fight any more, and that they will endeavor to cross the Yellowstone to get away. If they can succeed in doing this, which he doubts on account of Gen. Miles' patrolling forces, they will then be heard of at the agencies. There are but three fords practicable for them on the Yellowstone, and it will take so long to get their old men, women, ponies and lodgepoles across that they will be pounced upon by the United States troops before they can accomplish such a movement. Gen. Sherman believes that the Indians under Sitting Bull would not have allowed the junction of the forces of Gens. Crook and Terry if they meant to fight, and to him it looks as though, with a broken-up crowd of the hostiles, Sitting Bull is likely to be getting ready to surrender and secure the best terms possible. At all events no such determined fighting as heretofore is looked for. Beyond the 2,500 additional soldiers now being recruited no additional troops will be required. Hence there is not much probability that the request of the marine corps to be employed will be complied with, unless it may be deemed advisable to place them at the agencies to carry out the arresting of the returning hostiles found at the agencies.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs now looks to the army exclusively at the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies to establish the authority of the Government and to conduct the management of Indian affairs there for the time being, under which arrangement, if successful, the commission will proceed to remove the Indians to the Indian Territory.

Some Rude Belles.

[Cincinnati Enquirer Washington Letter.]

For years there has existed a strange ambition among certain girls in society here to be distinguished for their ill-breeding. To be spoken of as the rudest girl in Washington was the laudable ambition of each. Heaven knows, aided by empty heads and coarse tastes, they were all rude enough, but which girl was entitled to wear the champion belt was undetermined, and popular disfavor varied from day to day as some fresh instance of ill-manners put one or the other in advance. They were daughters of families holding recognized social or official positions, and, received at almost every house, one was and is in continual danger of an assault from these female ruffians. I was at an entertainment one night, for example, and a lady, recognized as a confirmed invalid, feeling faint, attempted to get to the dressing-room on the floor above. The stairs were blocked, and the rudest girl never moved. Her young man, from very shame, rose to his feet, and after the sick lady had with difficulty clambered over the female ruffian, he said:

"Well, ——," calling her name, which I of course omit, "for cool impudence you take the belt—to sit and have that sick woman climb over you!"

"Well," was the feeling response, "if she's too sick to remain down stairs, let her stay at home."

WILD BILL, THE SCOUT.

What an Old Associate Says of Him.

Jack Malone, a frontiersman, furnishes the St. Louis Globe-Democrat with some interesting incidents in the life of "Wild Bill," alias Jas. B. Hickok, who was killed at Deadwood City a short time since by Jack McCall, a Black Hills desperado. Hickok was a native of Illinois, and his mother and sisters yet live near Galena, in that State. His brother (named William) is a wagon boss in New Mexico. According to Malone, Wild Bill was the only frontiersman who would take his pistols off and fight a square fight with any one who wanted to settle a dispute in that way. He was always anxious to avoid a quarrel, but, if he found he was going to be forced into one, took good care to get the drop on his enemy, and he was a sure shot. He would rather indulge in poker than eat, on one occasion having played in his last earthly possession—a black and tan terrier.

Bill was generous to a fault (Mr. Malone continued, in his remarks to the reporter), and although he had found it necessary to kill about a score of men in his time, still it is to be regretted that he himself was shot down "without a show." In 1860 Bill was driving a bull team at Leavenworth, but afterward took a train to Denver, Col. One of his first fights was with a gang in Dovertown, two miles above Fort Kearney. He and Bill Story killed three men there. He was next heard of at Virginia City, where great rivalry existed between two sets of road agents, and it was there that Bill made the enemies that forced him into the biggest fight of his life. He came across the plains as a Union scout with the Second Colorado in 1863. While they were encamped on Walnut creek, near Marysville, Kan., Hickok called on a Mrs. Walters, having been a great friend of her husband. She begged him, for God's sake, to leave, saying that ten men from Virginia City had arranged to come and kill him. "Well, little woman, don't be frightened. Get behind the chimney, and we'll stop 'em," was the scout's reply. The gang finally surrounded the house, and the leader shouted, "Is Wild Bill here?" "Yes, come and get him," was the answer, and two of the invading party were shot dead as they endeavored to enter. The others turned and ran. Bill stepped to the door, rifle in hand, and at a distance of 250 yards shot and instantly killed a third one of the party. He always considered this the best shot he ever made.

In 1865, while the deceased was keeping a livery stable at Springfield, Mo., he quarreled with Joe Tutt over a card table, and next day Mr. Tutt was gathered to his fathers—being shot through the heart in the public square. Wild Bill never waited to see the effect of his shot, but wheeled on Tutt's friends, and asked if any more shooting was wanted by them. They appeared to be satisfied.

In 1868 Hickok turned up as Sheriff of Ellis county, Kan., with headquarters at Hays City. A fellow named Sam Strawhan had followed him from Springfield to avenge the death of Tutt; but Wild Bill got the drop on him, and he fell dead, shot through the neck by the man who never missed his mark. The next man whose turn it was to die at the hands of Wild Bill was Bill Mulvey, a notorious rough from St. Joseph, Mo. He was shot back of the right ear. For this service Sheriff Hickok was tendered a vote of thanks.

Wild Bill's next difficulty was with eight or ten soldiers of the Seventh Cavalry, who invited him into a bar-room at Hays to take a drink. While standing at the bar he was knocked down by one of the blue coats. The minute he struck the floor his pistol was out, and, unfortunately, he killed a man who was trying to make peace, and also another who participated in the attack. Hickok then fled, and subsequently turned up as Marshal of Abilene, Kansas. Here it was that he killed a brother of McCall, the man that murdered him.

During the last year or two Bill had been playing the gentleman in Kansas City, St. Louis, and elsewhere, organizing Black Hills expeditions, etc.

Insanity in the United States.

The intelligent care of the insane, with a view to the restoration to health and society, is so recent that it may be dated, in the United States, in the present-century. The time is even within the recollection of many now living, when faith in the curability of the disease became general, even among medical men. Upon the dawning of the belief that insanity was susceptible of cure, hospitals began to be built, for the two-fold purposes of custody and treatment; for besides the difficulty of taking care of lunatics at home, it was found that comparatively few recovered. From this period hospitals began to be regarded as not only the best, but to most persons the only places for the insane. Hence an increasing demand for their accommodation, and though their numbers have multiplied largely, and have greatly increased in size, they are still inadequate to entertain all who knock at their doors and with piteous appeals seek admission. In this connection may be noted a curious result of the establishment of new hospital facilities. The newer States, in estimating the hospital capacity necessary for their insane, have naturally consulted the census statistics to find what number to provide for; but it is invariably found that when a hospital is opened for the accommodation of a given district, the applications for admission far exceed its capacity, largely outnumbering the statistics collected by the census-taker. The country seems suddenly thronged with insane people, and we are apt to be impressed with the belief that this dread disease is largely on the increase. But the probable fact is that no such increase really exists. It is not unnatural that, mainly out of family pride, the questions of the census-takers are often evaded, and the relatives of the unfortunate patient, seeing no benefit to come from revealing this "skeleton in the closet," keep it from observation. But, promptly when an asylum is opened within their reach, free to all without pay, the curtain is drawn and they come forward with their afflicted.

That insanity does not increase, pro rata, at least in the United States, is proven by the census returns for the past twenty years. In 1850, this country had a population of 23,191,876, and a total number of insane and idiots of 31,397, or 1 in 378. In 1860, with a population of 31,443,322, there were 42,864 insane and idiots, or 1 in 733. And in 1870, with a population of 38,555,983, there were 61,909 of that class, or 1 in 623. In England, during the same period, there was an average of about 1 in 450; in Scotland, 1 in 460; in Ireland, 1 in 400; in France, 1 in 600; and in Australia, 1 in 524. These reports, if accurate, show a favorable condition in this country as compared with that of others.—Charles D. Robinson, in Scribner for Sept.

FIENDS ON THE RAIL.

Narrow Escape of a Passenger Train on the New York Central Railroad.

[From the Rochester Democrat.]

A drover by the name of George Adams, residing at Cayuga, had business in Fairport last Saturday, and just at night he started for the depot, intending to take the train for Rochester. He passed rapidly along for about four miles without interruption, but as he neared Lincoln Creek he seen light in the bridge ahead of him, and as he drew near he distinguished the forms of five men busily intent upon some work upon the track. He proceeded cautiously forward, and a closer view confirmed his terrible suspicion. The men were tearing up the rails! It was then about 11 o'clock, and he knew that in a few minutes the St. Louis express was due from the east—indeed, if it were on time, it would leave Rochester at 11:08 with a heavy load of passengers. A glance was sufficient to show him that single-handed he could do nothing, but the twinkling of a light in a farmer's house a short distance away promised assistance, and rapidly and stealthily he stole by the miscreants toward the bright beacon, the beating of his heart quickened by overhearing one of them say, "This will be a bigger job than the one of the 15th." He had nearly passed them without attention, and was just congratulating himself upon his success, when his foot struck against some obstacle and he stumbled heavily forward. The noise reached the ears of the men on the track, and at once divining its cause they started forward, shouting, "Catch the meddling fool and drown him in the creek." Adams at once started on keen run for the house, his pursuers following hotly after, never relinquishing the chase until the fugitive was within ten rods of the house, when they were frightened away by a huge dog, which intelligently allowed the fugitive to pass, but fiercely assailed the pursuers. They then turned and fled into the darkness, and the farmer, aroused by the cries, was soon made acquainted with the facts by the breathless Adams. He at once disappeared in the house and returned with a red lantern, which had been fortunately dropped by a train some time before. This was at once lighted, and Adams, taking it in his hand, started up the track on a run, fearing every moment that he would be too late to prevent the threatened disaster. Meanwhile the St. Louis express, which should leave here at 11:08 in the evening, had been detained, so that it left the depot twenty-five minutes behind time, Conductor Norris Eaton in charge, and William Creedman, the engineer, at his post on the impatient locomotive. The train was made up of a baggage and express car, three passenger coaches, and seven sleepers, nearly every seat and berth occupied by passengers, little dreaming of danger, and feeling perfectly secure in the well-known management of the road. The engineer had just got his train well under way, crowding his engine a little to make up for lost time, when down the glistening track his practiced eye discerned a swinging light, and in a moment more he saw that it was red, the well-known signal of danger. His hand was on the reversing lever in a moment, and with every brake tightly set the long train gradually came to a standstill. At the culvert over Lincoln's creek, Adams pointed out the place where he had seen the men at work, and there, by the light of the lantern, on an embankment seventy-five feet high, over twenty feet of water, on a treacherous bed of quicksand, they found the rail so cunningly displaced that unless miraculously saved, the entire train must have dashed down the heights.

A Small-Sized Candidate.

Uncle Sammy is a very little fellow and in that respect he resembles Napoleon, Aaron Burr, Gen. Grant, and Lord John Russell, a fact, however, which does not make him in the least proud of his size. One morning a Saratoga washerwoman, at the hotel where the Governor stopped, was unloading her basket of linen in the presence of the lady guest, by whom she was employed. When she had deposited about half the wash upon the bed the lady suddenly detected a strange-looking garment among the lot, and, snatching it up exclaimed:

"What's that?"

"That's all right," returned Bridget.

"All right, nonsense," continued the lady, elevating the mysterious article and calling the washerwoman's attention to the initials, "S. J. T.," on the neck-band; "don't you see it's one of the Governor's night-shirts?"

"Be me sowl, yer right," added Bridget, solemnly. "Shure I t'o't it was wan av the babby's gowns."—Brooklyn Argus.

A Canadian Snake-Story.

The following story is told by a Norfolk paper, and the scene of it is laid at Silver Hill, a post village about twelve miles from Simcoe: Eugene, a son of Mr. Patrick Murphy, about 18 years of age, went to a spring for a drink of water, and after satisfying his thirst he sat down on a log to rest and cool off a little. He presently heard a hissing noise near his head, and on looking for the cause discovered a large snake near his face. The reptile had crawled up his back and stuck its head over one of his shoulders. The boy grabbed for the snake and caught it by the neck, but was unable to pull it over his shoulder on account of its being fastened to his suspenders behind. He held his grip, however, until the snake was choked to death. It was found to be a black snake, nearly five feet long. Young Murphy squeezed the reptile with such a firm grip that he broke a large silver ring that was on his finger.—London Free Press.

WHERE THE SOLDIERS ARE.

Present Disposition of the Military Forces of the United States.

[From the New York Herald.]

The orders issued to Gen. Sherman to hold all the available force of the army ready for prompt service in the Southern States, in view of the approaching Presidential election, gives rise to the interesting inquiry as to what number of men are actually at his disposal for that purpose. Gen Sheridan has stated that he was obliged to strip every post from the line of Manitoba to Texas in order to reinforce Terry and Crook. Even troops have been ordered from California to the Yellowstone, and they have no doubt by this time reached the theater of hostilities. The Southern States, except Texas, have quartered in them two regiments of artillery and five of infantry, aggregating 3,500 men, and in Texas, principally along the Rio Grande frontier, are three regiments of cavalry, seven companies of artillery, and four regiments of infantry (two of the latter being colored), aggregating 3,300. The garrisons in the reconstructed States have not been disturbed in consequence of the war against the Sioux. They remain at the strength above stated. On the Pacific Coast there are one regiment and two troops of cavalry, eight companies of artillery, and two regiments of infantry, and in Arizona the Sixth cavalry and the Eighth infantry. It may be stated that the presence of a considerable military force is necessary in Texas to protect the people against Mexican and Indian marauders; and there is, also, a necessity for occupying at all times several forts and posts in the States and Territories bordering on the Pacific. The total number of men in the organization of the army, including staff corps of engineers, ordnance department, military academy, men not attached to regiments, hospital stewards, etc., is about 28,200; but the organization, by regiments and companies, is only 25,000. Gen. Sheridan, after the greatest exertions, has been able, according to his own statement, to give Terry and Crook 3,500 men, which Gen. Sherman thinks are "quite as many as can be maintained on the Big Horn."

Comprehending the value of the figures just mentioned, an estimate can be formed of the available force of the army "not now engaged in subduing the savages on the western frontier," for protecting all citizens, without distinction of race, color or political opinion, in the exercise of the right to vote."

The appended exhibit explains itself:

Chinese Laundrymen.

More Chiramen are employed in San Francisco in laundry work than in any other kind of labor. In all parts of the city their washhouses are to be found, every square block containing from four to six establishments of the kind. Nearly all the hotels and many of the public institutions employ them, and the washing of nine-tenths of the families in the city are performed by them. A system prevails among these Chinese laundrymen whereby the item of shop rent is reduce to the most economical figure. Two wash firms occupy the same premises and use the same tubs and materials, one firm working during daylight, and at dark surrender the shop to the other, who occupy and use it until morning. By this system there is also a saving in water and fuel.

Another Bridge Across the Thames.

The bridges crossing the Thames for general purposes in London proper are the following: Battersea, Vauxhall, Lambeth, Westminster, Charing Cross, Waterloo, Blackfriars, Southwark, and London Bridge, which is the last toward the sea, all ocean steamers and large vessels being compelled to anchor below. It is now proposed to build another bridge across the river, just below the Tower, and about a quarter of a mile below London bridge, at a cost estimated at nearly $2,500,000. Hampton Court bridge, the last on the Thames on which tools were levied, has been thrown open free to the public, the tolls having been extingushed forever by a public outlay of $200,000.

RETRENCHMENT.

Speech of Hon. Samuel J. Randall.

What the Democratic House has Done for the Country.

Reducing the Expenditures by About Thirty Millions in Spite of Republican Opposition—An Impartial Exhibit of the Work in Behalf of Retrenchment and Reform.

On submitting the Conference report on the Indian Appropriation bill to the House, Aug. 14, Mr. Randall spoke as follows on the Democratic policy of retrenchment:

MR. SPEAKER: Before the final adjournment of a protracted and laborious session, it is proper to review our action concerning appropriations from the public treasury to carry on the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877. In the discharge of this task I am sensible of no other motive than that there shall be a complete and impartial exhibit of the work in behalf of retrenchment and reform which we set out to do, and the difficulties and opposition which met us at every step in the interest of those who saw in any reduction of the public expenditure loss to them of salary or place, notwithstanding there was consequent advantage to the taxpayers, and the efficiency of the governmental administration was in a degree impaired. We were met at the very threshold by the inexorable alternative of reducing expenditures to a just and economical basis, or by allowing appropriations to be made at the same figures of previous years, with increased taxation; and this latter it was our plighted faith and solemn duty to prevent in behalf of the great body of the people borne down by a heavy load of taxation, and who were further distressed beyond measure by derangement and misfortune in every avenue of agricultural, manufacturing, mechanical and commercial activity. To this end, every item of public expense, whether large or small, was subjected to the severest scrutiny, and an inspection of every bureau and department of the Government undertaken, without parallel, I believe, for a quarter of a century. The Committee on Appropriations give this work their most earnest attention. It required incessant labor and much patience. Arrayed against us were all those whose favorite selfish schemes were to be frustrated for the public good; eager and greedy corporations who sought to fatten from the public purse; place-hunters and place-holders, and the friends and partisans of all, high or low, who were in any way to be affected by reduction, and especially by the marked unwillingness on all hands, by chiefs of bureaus and heads of departments, to agree to any withdrawal of their official patronage. But we had the comforting assurance that we had behind us the people who demanded that their burdens should be lightened by practical and necessary reductions, and this consoled us oftentimes in the discharge of our imperative public duty, when we found ourselves compelled to deny appropriations to the extent desired for objects dearly cherished by our constituents.

REMOVING AN OBSTRUCTION TO REFORM.

The majority of this House of Representatives was elected to reform manifold abuses of administration, and when we assembled in December last that reform element assumed full authority in this hall, and obtained partial control over public expenditures. The first difficulty which presented itself to the execution of the trust confided to us was the existence of a rule in the House which prevented the repeal, or even modification of any law as to appropriations, upon any appropriation bill, unless two-thirds of the members assented thereto, which number the majority did not have. The construction which had been given to that rule allowed amendments to increase compensation to officers, clerks, and employes, but adroitly prevented, as out of order, any reduction whatever. To overcome this obstruction, a proposition was submitted to so change the rule as to allow the incorporation into appropriation bills of such legislation, which, being germane, retrenched expenditures, thus making a complete revolution in the operation of the rule, and turning legislative action in this House from extravagance into the better and safer direction of economy. That change, for the purpose I have indicated, was vigorously resisted by the Republican side of the House for the reason that, composing as they did and do, more than one-third of its members, no amendments changing existing laws could be made or put upon an appropriation bill except when such amendments increased salaries, as under the old practice two-thirds were required to suspend the rules to allow the majority to vote even on such amendments; and that two-thirds, as I have already stated, the minority in the House could at any time refuse. Without such a change any and all efforts on the part of the House to reduce the expenditures of the Government would have been as the idle wind. Here stood the Republican members of more than one-third to prevent and obstruct any such reduction, with a Senate, as we afterward found, even more determined to its purpose. Finally, through the agency of the Committee on Rules, we secured a report of the alteration so much desired, and the House adopted it by a majority composed exclusively of Democrats. Almost all the reductions we have accomplished have followed as the result of the first step, for it opened the way.

THE NECESSITY OF ECONOMY.

It must not be forgotten that when Congress assembled the country was prostrated in all the essentials which go to make the people prosperous, contented and happy. Many of our manufacturing establishments were closed, and most of those still running were working only a portion of the time. Commerce languished, agriculture went unrewarded, and a feeling of distrust widely prevailed, causing capital to be unusually cautious. Almost all new enterprises were abandoned, and labor, then as now seeking employment, was to the extent of its activity inadequately remunerative. Our duty in such a condition of affairs was too plain to be mistaken. It was to lop off at once, and resolutely, every extravagant and unnecessary expense. This we have partially accomplished, and in a manner which will in no degree cripple the administration in its legitimate functions. But to secure even this partial result without producing friction has required long and patient examination, investigation and study.

A further plan of procedure adopted was to reduce 10 per cent. all salaries over $1,200, and provide for a reduction in the force of clerks and employes of 20 per cent. These two provisions, if fully adopted, would have secured a much larger reduction of appropriations and the discharge of all supernumerary clerks and employes, of which there are still a large number. The House considered this not an unreasonable reduction in amount under the circumstances. But this reduction has almost wholly failed because of the obstinacy of the Senate and the Senate conferees in relation thereto. A reduction in the number of clerks and employes has been only partially realized, as the House conferees were forced to yield a part of their recommendations. It will surprise many when they learn the fact that as many as 100,000 persons receive pay from the Federal Treasury. In order that no harm should possibly come from reduction of force, we directed the attention of the executive officers of the Government to the existing law in reference to the hours of labor required from the clerks and the employes. It is to be found in section 162 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

SEC. 162. From the first day of October until the first day of April, in each year, all the bureaus in the State, War, Treasury, Navy, Postoffice Departments, and in the General Landoffice, shall be open for the transaction of the public business at least eight hours of each day; and from the first day of April until the first day in October in each year, at least ten hours in each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law.

Heretofore clerks have been required to devote six hours a day to the service of the Government. Recently, on the coming in of the Democratic House, by orders to the bureaus, that time has been extended to seven hours. If, however, the terms of the law are adhered to, more actual hours of service will be secured under the reduced number of clerks and employes agreed upon than we have now with the present excessive force.

Again, Mr. Speaker, as a natural result of the prostration of business, the revenues of the Government have diminished to an alarming extent, and the warning held out to us was one not to be disregarded, as it might turn out in the coming fiscal year that the reduction would be so great that the revenues would fall below the amount required to meet the expenditure of the Government. In this emergency, it was absolutely essential to provide for reduction of expenses rather than entail any increase of our interest-bearing debt, or any addition to our present taxation. Nay more; if the full measure of reductions recommended had been acceded to by the Republican minority in the House, and the majority in the Senate, then, even with a full revenue, the internal and other taxes could have been reduced to an extent of say $10,000,000, with comparative safety.

I shall now proceed to an examination of the several appropriation bills, in order of date as they were enacted into law.

THE SAVING IN PENSIONS.

Appropriations last year, $30,000,000; department estimates for the year ending June 30, 1877, $29,533,500; recommendation of the House Committee on Appropriations, $29,533,500; House passed $29,533,500; Senate Committee, recommended $29,533,500; Senate passed $29,533,500; law as finally enacted, $29,533,500. The respective committees of the two Houses and both Houses of Congress agreed in the amount to be appropriated for pensions, which was in full as indicated by the estimate. A pleasant incident in connection with this appropriation was the fact of its being, in committee and in the House, in charge of a member of the committee (Mr. Atkins, of Tennessee), formerly an officer in the Confederate army and a member of the Confederate Congress. Such exhibitions give the denial to the political charge that the leading men of the South still bear any hostility to the Union, for he was scrupulous in seeing that no pensioner of the Union suffered in the least degree. Many reforms are imperatively needed in connection with the distribution of pensions. The Committee on Pensions recommended the transfer of the Pension Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department, where it formerly was, as appears by their report, for reasons, among others, as follows:

Pension agencies which now cost annually $448,000, the Committee on Pensions report could be dispensed with, and twenty efficient clerks, divided equally among four classes of clerks known to the law, at a cost of $30,000, could do the work as efficiently and with less delay than now occurs. The work, if under the War Department, could be done in the main by the retired officers of the army, with one-half pay in addition to the present retired pay of such officers, and the amount of pay saved would be quite one-half. At present more than one-half is done at the Surgeon General's and Adjutant General's offices. Both these bureaus now employ 116 persons on this work, and an equal number of additional clerks, if duties were transferred to the War Department, to-wit, 232 clerks in all would be ample; whereas, the present force in the Pension Bureau is over 490; nearly 300 over what economy and necessity require.

The character of the work is in a measure judicial, requiring legal knowledge; and yet last year 128 employes were discharged and ninety-six new appointments made—putting out experienced clerks and substituting for such men ignorant and inefficient persons in their stead. This was done mainly for political considerations. The truth is, as the evidence establishes, the bureau is run as a political machine. Two clerks of the National Republican Congressional Committees of last year were entered on the pension-roll and paid from pension funds.

The War and Pension Departments being separate, there was required last year 56,000 duplicates of rolls from these two offices, requiring transmission by mail and messenger, which might all have been done in the same office. The fact is, the delays now incident to applications for pensions or increase of pensions, arise almost entirely from these separations of duty, causing years of delay to those least able to bear procrastination, and those, too, who never ought to be subjected to such annoyances and privations.

I will allude to another abuse and then leave this branch of my subject. The finance division of the Pension Bureau can be dispensed with altogether, employing forty-eight clerks. This is set forth in Mr. Clark's testimony. In reply to a question whether that division ought not to be lopped off, he said: If the work in the Auditor's office was up to date the work in the finance division would be useless. There cannot, therefore, be a reasonable doubt as to the economy to be gained, and the general propriety of the transfer.

DEFICIENCIES.

Appropriations last year, $4,703,699.13; department estimates for the year ending June 30, 1877, $2,723,471.79; recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $662,315.07; House passed $671,486.74; Senate recommended $840,831.27; Senate passed $840,831.27; the law as finally enacted $816,723.56.

I believe these deficiencies are less than usual and heretofore, because of the knowledge by the departments that a Democratic House was to be in authority, this year, notice having been given last year by the then Democratic minority of the Forty-third Congress that the practice of allowing large deficiencies would not be countenanced. The departments are, however, entitled to partial credit, for their estimates of deficiency this year were considerably less than heretofore. The same rigid rule will be again applied, and the departments must govern themselves accordingly.

$3,000,000 SAVED ON FORTIFICATIONS.

Appropriations last year, $850,000; department estimates for the year ending June 30, 1877, $3,406,000; recommendations of House Committee on Appropriations, $315,000; House passed $315,000; Senate committee recommended $315,000; Senate passed $315,000; the law, as finally enacted, $315,000.

This was a large comparative reduction, but I believe no material interests will suffer therefrom, either in respect to our fortifications or as to experiments to be made in the trial of armament or torpedoes. The largest sized guns of our recent war are now considered ineffective. Earthworks experience has shown to be the best protection against artillery on land, or iron-clads on water. The sums so lavishly expended since the war have not brought any adequate return in these respects. In the past ten years, up to and including this year ending June 30, 1876, we appropriated for these purposes more than $13,000,000, a large amount of which could as well have been saved by the same character of reductions which we have made this year.

THE APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NAVY.

Naval service appropriation last year, $17,001,006.40; department estimates for the year ending June 30, 1877, $20,871,666.40; recommendations of House Committee on Appropriations, $12,808,655.40; House passed $12,432,855.40. Senate committee recommended $16,167,855.40; Senate passed $14,857,855.40. The law, as finally enacted, $12,740,355.40.

The appropriations for the naval establishment are largely reduced. It is a branch of the service where large saving can be prudently made. I need not allude at length to the sums heretofore expended and the manner of their expenditure. The department, in its management, has been thoroughly examined into by a committee of this House, and their findings are in print, which render a further criticism in this connection unnecessary. These reduced appropriations come up to the full measure of recommendations by the Naval Committee.

THE POSTOFFICE.

Postoffice appropriations last year, $8,376,205; department estimate for the year ending June 30, 1877, $8,431,602.99; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $2,680,906; amount passed the House, $4,230,906; amount recommended by Senate Committee on Appropriations, $7,586,647; amount passed Senate, $7,288,647; the law, as finally enacted, $5,967,498.

The reductions in this act arise mainly from the cutting off of the salaries of the higher class of Postmasters, which have been confessedly too high, and the reduction of 10 per cent. on the amounts to be paid to the railroads for the transportation of mails, among which is what is known as the "fast mail." An erroneous impression prevails as to this latter service. The fast mails were not provided for by law. Speed was not taken into consideration in determining the compensation. Weight and the number of postal cars were and are the elements in fixing the pay to railroads. This extra line was first established less than a year ago, by throwing an increase in the quantity of mail matter on these principal roads, thus increasing the number of postal cars, and, with additional weight, causing an increased amount of payment to special roads. The compensation as fixed by act of March, 1873, was a very great increase over former rates. Prior to that time, $375 per mile on all lines was the maximum rate. Under that act the pay on some lines was increased to $705 per mile per year, and on the fast lines as high as $1,016 per mile per year.

This Congress has reduced the rates for railroad service generally 10 per cent., which is a moderate reduction. The compensation on star lines and steamboat service has been reduced far more than 10 per cent. since March, 1873; in fact, from 10 to 30 per cent. The amount paid before the passage of the act of March, 1873, was considered high even for that period. The reduced price of every commodity which goes into the cost of running a railroad is far greater than 10 per cent. These roads have reduced the compensation to their employes, and together with a general shrinkage of values, it goes to show that the amount now fixed is comparatively higher than it was at the time the former rate was agreed to.

The Postoffice appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1876, raised the rates of postage on third-class mail matter, so as to take it from the mails and give the monopoly of its transportation to the express companies, while at the same time the postage on newspapers was doubled. The latter imposition has been removed by the legislation of this year, but the first still remains a burden upon the people in behalf of the express companies, and is estimated as worth to those companies half a million of dollars per annum in increased receipts from transportation of merchandise, etc. The House at every opportunity sought to accomplish full repeal of both provisions, but the Senate was obdurate, and refused to concede the repeal of the merchandise portion of the act.

THE REDUCTION IN ARMY EXPENSES.

Appropriation last year, $27,933,830; department estimate for year ending June 30, 1877, $33,348,748.50; recommendation of House Committee on Appropriations, $23,155,077.12; House passed, $23,179,819.52; Senate committee recommended, $27,717,877.20; Senate passed, $27,715,877.20; the law as finally enacted, $25,987,167.90.

The Army Appropriation act does not show that extent of reduction which we intended and had reason to hope we should obtain at the opening of the session, because of our Indian troubles, and because of the determination of the administration to keep a large force in the South. The House bill fixed the army at 22,000 soldiers, relatively divided between the three arms of the service, and sought, in addition, to reduce the compensation of certain officers which were deemed disproportionate and too high. The manner of payment of these compensations is, in some respects, highly objectionable, rendering it almost impossible to compute with any accuracy the pay received by officers in the army. The Senate was resolute against all these changes, and the House was compelled to yield.

THE SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Appropriation last year, $26,644,350.69; department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $32,560,475.29; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $14,857,326.54; Senate committee recommended $18,501,601.25; Senate passed, $19,956,496.99; the law as finally enacted, $16,357,905.47. This act, which covers the sundry civil expenses of the Government, is that upon which it is attempted to engraft all doubtful schemes and unnecessary expenses, which to any other general appropriation bill would be ruled out of order as not germane. In reference to this particular act the President of the United States saw fit, although approving the same, to send a message condemning the character of our reductions. I propose, now and here, with due respect to the Chief Magistrate, to inquire into the justice of his criticisms. In the first place he says:

"Notably among the first class is the reduction in ordinary annual appropriations for the revenue cutter service, to the prejudice of the customs revenue."

This criticism is completely refuted by a plain statement of the facts, which show that the amount appropriated is in excess of the amount expended in the revenue cutter service during the last fiscal year. The expenditures for the year ending June 30, 1876, were $842,000, and the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1877, $874,891, the latter exceeding the former more than $30,000. Next as to the amount given to continue the Signal Service. This service cost last year nearly a million dollars. It has grown to be an immense bureau in its workings, and we think it is extravagantly conducted. It draws its resources from three appropriation bills—the Legislative, the Army, and the Sundry Civil—and aggregates, as stated, $1,000,000. We are advised by the manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company that they can perform the same service with equal satisfaction to the public for one-half the money, and he is quite willing to undertake it at that reduction. This, we understand, is also the opinion of many officers heretofore in charge of the War Department. Our reductions, in view of this statement, have been very moderate, amounting to $100,000 in the general expense provided for in the Sundry Civil bill, and of only fifty enlisted men in the army for this corps. At some of the stations the employes numbered as high as seven, and by careful revision of the force at the several stations this reduction of fifty men will hardly be felt.

The criticism as to the merits evidently arose from want of knowledge of the amounts appropriated in the several bills. It would have been seen by examination that the amount appropriated for running the mints and assay offices was fully up to the necessities of the country, even taking into consideration the increased expense for coining subsidiary silver recently authorized by law in substitution of fractional currency.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Now as to the objection urged to reduction of appropriations for the construction of public buildings throughout the country, and the building for the State, War and Navy Departments, in the city of Washington. The policy which guided the House was to make appropriations this year for no building the construction of which had not yet been commenced, and in making appropriations for those already begun, to give a sufficient sum to finish and furnish those of smaller size, such as the Custom House at New Orleans, the Custom House and Postoffice at Raleigh, N. C., the Custom House and Postoffice at Port Huron, Mich., the Custom House and Postoffice at Parkersburgh, W. Va., the Court House and Postoffice at Lincoln, Neb., and the Custom House and Postoffice at Rockland, Me., giving the balance, which we deemed wise to appropriate in a moderate degree, to the larger structures, so as to go on with the work slowly. The appropriation is $2,000,000 less than last year, when the appropriations for public buildings, new and old, were unusually extravagant.

As to the appropriation for a new structure for the State, War, and Navy Departments in the city of Washington, it was under the same rule. The expenditures for this structure are made an exception, all the others being under the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, while this is under an engineer of the army, Gen. O. E. Babcock.

For the repairs and preservation of the navy yards we gave $100,0000, against $500,000 last year. We deemed that, for the legitimate purposes of repairs, proper at the different navy yards and stations, and the preservation of the same, $100,000 is adequate, and believed the half million heretofore, given was diverted to other purposes not properly chargeable to this particular service.

In reference to armories and arsenals the reductions, except in one or two instances of no small amount, were those recommended by the late Secretary of War, Mr. Taft, in his communication to Congress revising the estimates of his predecessor.

In regard to the judicial expenses of the Government, reduction was made upon the recommendation of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and justified after thorough investigation by exposure of the most outrageous frauds upon the Government, perpetrated by Marshals and other United States officers, the most flagrant of which were in the States of Arkansas and North Carolina. The justice and propriety of this reduction are undoubted.

The President further complained that we had impaired the efficiency of the light-house service. Reference to figures show the complaint to be without foundation. The appropriation last year was $1,999,000, and for this year $2,018,630, the appropriation for this year being nearly $20,000 over that of last year. Appropriations for lighthouses, beacons, and fog lights were made after consultation with the proper officer having that service in charge, and we gave a sum sufficient, as we were advised, for all that was absolutely necessary during the fiscal year. There were some which were desirable, for which we did not make appropriation, but they were not such as we thought to be demanded now.

DISTRICT EXPENDITURES.

Appropriations for the District of Columbia are generally included in this act, and I need not stop to give the reason why we ought to be cautious in whatever we did. Past experience has shown such prodigacy in the management of the affairs of this District that common justice to the people required we should surround all our appropriations with every possible safeguard. We authorized an advance from the treasury of the United States of the money necessary to meet the interest on the public debt of the District for the entire fiscal year, thus preventing any default of prompt payment like that which has heretofore occurred, although a portion of the debt has been reported by a committee of this House to have been illegally contracted. We also appropriated for the various charities and charitable institutions within the District; authorized the repaving of Pennsylvania avenue, a proportionate share of the expenses to be borne by the Government; provided for the payment of one-half of the expenses of the police and Board of Health; and, besides, allowed the government of the District to increase the temporary debt to the extent of over $400,000, so that no embarrassment should or is likely to occur. The appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1875, amounted to $2,962,251.11, almost all of which was exclusively for the benefit of the people of the District.

The implied statement of the President that the aggregate appropriations of the Sundry Civil bill are in amount not more than 65 per cent. of those heretofore made should command approbation rather than censure.

The appropriation for public printing and binding we reduce largely on the recommendation of the Committee on Printing of this House, which established the fact of gross abuse and extravagance in the administration of that office. The amount given last year was $1,665,507.66. The amount asked for the current year, was $2,296,056.86. The amount allowed this year under advice of the Committee on Printing, is $1,133,737.50—about $500,000 less than the appropriation last year. The report of this committee, to which I have alluded, clearly establishes the fact that this sum should have been sufficient to have done the work last year if the proper prices had been paid for material, and the running expenses had been rightfully adjusted.

For the support of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers we gave the exact amount asked, $608,733.44.

The appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, were $5,307,191.38. In 1870 they had crept up to $9,976,228.81. In 1872 they further advanced to $24,161,773.86. Finally, in 1874, they reached the enormous amount of $32,186,129. In 1875, when the distress in the country became so prevalent it could no longer pass unheeded, even in a Republican House of Representatives, we find there was a small reduction from $32,186,129 to $27,009,744.81; in 1876 to $26,614,350. We have reduced the sundry civil expenses this year below the appropriation of last year $10,441,780, appropriating only about one-half the amount appropriated in 1874, being a reduction of about $16,000,000.

THE MILITARY ACADEMY.

Appropriations last year, $364,740; department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $437,470; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, [illegible]; amount passed the House, $259,231; Senate committee recommended, $308,841; Senate passed, $308,841; the law, as finally enacted, $290,065.

There was in controversy between the two Houses the question of compensation to professors at West Point. The House deemed that in some instances, being over $6,000 per annum, they were higher than for similar services in civil life, especially when we take into consideration the fact that the professors, without encountering any of the privations, hardships, and dangers of army life are, when they reach a condition of impaired usefulness, placed upon the retired list, and receive three-quarters of their pay at the time they are retired. The Senate demanded that the question of this reduction should be remitted to the commission created to inquire into the reorganization of the army, and the House was compelled to accede thereto.

THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

River and harbor appropriations last year, $6,648,517.50; department estimates for the year ending June 30, 1877, $14,301,100; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $5,872,850; amount passed the House $5,872,850; Senate committee recommended $4,993,000; Senate passed $5,000,000; the law as finally enacted, $5,000,000.

This bill was not made up by the Committee on Appropriations, and therefore I have not that full knowledge which would warrant me in speaking of its details in comparison with previous bills with the same certainty that I am able to do concerning the eleven other appropriation bills. It is, however, a large reduction on the amount appropriated last year for the same purpose, and an immense reduction, as will be seen by the foregoing figures, upon the estimates of the department.

THE INDIAN BILL.

Appropriations last year, $5,360,554.55; department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $5,787,995.60; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $3,905,771.27; amount passed the House, $3,979,602.11; Senate committee recommended, $5,206,861.27; Senate passed $4,958,361.27; the law as finally enacted, $4,670,117.02.

The principal disagreement between the two Houses related to the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department. The House believed that the management of Indian affairs could be more economically and efficiently administered by army officers already under pay than by civil officers, under whom had grown up a widespread system of peculation upon the Indians, as well as upon the Government.

The House authorized the transfer in the Indian appropriation bill, having previously passed a separate proposition on the same subject, which was transmitted to the Senate on the 25th of April last, but which the Senate never took up for consideration or discussion. Incidentally, however, they did discuss the clause in the Indian bill, and voted it down, upon the ground that it was a change of law upon an appropriation bill. We think the country had a right to expect from the Senate more consideration of this subject, and the House yielded at last when longer persistence could only result in unlimited extension of the session without corresponding good. The mismanagement now existing, although unfortunate, is well illustrated by the fact that the hostile Sioux are armed with better weapons than the troops put in the field against them. At this very session we have been compelled to pass a law prohibiting the Indian agents from further supplying to these hostile Indians improved arms and ammunition. I doubt neither the propriety nor the absolute necessity of the proposed transfer, and only regret to say the proposition has been defeated in the Senate more by indirection than by open opposition.

Let me pause for a moment to state a fact which carries with it its own commentary. While there are in the army 26,900 men, 15,000 of them in the military division of the Missouri, embracing the Black Hills country where the recent fights and massacres occurred, Gens. Terry and Crook have been left until lately to resist the combined hostile Indians under Sitting Bull with a force of less than 3,000 men. We are now asked to add to the army 2,500 cavalry, when it must be apparent to the most casual observer that such addition is entirely unnecessary if the force was taken from where it is of no service whatever, and transferred to where it is needed to win success to our arms. I yet hope for the transfer at the next session. We have made reductions, even under the present inefficient management, of $700,000 or thereabouts.

THE CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Appropriations last year, $1,374,085; department estimates for the year ending June 30, 1877, $1,352,495; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $922,847.50; amount passed the House, $912,747.50; Senate committee recommended, $1,341,647.50; Senate passed, $1,341,647.50—the law as finally enacted.

The House held that our diplomatic service was conducted with unnecessary expense, and that the salaries paid to foreign Ministers were excessive when contrasted with the salaries paid to other governmental officers, while at the same time officers of the highest diplomatic rank were accredited to Governments where charges d'affaires, with greatly reduced salaries, would be equally efficient. The truth is that all important matters between this and foreign Governments are to-day directly negotiated and adjusted through the ocean telegraphs by the State Department at Washington; and, therefore, in many instances the position of foreign Minister is little more than a costly sinecure. Under what is known as the "Orth bill" the salaries of these officers were increased, and that increase in a measure we have taken off. It must not be forgotten that our Ministers abroad are not valuable for any service they render to our commerce, but that, on the contrary, it is our consular system which is brought into direct contact with the American marine; and therefore we would like to see that thorough revision of the consular system which will secure its improvement and greater efficiency. We claim, because the consular system is not only self-supporting, but has an excess of receipts from the payment offices, that therefore all the money received should be expended in the service, is about as just as to claim that the Custom House and internal revenue, because of receipts beyond expenditure, should likewise be administered with extravagance. We have not secured the reductions we sought, and which we believed to be proper, but we have at least accomplished enough to reward us for our effort.

THE LEGISLATIVE BILL.

Mr. Randall then proceeded to give a resume of the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation bill. The appropriation in that bill last year amounted to $18,902,236. The estimates for this year were $20,836,307. The bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations is $13,009,807; as it passed the House it was $12,998,895; as it passed the Senate it was $16,685,338; as it became a law it was $15,373,060. The great struggle of the session had taken place on that bill. The House had sought to reduce the force and compensation of Government employes, and the Senate has with equal tenacity resisted such reduction. The result had been a compromise effecting a reduction of $765.—On the 10th of October he defended the position of the House on the reduction of the President's salary from $50,000 to $25,000, and he expressed the sincere conviction that the people would see the matter in its true light. As to the proposed reduction of the compensation of Senators and members, the Senate had urged against the abolition of the franking privilege, but the Senate had, since the passage of the bill, voted to restore the franking privilege, action which certainly would not escape criticism. Another valuable result which had been accomplished had been the enactment of a provision against the political assessment of Government employes. He gave the following recapitulation of the appropriation bills:

THE TOTAL SAVING.

The estimates of the departments for the year were $209,099,025. The bills as reported by the Committee on Appropriations amounted to $137,233,135. The bills as passed the Senate, $158,260,598; the bills as enacted into law $147,719,074, as against appropriations for last year of $177,663,337, being a reduction of $29,944,253.

Mr. Springer (Dem., Ill.) suggested that the saving was at the rate of $102,000 for each Congressional district.

Mr. Randall, in conclusion, said that early in the session he had stated it as his belief that the expenditures would be reduced between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000. This statement but events had demonstrated its correctness. He regretted to say that in the struggle with the Senate the House had been compelled to yield to the extent of $10,500,000. He hoped and believed in another year the Senate would concur with the House in that regard, and he asserted that with a Chief Magistrate acting in harmony with the purpose of the present House a further reduction could readily be made of $10,000,000. These facts and figures speak for themselves and need no elaboration. On the result which they demonstrated the majority rested their claim of having earnestly and faithfully discharged their duty to the people. It had not reduced expenditures as much as it had expected, but the failure to do so was not its fault. He believed that the real, natural, safe and permanent way to the resumption of specie payments was in the reduction of Government expenditures. Human foresight, however, could not fix the exact hour or day when it should take place, but the truth was self-evident that if twenty or thirty millions was saved, not only would the means of speedy resumption be provided, but that confidence would be established which must inevitably precede the desired result.

As Mr. Randall closed his speech he was warmly applauded on his own side of the house.

Lost Jewels.

A London correspondent writes: Since the grand entertainment given to the Prince of Wales at the Guildhall of the city of London, the full effects of that most beautiful crush have come to light. Losses of jewels were plentiful, indeed they were rather the rule than the exception. Among other things I hear that the Duchess of Manchester lost one ear-ring of the value of £1,200, and had not heard or seen anything of it since. Another lady had the pleasure of seeing her diamond comb, valued at £5,400, trodden into the dust beneath the feet of the dancers without being able to get sufficiently near to rescue it from destruction. A curious discovery was made in sweeping the hall after the dance. Some months ago, Lady Dudley, the most beautiful peeress at present living, was robbed of jewels to the amount of £50,000, at a railway station. A beautiful antique agraffe, resplendent with diamonds and emeralds, was found on the floor of the Guildhall, and has since been recognized as one of the articles which were stolen from Lady Dudley. No claimant for it has at present appeared.

Sitting Bull and the Blackfeet.

The Blackfeet in Canada give Sitting Bull the cold shoulder when he entreats them to join him in his warlike enterprises. With characteristic insolence he threatens them with severe punishment so soon as he has finished with the Americans. The Indian subjects of the Dominion have always been treated as subjects and not as enemies or independent tribes. It is hard to drag them into a war. Our Government has issued elaborate instructions to the Sioux Commission. It might have added one clause: Study the consistent Indian policy of the Canadians.—New York Tribune.

DON CARLOS bathes every day at Newport, where the ladies watch him disporting in the surf, and consider the muscular development of his legs as superior even to that of Weston's. They attribute it to the exercise he took in getting out of Spain.—Brooklyn Argus.

THE METHODISTS.

Reunion of the Northern and Southern Branches of the Church.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

The re-establishment of union and fraternity between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South, is full of good omen for the future usefulness of this powerful religious denomination. Overtures have frequently been made before by the Chuch North, but in every instance it has been snubbed. At first, the great obstacle of slavery stood in the way; then came the war, with its sectional animosities and bitter hatred and passions, which separated the two churches farther apart than ever. Time, however, is a great mollifier. These passions of the years which have elapsed since the close of the war have cooled down, and the two churches, through their delegated commissioners, have been enabled to meet on common ground and discuss the preliminaries of union with soberness and fraternal harmony, and the result at which they have arrived will commend itself to all Methodists as rich with promise for the spiritual as well as material growth and prosperity of their church. The commissioners of the two churches, previously appointed for that purpose by the General Conferences of each, met at Cape May, N. J., on the 16th inst., and after a joint session of seven days agreed upon a report, which, in advance of its presentation to the Conferences, they have submitted to the churches in general. It sets forth as the basis of union that each of the churches is a legitimate branch of Episcopal Methodism in the United States, having a common origin in the Methodist Episcopal Church organized in 1784, and that the Methodist Episcopal Church South has been "an evangelical church, reared on Scriptural foundations, and her ministers and members, with those of the Methodist Episcopal Church, have constituted one Methodist family, in distinct ecclesiastical connection." The disposition of the church property has always been a bone of contention, and for the past few years the principal obstacle that has hindered, the union of the churches. The commissioners, however, adjusted the adverse claims harmoniously. As they gave most of their time to the settlement of this vexed question, and as their decision will be of general interest, we print the rules entire:

RULE 1. In cases not adjudicated upon by the Joint Commission, any society of either church, constituted according to its discipline, now occupying the church property, shall remain in possession thereof, provided that where there is not in the same place a society of more members attached to the other church, and which has hitherto claimed the use of the property, the latter shall be entitled to possession.

RULE 2. Forasmuch as we have no power to annul decisions respecting church property made by the State Courts, the Joint Commission ordain in respect thereof—First: In cases in which such a decision has been made, or in which there exists an agreement, the same shall be carried out in good faith.

In communities where there are two societies, one belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church and the other to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which have adversely claimed the church property, it is recommended that without delay they amicably compose their differences irrespective of the strict legal title, and settle the same according to Christian principles and the equities of the particular the principle of the foregoing rule. But if such settlement cannot be speedily made, then the question shall be referred for equitable decision to three arbitrators—one to be chosen by each claimant from their respective societies, and the two thus chosen shall select a third person, not connected with either of said churches, and the decision of any two of them shall be final.

In communities in which there is but one society rule first shall be faithfully observed in the interests of peace and fraternity.

RULE 3. Whenever necessary to carry the aforegoing rules into effect legal title to the church property shall be accordingly transferred.

RULE 4. These rules shall take effect immediately.

A Whirlwind in Connecticut.

On the place occupied by James and A. Hall, in Ellsworth, on Thursday, one Myron Kellogg, an old Schatacook Indian, whose weight does not exceed eighty-five pounds at most, was in the hay field conversing with Mr. Albert Hall, and a whirlwind twisted him round two or three times and finally raised him from the earth, carrying him up a distance of about thirty feet, spinning him round like a top, and finally dropping him in a swamp hole near by almost uninjured, but burying him to the waist in the mud.—Salisbury News.

The Argentine Confederation.

The Argentine Republic is making reasonable progress. In his recent address to Congress President Avellanda said that the nation enjoys profound peace; that wheat-growing had quadrupled within the last five years, and that the exports of 1875 were greater than those of any previous year. The President also observed that the Government expenses had been reduced $4,000,000, and that three railroads had been opened for traffic since October.

Centenarians.

Ohio has a centenarian aged 114 years, and Indiana has followed suit, and now Illinois threatens to see the blind and go one year better. A good-natured public has lost interest in the little game. Centenarians may as well take back seats unless they can bring forward their mothers to certify to their age.

A MAN was stopped on the road between Santa Cruz and Soquel, Cal., by a highwayman, with the order to stand and deliver what coin he had about him. He stood first-rate, but he didn't hand over the cash worth a picayune. On the contrary, he put his hands in his pockets, drew out from one a twenty-dollar gold piece, and from the other a six-shooter already cocked, and holding both toward the road agent asked him to take his choice. Then it was the footpad's turn to show—which he did—a mighty rapid moving pair of heels and got away.

A STRANGE accident, with fatal results, occurred to John Conally, of Bristol, Pontiac county, Quebec, last week. He was amputating the tail of a young lamb, as is customary with farmers, when the animal, feeling the knife, made a spring to get away. This caused the instrument to enter the young man's thigh and cut one of the principal arteries of the leg so severely that he bled to death.

THE smoke from burning woolen rags will immediately relieve the pain and reduce the swelling of severe wounds.

Ex Governor Lewis, of Alabama, elected Governor by the Republicans in 1872, is out in a letter in favor of Tilden and Hendricks.

From present appearances the Republicans will carry every Northern State except Connecticut.—Chicago Tribune.

The young men see visions and the old men dream dreams out in the city of Chicago.

President Grant shows signs of fatigue in holding the country up by the tail. Sometimes there are symptoms that he has a great notion to let things drop like a hot potato.

Bayonets, bloody shirt and money seem to constitute the radical platform, according to General Kilpatrick's just published letter, in which he represents things in Indiana as desperate for Hayes.

The New Haven Register says:—"Grantism is still the real issue before the American people. Zach Chandler, Don Cameron, Bloody Shirt Morton and all the rest of them, will tell you that is so.

The Hayes badge is a pitchfork. The Radical rogues first stabbed the Treasury with Grant's sword, and now want to finish the job with Hayes' pitchfork. Either weapon is fatal to decency and honesty.

The way the Republicans do it is to tell the people that civil service reform is the next thing on the book, and then to tell the 85,000 officeholders to look out and not let Tilden get a chance to turn them out.

Since Mr. Pierrepont prepared that letter which Babcock made public, he has not been accused of preternatural good sense on this side of the water.—His first speech in England closely resembled the Babcock letter—it was a very good thing not to make public.

We call attention to the excellent letter of Gen. George B. McClellan. "Little Mac." is really in favor of Tilden and Hendricks and reform. He points out the exposures made by the Democratic House, and appeals to his comrades in arms to stand with him, and says, that "the issues at stake now are similar to those for which we fought—the honor and well-being of the nation.

Some time before Gen. Banks' declaration in favor of Hayes and Wheeler, it was whispered with sorrow by the General's Liberals friends that he had made a bargain with the Administration by which he was to receive the navy yard support this fall. He dodged the vote on the Robeson report, announced himself for the Grant candidate, and is already getting his reward. Isaiah Hanscom arrived last week at the navy yard, and immediately ordered one hundred men to be taken on.

The Democratic party's eight months of power in Congress (the House) are barren of good fruits—Saratoga platform.

Thirty millions of dollors have been saved to the people by the retrenchment measures of the Democratic party in the House. Here are good fruits. The reform policy of the House checked the insolence and affrontery of Republican corruption. Here are good fruits. Besides the good fruits produced by the House, the Democratic majority there prevented the growth of more bad fruits than the people could have swallowed without danger.

The Biters Bitten.

A great deal of howling and charging has been done by the Republican press against Mr. Tilden and he has been vilified and abused to the utmost extent.—It is charged that he did not return his taxables to the assessor, correctly and thus perjured himself. These charges have been answered with facts completely exonerating him, But these things awakened a curiosity in the Chicago "Times" to know how Hayes stood and a reporter was dispatched to the home of Ruthy to examine things and if half he tells is true, Hayes is, to put it mildly, a great perjurer. Now, we don't believe in this way of campaigning, but if our Republican friends are so anxious to throw dirt they must not object to being paid in their own coin. The "Times" says:

"In 1874 the uncle of R B. Hayes died leaving him a fortune estimated as high as $400,000 and never less than $250,000 Before his death the uncle had listed his taxable proper at $9,982 for taxation This was generally regarded as a very penurious margin, but no one ever took the old chap to task for it. The next year Hayes retouched the list and reduced it to $2,631, including his own taxables as well. Now, it must be borne in mind that Hayes was in posession of every taxable penny worth owned by his uncle, who was considered to have played it rather sharp in getting the list cut down to $10,000. No sooner, however, had Hayes come into the fortune, than he proceeded to squeeze the taxables from $10,000, or within $12 of it, to $2,531. The next year he climbs up half way in his uncle's figures and returns $2,260. But the items present the most extraordinary exhibit of malversation. Hayes had married a good fortune, and whether it was in his own name or not, he was bound to return the list for taxation all the same. But in the schedule, he puts his fortune of from $250,000 to $400,000, down at $100 "on hand." A man with a fortune of a quarter of a million at the lowest limit, the governor of a state and always in receipt of good income, with but $100 in cash one year, $200 the next, and $300 the year following? Can any business man, or any man, business or not, compare that schedule for 1873, 4 and 5 and doubt the deliberate manufacture of these figures? But the tell-tale schedule details more startling revelations of Gov. Hayes' amazing thrift. He returned a watch one year valued at $300; the next year this remarkable time-piece had fallen to $200. The careful investigator who examined the records says:—"Under the head "all personal property not included in the enumerated items," appears in 1874 $1,000; in 1875, $6,000; in 1876, a total of $4,500. In 187[illegible] the figure was $1,000. This covers mortgage notes still on record, which should have been given in full every subsequent year, aggregating over $9,000.—Added to this should be a gallery of paintings valued at the lowest at $[illegible],000 and a library representing at least $[illegible],000 more. Though these are inside figures here is a total of $18,000, to which at least $2,000 or $3,000, of the household goods should be added, and yet the total for 1874 is but 1,000 increased to $1,120 or $5,710, respectively in 1875 and 1876." This remarkable record of turpitude can neither be ignored nor denied. Gov. Hayes must either show that this extraordinary shifting of possessions in the assessments was in accordance with well established facts as to his fortune, or he must withdraw from a canvass, which, through the zeal of his own supporters, has run into the scrutiny of private transactions.

The business condition of a country must depend upon the degree of confidence which can be reposed in those who conduct the affairs of the government. Gen. Tilden says in his letter of acceptance: "Uncertainty is the prolific parent of mischiefs in all business. Great uncertainty exists in this country at the present time. The earnings of the people are exhausted in supplying extravagant public expenditures. The mismanagement of the currency has rendered all values uncertain. Faithlessness and corruption have destroyed our credit abroad. No one can wonder that the trade of the country languishes, and that commercial confidence is wanting. Nor can there be a change for the better while the causes remain.

If you don't like the Grant gang of thieves and bribe-takers, you are a "rebel." If you think it is time to have reform in national affairs and should indicate such an opinion, you are a "rebel" If it is your opinion that the resumption act ought to be repealed, then you are a "rebel." again. If in looking over the history of 16 years of Radical missrule, you should at last conclude that a change would be official, don't indicate it to radical or you will surely be charged with being a "rebel."

Vote for a change.

Vote to put honest men in office.

Vote against the Hayes' third-termers.

Vote against the Grant gang of Babcock's, Belknap's, Casey's, Butler's and Morton's.

Vote against the men who have passed upon you the resumption act, and refused to repeal it.

Vote for Reform, by voting for "Uncle Jimmy" Williams, Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks.

Grant will be created Marshal of the United States for life, on a salary, if Hayes is elected. This is the bargain, and it will be carried out, unless the people peremptorily stop it.

T. J. Saltsgaber, the genial, pleasant landlord of the Words House, Albion, Ind., called upon us Monday

HON. S. M. HENCH, of Fort Wayne will address the people at Butler Center Saturday evening, Sept. 16.

Don't forget that Ex-Governor Blair of Michigan, speaks at Butler on the 16h inst. We want to see a rousing meeting.

The Presbyterians, of this city, will give an excursion to Chicago during the exposition, via the Air Line Road, starting from the Saginaw depot.

The mangled remains of numberless innocent watermelons are to be seen along the streets where the greedy urchins most do congregate.

Judge Best and C. A. O. McClellan of Waterloo, will practice law together in this and adjoining counties. Judge Best has resigned his judgeship.

The foot race last Monday was won by the Butler runner, Mr. Thompson, in good style. Four were in the race and all made a creditable showing.

The hog cholera seems to yet prevail among the porkers in this county, not to so great an extent, however, as the disease did a year ago.

The remarks of Mr. Voorhees, though he was in great pain, fell upon his listeners with great force, and we know that they fell upon good ground.

Another pole will be raised at Jackman's Corners about three miles east of Waterloo, next Saturday night at which Mr. Kelly and others will appear, to address the people.

It is about time now to sell out and go west, so that you may have ample opportunity to get dissatisfied with the country and get back and settled before frigid winter sets in.

The Tilden and Reform flags are flying in the summer breeze from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The back-country journals are still talking about that "barrel of money." Guess they want some of it.

The foot that lifted Jewell out of the Cabinet elevated him several degrees in the estimation of his countrymen.

Emora A. Storrs, attorney for Babcock and the Whisky Ring, has made a great speech on politics at Aurora, Ill. He was for Hayes.

Edmund Juessen, of Chicago, thinks his brother-in-law, Carl Schurz, "made the mistake of his life in deciding to support Hayes."

The best motto for the campaign is that prophetic sentence from a late speech of Senator Kernan: "Our ticket is going to be elected."

Belknap does,nt care so much for conviction as he does about being disqualified for office. But the day for his stripe of public men is over.

The last joke is the act passed by the New Hampshire Legislature "to aid in the purity of elections." They want purity among the Republicans up there, too.

P V. Hoffman, once of Auburn, formerly of Butler, lately of Garrett, has adjourned to Auburn, his first love, where he will continue the practice of the law.

Butler turned out the largest crowd at the rally here on Monday. The Democracy there are up and at work, and we hope several other points will imitate their example.

General Grant orders the negroes in the South to vote for Hayes and Wheeler, and orders the soldiers to see that they do so. This is the essence of the Southern campaign.

The Butlerites came over Monday with three hundred torches, but there being no speaking in the evening returned home without making a display They were led by the Edgerton Silver Cornet Band.

The crowd on Monday did not fail to appreciate the excellent music furnished by the Butler Band. Though but six pieces they did splendidly, and in their handsome uniforms made a very creditable appearance.

W. Rickel furnishes all kinds of first-class lunches. Keeps the best brands of cigars and tobacco. Keeps all kinds of candies and nuts, and sells lower than the lowest. Give him a call next to Woodford's shoe store. tf

St. Lick, of Waterloo, has two cub bears, which were sent him from Ohio, and it is expected they will get away with all the extra food he has to spare. He expects to add a couple of Calico tigars to his collection.

E. W. Brown, Esq., the genial accomplished editor of the Columbia City "Post," gave us a call yesterday. The "Post" is one of the best papers in the State. Mr. Brown reports Whitley County all alive for reform.

Sam. Alvord, now the Democratic candidate for Clerk of Noble county, came over to hear Williams and Voorhees last Monday, in company with several other prominent gentlemen of that county.

The Republicans held their Auburn and Butler meetings at Garrett lately, with the exception of the "Garrett Guerrillas" the citizens there don't seem to pay much attention to them.

The Hippodrome will appear at the fair in Fort Wayne next week. The fair itself will be a grand affair, and you will get to see the Hippodrome for nothing. Half fare will be offered by railroads, and a large crowd will be in attendance.

For real pure fact and wit combined Garrett is ahead. Someone asked Mr. Thomas this question: "If every thief and liar were arrested and put in the penitentiary, who would run the Government?" "The Democrats," was the prompt response.

Hon. Geo. W. Julian made some of the Republican leaders squirm in his master speech at Indianapolis a few days ago. He is not a Democrat, but he has grown weary of the terrible afflictions that the Republican party have heaped upon the people and he is going to stand by Tilden. He will speak in Waterloo, on Monday Oct. 2d in the afternoon.

When Mr. Packer spoke here, we never hinted that he was a salary grabber, although he took the swag, and afterwards defended the act. But when Mr. Voorhees is announced here, the Waterloo Press rails out about the back salary and thinks it awful. People living in glass houses should not throw stones. Take the mote out of thine own eye, neighbor.

The "Press" of last week corrects an item in this paper about Hayes voting against censuring Oakes Ames. The item was left over from the week before and we did not notice it. We not wish to charge Mr. Hayes wrongfully, and believe the item was incorrect. We propose to be fair and candid, and will resort to no wilful misrepresentation to make a point. If we cannot win by fair means we will not win at all.

Recorder's Fees

Notice is hereby to all those indebted to me for Recording will do well to come and pay up before my term of office expires this fall, for by that time all that is not settled will be put in a fee bill and given to the Sheriff for collection. This will be the last notice.

D. Z. Hoffman, Rec'r.

Sept. 7th, 1876.

It is asserted that the Hon. John Baker said at Kendallville that Catholics and dirty Irishmen vote the Democratic ticket. There are a few Catholics and Irishmen in this county who ought to make a note of this.

Judge B[illegible] resigned the Judgship on the first of this month and Hon. J. A. Woodhull, of Angola, has been appointed by the Governor in his place. While we regret that a good man lays down the honors, we are gratified to know that his place has been filled by one equally able and qualified for the position.

The Auburn Dramatic Company gave two performances at the hall last week, which were well attended and highly appreciated by our people. The act of the "Baby Elephant" was immense and raised great laughter among the audience. The music was tip-top. The company will favor our Waterloo friends with a repetition of the four plays to-night.

Mr. Editor.—I wish to say that I attended the democratic speech on Monday, and I think it was [not] immense. Now, General Mays, you want to do as Captain Shunk did at the Bunkerhill fight, return to Washington. We are all quiet out this way on political affairs but we will make it red-hot for you when we get ready. This is from your obedient servant.

Colonel Wm. Oiler.

The Garrett News said, last week, that Mr. Rose was a good lawyer. The News has been published only a short time in this county. Sometimes we say of some one who had recently died "He was a good fellow," when he might have been a most miserable man, out of respect for his friends. If the News will use the adjective in this connection we agree.

Mr. Kelly challenged Mr. Baker, in a brief note and Baker replied in a long letter making certain provisos. Mr Kelly accepted without hesitation, and now Baker must come to time. His party may get up all the noise and excitement they can to distract the people from the real issues, but Kelly is bound to bring John to time even under disadvantages.

What do the sober thinking people think of a person who, aspiring to the dignified position of County Treasurer, trains around with a lot of boys and exhibits himself in street parades? And there is Captain Cutter doing the same thing. Its a dignified, elevating occupation, especially for a man desiring the confidence of the people. Democrats should stick a pin there, and remember that a man is known by his acts.

Bright, glorous, resplendent Abner, with his spangled, glittering uniform was the cynosure of all eyes at Garrett Saturday night. Thy greatness overwhelms us, and great will be our grief when thou hast left us. Pinchin commands the boys with considerable billiancy, and there's a quiet dignity about the man, when not excited, that is truly wonderful. Take him all in all we shall never see his like again.

Hon. Freeman Kelly, the peoples candidate for Congress, is making a most gallent and manly fight in this district. That he should win against the present Representative from this district, who voted twice against the suspending the rules for the repeal of the odious resumption act, and finally dodged by pairing upon its final passage in the House, no voter can doubt. Elect Mr Kelly and you will have a true Representative in Congress.

The Chicago Times in an editorial on Monday, predicts if the elections were held now in Indiana that "Uncle Jimmy" would have a majority of from 25,000 to 30,000. The Times is well informed and speaks from a knowledge of facts. To reverse this tide, Kilpatrick suggests to Hayes, that the "bloody shirt" must be flaunted, yet more violently, with a good supply of money. Can the freeman of DeKalb be bought?

The Republican National Platform indorses Grant, and Hayes indorses that platform There is not a Republican in DeKalb County who dare defend the Grant administration. If that administration is not defensible, then how can any Republican vote for Hayes. The fact is, voters of DeKalb, a vote for Hayes is a vote for Grant and a third term.

The popularity of our farmer candidate for Governor, is increasing every day among the masses who do not wear kid gloves and drink champagne. He is honest and capaple. He comes from among the people and knows their wants. That he wears "blue jeans," the garb of a laborer and a farmer, we do not deny. That he has not the "physique" of a Webster or the gift of eloquence of a Clay, we do not claim. But he is an "honest man, the noblest work of God." There will be no steals when he is Governor.

EX. GOV. BLAIR,

of Mich., will address the people at

BUTLER, IND'A.

Saturday, Sept. 16, '76

Every fair, candid man in the county should hear him on the issues of the day and we hope he will be greeted with an immense crowd.

Honorable

Fred. O'Donnell,

of Iowa.

will address the people at Auburn, Ind.

Next Saturday Evening.

We trust everybody will attend and hear the above speaker.

To show the aims of a few of the Republican leaders in this county, we need only refer to the cutting down of the Democratic pole at Jackman's Corners, a few days ago. The pole was raised but a short time, when it was hewn to the ground by parties not friendly to the Democracy. The fair, candid people of the county will not indorse such a course.

The meetings of Hon. D. W. Voorhees and "Uncle Jimmy" Williams, are attended by immense outporings of the people. No such enthusiasm has been manifested among the masses since 1856 The "tidal" is with the Democracy. And now no faultering along the line. Every patriot to his work. See that there are not any stragglers in the rear. The victory is ours if we but march forward in solid columns.

The campaign in this State is progressing with much spirit, the enthusiasm, however, being altogether with the Democracy. The Republican meetings in this part of the State especially, are devoid of spirit and lacking in attendance. Such flat failures as Gen. Harrison had at Plymouth, Fort Wayne and Kendallville, are sorely discouraging.

Consult Kilpatrick's letter to Hayes, if you want to know the means by which Indiana is to be carried by the Grantites. Without the voters of the Independents says Kilpatrick, "we are lost." He is a man of methods, however, and therefore suggests, as the green-back party is "poor and needy" than they can be bought. Was ever a greater insult offered to an intelligent class of voters.

The Plymouth "Democrat" says, Hon Freeman Kelley, Democratic candidate for congress, addressed a large and enthusiastic audience at the Parker House last evening. Mr. Kelley is a farmer, a laboring man, and fully understands the Republican legislation that has discriminated in favor of a moneyed aristocracy, and against the laboring classes, making the rich richer and the poor poorer. He is earnest in his advocacy of the people's rights, and if elected, as he will be, will carry out to the letter, as far as he can, the pledges he makes.

The Judicial convention of the Democracy at Waterloo, yesterday was quite lively. After several speeches, it was decided to make no nomination for Judge, and Mr. Tousley, of Noble county was recommended to the people as an able, competent person for the position. For Prosecutor, Mr. D. D. Moody, of this place was nominated on the third ballot, Mr. Baxter, of Summit, getting in on him with a handsome vote. In the Senatorial Convention, Hon. S. S. Shutt was unanimously nominated for State Senator, and we believe this announcement is all the people want, to guarantee the election of a worthy, able, intelligent, political gentleman of legislative experience, to that honorable position.

August Flower.

The most miserable beings in the world are those suffering from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint. More than seventy-five per cent of the people in the United States are afflicted with these two diseases and their effect such as sour stomach, sick headache, habitual Costiveness, palpitation of the Heart, heart-burn, water-brash, gnawing and burning pains at the pit of the stomach, yellow skin, coated tongue and disagreeable taste in the mouth, coming up of food after eating, low spirits, &c.—Go to the drug store of F. E. Davenport and get a 75c bottle, or a sample bottle for 10c. Try it. Two doses will relieve you.

Dessolution Notice.

Notice is hereby given to all interested, that the partnership heretofore existing under the firm name of Stepleton & Parker, in the mercantile business, in the town of Newville, was on the 1st day of September, 1876 dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Stepleton having sold his entire interest in said firm to Smith & Parker, who assume all debts of said firm, and to whom all debts due the firm are to be paid.

ANTHONY STEPLETON,
JOHN N. PARKER.

Newville, Ind., Sept. 5th, 1876.

Money To Loan.

C. A. O. McClellan, of Waterloo, Ind., has now completed his arrangements to loan an unlimited amount of money on five years time in sums of One Thousand Dollars and upwards, at nine per cent. interest payable semi-annually, on first mortgage security on improved farms. He will also make investments for parties having money to loan and guarantee security.

The Democratic rally here last Monday, was largely attended, and the speech by Mr. Williams and Voorhees, well received. Mr. Voorhees was quite sick when he arrived here, yet he appeared upon the stand and talked for three-quarters of an hour to the gratification of the audience Mr. Williams, our candidate for Governor, was listened to with marked attention and made a fair, candid argument in favor of reform. He abused no one, but showed up the managment of the administration the corruptions and malfeasence in office, in an able manner. Mr. Stoughton and Mr. Kelly followed in short speeches, and the people went to their homes, with such truths as are never heard from our radical leaders.

Another Back Down.

The bills announcing the meeting for the Hon. J. C. Stoughton, at Garrett, were printed for two o'clock in the afternoon. We took them over to Garrett ourself. When we arrived we were informed that a republican meeting was to be held on the same day and hour by the Republicans. The bills were then changed to 8 o'clock in the evening. It was afterwards ascertained that the Republicans intended holding their meeting on the same evening. Seeing that there was going to be a collision, the Democrats offered to divide the time with the Republicans which was first agreed to, but Mr. Clark, the Republican candidate came around soon after and opposed the arrangement, and the consequence then was two meetings on the same evening. With large delegations from Auburn and Butler they succeeded in having the largest crowd. Mr. Clark did not want to furnish a Republican crowd for a Democratic speaker. A fine specimen of a Representative he would make for the people. While the Democracy are willing to hear both sides, the Republicans know that defeat stares them in the face, should they consent to listen to the real live issues of the day.

Think for yourself.

Thousands lead miserable lives, suffering from dyspepsia and disordered stomachs and liver, producing billiousness, heartburn, costiveness, weakness, irregular appetite, low spirits, raising food after eating, and often ending in fatal attack of fever. They know they are sick, yet get little sympathy. The unfailing remedy, which is yearly restoring thousands, is Dr. Costa's Radical cure. Sold by F. E. Davenport, the Druggist, Cor. Main and Nineth streets. A 25c bottle will convince you of its merits. Don't delay another hour after reading this, but go and get a bottle, and your relief is as certain as live. Will you do it, or will you continue to suffer? Think for yourself!

Professor Parker's Pleasant Warm Syrup is perfectly safe and extremely palatable. No physic required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

OBITUARY.

Forty-four years ago, a young man, having scarce attained his majority, residing near the quiet little town of Belfast, New York, concluded to seek his fortunes in the west. With valise in hand, a few dollars in his pocket, yet with all, a strong arm and a stout heart, he turned his back upon home, friends and pleasant associations, and with the sun for his guide he stepped boldly out, sad and gloomy at first, but confident and sanguine as to the result. No railroads then permeated every nook and corner of the country, and on foot he made his weary way. Arriving in Ohio, he settled down in the now fertile plains near Bucyrus, and with willing hands, and unwavoring energy he labored with the hardy pioneers, in reclaiming that country from a natural wilderness. Then no happy homes greated the eye, nor civilized voice fell upon the ear; now, the hum of industry, the rattle of machinery is heard, and sweet smiling peace "spreads her softened wings" upon the scene.

Forty-four years go by and the scene changes. A bright Saturday morning comes, and down the thoroughfare he so often trod, wends the gloomy hearse to the last sad resting place of mortal man, and within it are the remains of that flaxen haired youth of forty-four years ago—Mr. William Mallory.

He left a large family, most of them far from him at the hour of death, but he went down into the dark valley of death, not trusting on the help of sons and daughters, but in one, the sheen of whose brightness from the cross on Calvary, gloriously illumned his pathway to the haven of rest. He was one of the most even tempered persons, the most consistent christians we ever knew He lived what he believed, and never wavered from a straight, manly course in life. The esteem and respect which was accorded him by all, was not won by a special attempt on his part, but rather from his naturally genial, and candid demeanor in social life. He was about 68 years of age, and leaves seven children, four sons and three daughters, his wife having died some six years ago.

A number of our citizens attended the joint discussion at Columbia City Tuesday between Senator Sherman, of Ohio, and D. W. Voorhees. The crowd was an immense one, and the debate ably conducted on both sides. Mr. Sherman got all out of his side of the argument there was in it, while Mr. Voorhees was not half exhausted. The finance question was discussed to some extent, Mr. Sherman being the daddy of the odious resumption bill. Mr. Voorhees asked him how he harmonized the national platform with the State platform, the one insisting on the resumption act, and the other demanding its repeal, but when Mr. Sherman come to reply he dodged the question squarely. Mr Sherman spoke of the rebel ex-confederate congress flung the bloody shirt and said the people could not trust rebels. When Voorhees spoke of Longstreet piling up the Union dead for two days at Gettysburg, the hero of a hundred battles, and Mosby, the Gourrilla, slaying Union soldiers in sight of Washington, and then showed how they, though their sins were as scarlet, had been washed as white as wool by voting the Republican ticket, there was a cheer went up from that vast audience that could not be mistaken. It was an honest hearty expression of approval.

TOM'S COME HOME.

BY J. T. TROWBRIDGE.

With its heavily rocking and swinging load,
The stage-coach rolls up the mountain.
The mowers lean on their scythes and say,
"Hullo! what brings Big George this way?"
The children climb the slats and wait
To see him drive through the dooryard gate;
When, four-in-hand, sedate and grand,
He brings the old craft like a ship to land.
At the window, mild, grandmotherly eyes
Beam from their glasses with quaint surprise,
Grow wide with wonder, and guess, and doubt;
Then a quick, half-stifled voice shrieks out,
"Tom! Tom's come home!"

The face at the casement disappears,
To shine at the door, joy and tears,
As a traveler, dusty and bearded and brown,
Over the wheel steps lightly down.
"Well, mother!" "My son!" and to his breast
A forward-tottering form is pressed.
She lies there, and cries there; now at arms-length
Admires his manly size and strength
(While he winks hard one misty eye);
Then calls to the youngster staring nigh—
"Quick! go for your gran'ther! run, boys, run!
Tell him your uncle—tell him his son—
Our Tom's come home!"

The stage-coach waits; but little cares she
What faces pleasantly smile to see
Her jostled glasses and tumbled cap.
Big George's hands the trunk unstrap
And bear it in; while two light-heeled
Young Mercuries fly to the mowing field,
And shriek and beckon, and meet half-way
The old gran'ther, lame and gaunt and gray,
Coat on arm, half in alarm,
Striding over the stony farm.
The good news clears his cloudy face,
And he cries as he quickens his anxious pace,
"Tom? Tom come home?"

With twitching cheek and quivering lid
(A soft heart under the hard lines hid),
And "Tom, how d'e do?" in a husky voice,
He grasps with rough, strong hand the boy's—
A boy's no more. "I shouldn't have known
That beard." While Tom's fine baritone
Rolls out from his deep chest cheerily,
"You're hale as ever, I'm glad to see."
In the back porch the mother stands,
And rubs her glasses with trembling hands,
And smiling, with eyes that blear and blink,
Chimes in, "I never!" and "Only think!
Our Tom's come home!"

With question and joke and anecdote,
He brushes his hat, they dust his coat,
While all the household gathers near—
Tanned urchins, eager to see and hear,
And large-eyed, dark-eyed, shy young mother,
Widow of Tom's unlucky brother,
Who turned out ill, and was drowned at the mill;
The stricken old people mourn him still,
And the hope of their lives in him undone;
But grief for the dissolute, ruined son—
Their best beloved and oldest boy—
Is all forgotten, or turned to joy,
Now Tom's come home.

Yet Tom was never the favored child,
Though Tom was steady and Will was wild!
But often his own and his brother's share
Of blows and blame he was forced to bear;
Till at last he said, "Here is no room
For both—I go!" Now he to whom
Scant grace was shown, has proved the one
Large-hearted, upright, trusty son;
And well may the old folks joy to find
His brow so frank and his eye so kind,
No shadow of all the past allowed
To trouble the present hour, or cloud
His welcome home.

His trunk unlocked, the lid he lifts,
And lays out curious, costly gifts;
For Tom has prospered since he went
Into his long self-banishment.
Each youngster's glee, as he hugs his share,
The widow's surprise, and the old folks' air
Of affectionate pride in a son so good,
Thrill him with generous gratitude.
And he thinks, "Am I that lonely lad
Who went off friendless, poor and sad,
That dismal day from my father's door?"
And can it be true that he is here once more
In his childhood's home?

'Tis hard to think of his brother dead,
And a widow and orphans here in his stead
So little seems changed since they were young!
The row of hats where the hats were hung;
The checkered chimney and hearth of bricks;
The sober old clock with its lonesome ticks
And shrill, loud chime for the flying-time;
The stairs the bare feet used to climb,
Tom chasing his wild bedfellow Will;
And there is the small, low bed-room still,
And the table he had when a little lad;
Ah, Tom, does it make you sad or glad,
This coming home?

Tom's heart is moved. "Now, don't mind me!
I am no stranger guest," cries he.
"And, father, I say!" with the old-time laugh—
"Don't kill for me any fatted calf!
But go now and show me the sheep and swine
And the cattle—where is that colt of mine?—
And the farm and crops—is harvest over?
I'd like a chance at the oats and clover!
I can mow, you'll find, and cradle and bind,
Load hay, stow away, pitch, rake behind;
For I know a scythe from a well-sweep yet,
In an hour I'll make you quite forget
That I've been from home."

He plucks from its peg an old farm hat,
And with cordial chat upon this and that,
Tom walks with his father about the place.
There's a pensive grace in his fine young face
As they loiter under the orchard trees,
As he breathes once more the mountain breeze,
And looks from the hillside far away,
Over pasture and fallow and field of hay,
To the hazy peaks of the azure range,
Which change forever, yet never change.
The wild, sweet winds his welcome blow;
Even old Monadnock seems to know
That Tom's come home.

The old man stammers and speaks at last;
"You notice your mother is failing fast,
Though she can't see it. Poor Will's disgrace
And debts, and the mortgage on the place;
His sudden death—'twas a dreadful blow;
She couldn't bear up like a man, you know.
She's talked of you since the trouble came;
Some things in the past she seems to blame
Herself for; what, it is hard to tell.
I marvel how she keeps round so well,
For often all night she lies awake.
I'm thankful, if only for her sake,
That you've come home."

They visit the field; Tom mows with the men;
And now they come round to the porch again.
The mother draws Tom aside; let sink
Her voice to a whisper, and, "What do you think?
You see," she says, "he is broken quite.
Sometimes he tosses and groans all night,
And—Tom, it is hard, it is hard indeed!
The mortgage, and so many mouths to feed!
But tell him he must not worry so,
And work so hard, for he don't know
That he hasn't the strength of a younger man.
Counsel him, comfort him, all you can,
While you're at home."

Tom's heart is full; he moves away,
And ponders what he will do and say.
And now at evening all are met,
The tea is drawn, the table set,
But when the old man, with bended head,
In reverent, fervent tones has said
The opening phrase of his simple grace,
He falters, the tears course down his face;
For the words seem cold, and the sense of the old
Set form is too weak his joy to hold;
And broken accents best express
The upheaved heart's deep thankfulness.
Now Tom's come home.

The supper done, Tom has his say:
"I heard of some matters first to-day;
And I call it a shame—you're both to blame—
That a son, who has only to sign his name,
To lift the mortgage and clear the score,
Should never have had that chance before.
From this time forth you are free from care;
Your troubles I share; your burdens I bear.
So promise to quit hard work, and say
That you'll give yourselves a holiday.
Now, father! now, mother! you can't refuse;
For what's a son for, and what's the use
Of his coming home?"

And so there is a cheer in the house to-night,
It can hardly hold so much delight.
Tom wanders forth across the lot,
And, under the stars—though Tom is not
So pious as boys sometimes have been—
Thanks Heaven, that turned his thought from sin,
And blessed him, and brought him home once more.
And now he knocks at a cottage door,
For one who has waited many a year
In hope that thrilling sound to hear;
As happy as other hearts may be,
Knows well there is none so glad as she
That Tom's come home.

HAKIM, THE DREAMER.

Hakim, surnamed the Dreamer, was the only son of Hamet, one of the principal Ulemas of Constantinople, a privileged class who hold their lands independently of the will of the Grand Signior, and can only be dispossessed according to law. Having a wealthy and indulgent father, he was free to follow the bent of that inclination for indolent repose which is one of the leading traits of the followers of Mohammed, who, believing that Allah governs all things, take little pains to obtain the good graces or avoid the frowns of fortune. Among the race of indolent Mussulmans, Hakim was the most indolent. He was never known to go out of his way to avoid a misfortune or attain a gratification; and a great portion of his time was passed in indolent contemplation, so profound that, in time, he became known by no other name than that of Hakim, the Dreamer.

His favorite place of resort was Scutari, an extensive cemetery, charmingly situated on a projecting point nearly opposite to the Seven Towers of the Seraglio, and where, amid the dead of past ages, he smoked his pipe, gazed around unconscious of the inspiration of the magnificent scene spread out before him, and fell into a state of mind, betwixt sleeping and waking, in which, though the senses are not actually dormant, the imagination often usurps their empire and palms upon them a thousand deceptions. One calm summer evening, when the long, lingering twilight threw its soft, hazy vail over the face of nature, and the Propontis lay spread out before him without a ripple, Hakim was seated under the shade of an aged tree that threw its wide branches over the tomb of the famous Derrina Al Hader, renowned for his sanctity among all orthodox Mussulmans. The scene was beautiful beyond description. On one hand lay stretched out before him the vast capital of the empire of the Crescent, which, though shorn of its beams, still retains the vestiges of its former magnificence, rising from whose bosom might be seen the glittering domes and minarets of the splendid mosques of St. Sophia, of the Sultan Valida, and of Solyman, the Magnificent. On the other hand, the glassy mirror of the Propontis, glowing with the purple rays of the setting sun, and thickly covered with vessels, whose white sails hung idly from the mast, spread far and wide, bounded, in the distance, by the smiling coast of the ancient Nicomedia. In another direction might be seen the opening of the far-famed Bosphorus, on whose shores the adventurous Argonauts landed in their search for the golden fleece; where Pollux slew the giant Amycus; where good old Phineus was persecuted by the Harpies, and which is infamous in the eyes of all the advocates of free trade for being the first place on record where a custom house was established.

But Hakim saw not these beauties. He was unconscious of the present, and of the past he was ignorant. His eyes indeed roved from one object to another, but without seeing anything, and his mind was equally excursive without dwelling on any one object. But his imagination remained wide awake, excited as it was by the fumes of his pipe, re-enforced by a pill of opium, which Hakim, being an absolute teetotaler, was accustomed to swallow to give additional zest to his reveries. At length, by degrees, the entire scene around him faded away, or at least he became for a time totally unconscious of its existence as well as his own, and the following pageant passed over his head:

It seemed as if he were transported, he knew not how, to those times and regions in which mankind embodied their own passions, feelings and appetites in the form of gods and worshipped monsters of their own creation. It chanced that he arrived at the moment when Jupiter, becoming tired with the never-ceasing complaints of the human race concerning the unequal distribution of happiness, and disgusted with their perpetual envy of each other's lot, had determined to punish them in a most exemplary manner, by granting their prayers and permitting them to exchange lots with those whose situation in life they considered most happy. Accordingly he had commanded the goddess Fame to proclaim by sound of trumpet to the uttermost ends of the earth, that all those who were discontented with their lot, or envied that of others, should come together at the foot of Olympus, bringing their cares, anxieties, misfortunes and sufferings in a sack, for the purpose of exchanging with those whom they most envied.

Quick as thought, and ere the echoes of the trumpet had ceased to reverberate among the recesses of Olympus, it seemed to Hakim as if the entire human race was in motion. Myriads on myriads came rushing upward, treading on each other's heels and striving to get foremost, that they might have the first choice among the mountains of packs that soon rose almost as high as the seat of Jove. Amid the dim obscurity of a vision it was impossible for Hakim to remember the vast diversity of cases that presented themselves, or what infinite modes and forms of real or imaginary sufferings occasioned by an abuse of the blessings bestowed by Providence, were huddled together in the mighty mass. A few only were afterward distinctly remembered by him, and when there seemed to be no more coming the goddess again sounded her trumpet, proclaiming that all those who at the expiration of a year became dissatisfied with their exchange of lots, might return to that which they had discarded.

The first who deposited their packs, according to the recollection of Hakim, were a master and his slave, who, by the sovereign will of Jove, exchanged lots with each other, and both went their way rejoicing. Then came a married man and a bachelor; next a single and married woman; after them a childless couple, and one bearing a large family; next a king and a beggar, followed by a rich glutton and a poor laborer; and then a philosopher and a fool. All these, and millions more, exchanged lots, and tripped away delighted with their new burdens.

Last of all came a venerable old man, with a long white beard flowing down upon his breast, and a pale face scarred with the deep lines of thought, as well as the still deeper furrows of age. Even Jupiter appeared struck with his appearance, and questioned him as to the purport of his visit.

"Oh! mighty Jove," exclaimed the old man in flattering accents, "I have passed my whole life in study and travel. I know all the past. I have seen all the present, but of the future I am as ignorant as the child unborn. Make me, I beseech thee, as wise as the dead—let me know what is to come hereafter."

"Oh! foolish and presumptuous mortal, thou art ignorant, with all thy wisdom and experience, of what thou askest. Knowest thou not that all things are ordained by fate, and that thy knowledge will only make thee more wretched, by showing thee a thousand evils thou canst not avoid and rendering thee incapable of enjoying the 'present, in the dread of the future?' But, take thy wish; go, and become as wise as the dead."

At that moment the old man shuddered, and ran away as fast as his feeble limbs would permit, looking behind with glaring eyes, as if chased by a thousand fiends.

When the prescribed period had passed, which seemed to Hakim but a moment, the trumpet was again sounded, and, to his astonishment, not only the crowd was as great as before, but constituted the very same persons. The goddess greeted them with a significant smile, and, looking wistfully at Jove, who gave a gracious nod, asked, one by one, what they desired. The first that came were the master and his slave, the former of whom answered as follows:

"To exchange lots again. I am tired of having no will of my own."

"And I," said the other, "have learned that it is much more trouble to govern than to be governed. Give me my pack again."

Next came the bachelor and the married man. The former, on being interrogated by the goddess, replied:

"Beneficent lady, I come for my old pack. Be pleased to understand, however, that I admire such beautiful goddesses as you are, and reverence the highly-respectable institution of matrimony. Yet inasmuch as the colt which is expected to be obedient under the saddle must be bridled betimes, so, may it please your divinity, should the bachelor be broke in early, or he will, peradventure, kick up incontinently." With this, he eagerly seized his old pack, and hied away, paying a compliment to a beautiful damsel as he passed.

The married man who had exchanged his pack with the bachelor hereupon eagerly seized that he had just discarded, and was making off with it, when the goddess demanded what reason he had to be dissatisfied with the lot he had chosen.

"May it please your goddesship," replied he, "the moment I regained my freedom I did not know what to do with myself. Being resolved to make the most of my newly-acquired liberty, I plunged into all the gayeties of life; visited all places of public amusement; frequented the society of ladies, where I made love to them, and was laughed at; and, in short, labored harder in the pursuit of pleasure than I ever did to please my wife or support my family. I found myself in the situation of a top which cannot stand without a good whipping, and so I came back for my pack again."

Next in order came the childless couple and the couple having many children, who exchange their lots once more, one declaring that children gave more trouble than pleasure; the other that the cares and anxieties of the parent were doubly repaid by that pleasure of possessing these pledges of love. "Of all the vexations of this world," exclaimed the first, "cross, disobedient children are the worst;" "and of all the enjoyments of this world," cried the second, "there is nothing equal to the smiles and endearments of infancy."

They were followed by the king and the beggar, the former of whom retained little, and the latter had acquired much of the air noble.

"Well!" said the goddess, inquiringly.

"Let me be a king once more," said the monarch; "though in some respects there is no great difference between us. Both are beggars, having nothing but what they derive from the labors of others. The king is, however, a beggar in a greater sense, and that makes the station more dignified."

"Give me my pack again," said the beggar, "for may I be phlebotamized—that is to say, bitten to death by fleas—if I had not rather eat crumbs out of my hat, sleep under a sky blanket, and wear my birthday suit all the year, than take the trouble of governing such a disorderly, discontented, disobedient set of rascally Democrats as now make the task of governing mankind, which was formerly as easy as kiss your hand, rather more than driving a herd of swine. Come, my old friend," continued he, shouldering his pack and limping away after his majesty, of whom he begged charity in the most earnest and affecting manner.

The rich man and the poor laborer came next, and seemed to have exchanged persons as well as lots, for the former looked hard and scanty, while the latter had become bilious and bloated, and halted marvelously in his gait. They re-exchanged their lots with apparently equal satisfaction.

"When I was rich," said the first, "I lacked appetite; but then I had plenty of food, which, on the whole, is better than being hungry and having nothing to eat."

"When I was poor," said the other, "to be sure I lacked leisure and food, but when I became rich I was still worse, for I had neither appetite nor rest. It cost me more labor to digest one dinner than to earn a dozen, and, instead of sleeping quietly, I was constantly ridden by the nightmare, which is ten times worse than walking on foot all day. Besides, I had got a bad temper in exchange for a good one, and was always fretting at something. Then this confounded toe of mine ah, what a twinge!" exclaimed he, making a marvelous wry face, and snatching up the pack which the other had thrown away, walked off with a firm step to his daily labor.

After these had retired, the wise man and the fool approached.

"I am sick of having nothing to think of," said the one.

"I am tired of always thinking," exclaimed the other. "Since I became wise, I find myself only the more conscious of my ignorance, and my sole amusement is in laughing at those fools who pass their whole lives in learning much and knowing nothing. Give me my cap and bells. Good-by wisdom and welcome folly." So saying he departed, making enormous grimaces and cutting the most stupendous capers.

Even the immortal Jove could not forbear smiling at this exhibition, and was indulging his merry humor, when there approached the aged man, with venerable countenance and long white beard sweeping down over his breast, on whom had been bestowed the knowledge of futurity.

"Thou mayest remember, Oh mighty Jupiter," said he, "that exactly one year ago, I, in the presumptuous ignorance of my soul, begged of thee the gift of knowledge of the future as well as of the past and present. Thou didst graciously grant my request, and, like yonder fool, I went my way rejoicing. But ever since that hour I have enjoyed neither peace nor rest. The recollections of the past, the happiness of the present, are all swallowed up in the contemplation of the future, and the dread anticipation of a train of certain evils and sufferings that pass like grim specters before my aching eyes, foretelling and foredooming unutterable woes to come. Take back thy gift, Oh! mighty Jove! and let me be blind as before!"

Jupiter shook his ambrosial curls and gave the nod of fate. The old man seemed relieved of a mighty burden, but, after standing a few moments, sighed and said, "Alas! what now remains for an old man like me?"

"To be content with thy lot in this world, and deserve a better if thou canst, cried Jupiter, in a voice so loud and dread that it aroused Hakim from his revery, and, seeing that darkness had gathered around, he knocked the ashes out of his pipe and returned to the city, pondering on his dream.

The Grace Darling of America.

Ida Lewis, the "Grace Darling of America," continues to be an object of attraction, and daily she receives callers at the little Lime Rock Lighthouse, located in this harbor, near Fort Adams. It is several years since she has saved any lives, yet she is ever on the alert to render assistance when needed. The only occupants of the lighthouse now besides herself are her sister and mother, her father having died a few years ago. Not finding married life congenial to her taste, Ida returned to her romantic home, and is again known by the name of "Lewis," instead of "Wilson," and it is not probable that she will again leave her aged mother for the attractions of married life. Daily she may be seen in the harbor managing her row-boat—one of the prettiest in the place, and one of her numerous presents for her gallantry in saving life—and, of course, her movements are watched by the strangers upon being informed that she is the young lady of whom they have heard so often. A few days ago she went to Rocky Point, and, like numerous other ladies, engaged a boat and went rowing. She thought no one knew her, but in this she was mistaken, for she had no sooner pushed off when the excursionists at that place rushed to the wharf to see her wonderful movements. She remained in the boat for a long time, and showed the curious spectators what she could do with a boat. Everybody was delighted, and she was repeatedly applauded. It was one of the chief attractions at that charming summer resort on that day, and the lessee of the place thought it would be a good idea to have her visit that locality every day for the benefit of the guests. Frequently in this harbor she passes others engaged in the same business, and by her movements challenges the gentlemen or lady occupants of the boats to a race. They are usually beaten, and a few days ago she led by twenty yards another row-boat manned by a veteran in the business, and who, in the collection of ship news, is obliged to use his oars every day. She is quite young, not being over thirty, and is considered very fair-looking by those who are judges of such matters. She speaks of the many lives she has saved with unusual modesty, and we have never heard of her expressing herself otherwise than thankful that it was her duty to risk her own life for the benefit of others. She takes the responsibility of having the lighthouse properly cared for, and the mariner has yet to be found who can say that the Lime Rock Lighthouse was not found lighted every time he has entered or left this port, and it is hoped the Government will continue to allow her to be its keeper as long as she is willing to perform its onerous duties.—Newport Letter in the New York Herald.

Canadian Pacific Railway.

The people of Vancouver's Island are considerably agitated on account of the general supposition that the Dominion government has practically abandoned the scheme of a Canadian Pacific railway, the western terminus of which had been promised to the Island. On the occasion of Lord Dufferin's recent visit to Victoria he was waited upon by a deputation of citizens, who presented an address setting forth the grievances of the Province in the matter of the railroad project. Lord Dufferin declined to receive the addresses, but referred the petitioners to the Crown. A good deal of feeling is manifested by the Islanders, and there is open talk of a separation from the Dominion unless the railroad is built according to the original agreement. The Toronto Globe, speaking with authority as a ministerial organ, denies that the government has abandoned the Pacific railroad project

Curious Lawsuit.

The Springfield (Me.) Reporter gives an account of a funny lawsuit in that town, brought in the name of the estate of Ira Brackett against John H. Powers, for assault and battery on a boy named George A. Brackett. Ira Brackett, the grandfather, wanted the boy George's hair cut, and told the barber to cut it as short as he could over the comb. It was done so, but that was shorter than they thought for, so he brought suit for damages. The family made the boy eat with his hat on, because they can't bear his looks at the table, and don't send him to school, for the boys will laugh at him. No malice was shown, and the barber was discharged.

Spiders and Snakes in Connecticut.

In Nelson Williams' cellar a spider had prepared his web between a barrel and tub, and there, suspended from the ground, hung a small snake about ten or eleven inches in length. The thread of the web had been ingeniously twisted or woven around the tail of the unfortunate reptile, and it was evident that he had been drawn up from the ground. The spider seemed anxiously watching his squirming victim from one corner of the web, probably waiting for life to become extinct. The snake remained in this precarious attitude for thirty-six hours, and then escaped.—Danielsville Transcript.

THE PACIFIC ISLANDS.

Their Races, People, and Traits.

Capt. Simpson, who has been exploring the Pacific ocean for the past five years, has lately delivered a most interesting lecture at Sherborne, in England, upon the islands and the population which he visited in his travels. He has given very curious details about the Saloman islands, about which very little is known. It has been believed by Darwin and other sages that all these islands were once united and formed a continent. Some of them were coral, others basalts or of volcanic formation. Several of them are surrounded by coral reefs of 300 or 400 miles, in the interior of which are four or five large islands. The real volcanic islands have reefs very near their shores. All the sea between New Guinea and Australia being on a single bottom level, anchors may be sunk in any place, and there is no doubt these two countries were once united. These islands are inhabited by two distinct races, though there are a great variety of inhabitants. One is that people which inhabit the Caroline, Marshall, and Gilbert islands, who are Malays, with long, straight, and generally black hair. The others are the Papuans, a race with woolly and crisped hair. The Tongans, the New Zealanders, and the Samoans are mixtures of the two races. According to a tradition of the New Zealanders they came either from Samoa or Tonga. The people of these islands are expert navigators. They sometimes start off for six months in a flotilla of canoes and travel several hundred miles in that manner. Upon one of the Saloman islands Capt. Simpson met seven men and four or five women, who had started in canoes upon a voyage of 1,400 miles. At the Strong islands we saw one of the most astonishing constructions in the world; it is of stone, twenty feet in length, roughly hewn, and is surrounded by immense trenches. He questioned the tribes of this island in vain upon the traditions of the country. The island is inhabited by a degenerate race. The connection of the islanders with the Europeans is very disadvantageous to the former; they have contracted habits of drunkenness and other vices, which has caused a rapid depopulation. Ten years ago the Strong islands had 2,000 inhabitants; in 1874 they were reduced to 250. The islanders are very simple and quiet in their ways.

When Capt. Simpson visited the house of the King, he found his wife, a charming little woman, seated before an embroidery stand. She spoke English very well, and was very affable and polite; but later, when he bought four cows for his ships, he noticed that one of them was that of the wife of the American missionary, and that it had been stolen by His Majesty. Upon the neighboring island he was struck with the difference between the two people. Upon this island, one mile and a half in length and one mile in width, and which is of stone, he found 2,000 inhabitants and he attributes this fact to the isolation in which they live, far from all white people. They are very inoffensive, and have never even seen a man-of-war. A pirate in whose pursuit the Captain had been sent, paid a pension to the chief as long as he needed it, and they lived in the best understanding. The inhabitants own a great number of tortoises, weighing as much as 300 pounds apiece, and which they willingly part with for a pinch of tobacco. They are of a far more robust temperament than those who have been in continual relations with Europeans. Capt. Simpson also visited the beautiful island of Lugona, the inhabitants of which are very simple. They are very black and wear long hair. The men particularly pay great attention to their hair, and delight in ornamenting it with flowers. Women wear theirs short, and are not allowed to appear in public. The Captain saw savages on another island, Hookadudos, of the same race as those of Lugona, who would not allow white people to land upon their shores. They even attacked a German brig which attempted to approach them, but was obliged to fly, after having escaped from great danger.

Capt. Simpson landed during the night time; the savages were so frightened that they immediately fled to another island. The Captain made a tour of the place and found thirty or forty canoes. He vainly tried to approach the savages by showing them presents of pearls, necklaces, mirrors, etc., but they could not make up their minds to admit white people among them. These savages are almost entirely naked. Their arms are lances, slings and stones. Capt. Simpson managed to get possession of an earring, which he took from the ear of a savage; it is a sort of tortoise-shell chain, two yards in length. They bore great holes in their ears and also in the skin of their necks, to support the weight of these earrings. The natives of the island of New Hanover know nothing either of tobacco or of Europeans. What caused them the greatest astonishment was a fragment of an old newspaper. Anything could be obtained of them with a piece of paper. He asked a savage if paper was a precious thing. "Oh yes," he was answered; "this paper is worth several excellent women!" Upon the island of New Britain the inhabitants were very suspicious. They even fired their javelins at several of the officers, who were obliged to use their firearms and kill two or three. The Captain then visited the Saloman islands, inhabited by cannibals. He saw a row of scalps in the house of the chief, into which he managed to penetrate. The most remarkable island in one particular is the Isabella, where the people live in the trees. The Captain saw the house of the chief, ornamented by twenty-five freshly-cut human heads. He asked the son of the chief the motive of these executions. "Oh, there is none," he answered. "We only sent out to cut off heads." It is to escape these man-chases that the savages retire into trees, together with their families, to pass the nights. Capt. Simpson ascended to one of these cabins. It was situated at a height of eighty feet, and was reached by a vine ladder. The Captain has brought a slip of this vine back with him; it resembles a slip of a gigantic French bean-stalk. It is of the size of a large scimitar. These airy houses have lost a great deal of their value since the natives have learned the use of revolvers.

SUPPOSE.

BY T. K. ROBERTSON.

He. Suppose,
Fadette, that I, instead of keeping tryst
With you to-night, had staid away to doze,
Or call upon Miss Brent, or play at whist—
Suppose?

She. Suppose
You had? Think you I should have cared?
Indeed,
Ain't you a bit concei——don't take my rose—
A gift to me. From whom? Well—Joseph
Mead,
Suppose?

He. Suppose
It is? Then I'm to understand, Fadette—
If I must read your words as plainest prose—
My presence matters not to you—and—yet,
Suppose—

She. Suppose
You are to understand me? You're free;
Do, if you wish! And—oh! the river's froze
What skating we shall have! To-morrow we—That's Jose—

He. And Jose
Be hanged! It seems to me, Miss Lowe, that yo
Are acting rather lightly: rumor goes
That he—but since I seem to bore, adieu!—
She. Suppose—

He. Suppose
We say good-night,
She. Good-night, sir, and good-bye!
He. What does this mean, Fadette? Are you—
She. We'll close
This scene at once. My words are plain, sir, I
Suppose?

He. Compose
Yourself, Fadette.
She. My name, sir, is Miss Lowe!
He. Come, come, Fadette, do look beyond your nose,
And—
She. Here's your ring, sir!
He. I receive, it, though
Suppose—

She. Suppose
You do, sir?—you—
He. Enough, Miss Lowe. Farewell!
'Tis best. I've been deceived in you, God knows!
Coquette! a heartless flirt! a haughty belle Who chose—

She. Suppose—
Oh!—oh! let's part as friends! I hate you—there!
He. Fadette! why, sweet, in tears! This surely shows
You'll pardon me, a brute!
She. And—Frank—we'll ne'er
Suppose.

ROME has one of the shrewdest and most reliable weather prophets in the world. Being asked whether he thought this would be a cold winter or not, he looked at the sun, dug up some roots of grass, examined the husks of a dozen ears of corn, and then said, impressively, "I don't know." Events will undoubtedly prove that he was right.

A MAN whose reputation was none of the best, recently retired into the country to enjoy his ill-gotten gains. A gentleman, noticing that he always carried a heavy stick at night, asked: "Why this precaution? Doesn't he know that the road is safe?" "Of course," replied a friend; "he is the last man not to be aware of the efficiency of the police."

"WHY, husband," exclaimed a Chicago wife, not long since, "there goes our old neighbor's family in a bran-new rig—coach, horses and coachman. Has he gone into bankruptcy again?" "No, he hasn't gone into bankruptcy," replied the husband, knowingly, "but you remember he was elected to the city Council last year!" N. B.—Chicago Aldermen get no salaries.

A CERTAIN physician on the Public Square, says the Cleveland Leader, has a large card hung up in his office with these words printed thereon: "Book agents and peddlers charged five dollars an hour for conversation." The other day a book agent came and was just beginning a rigmarole about "the latest and best work on ——" when the physician pointed to the card. He read the words over but once, when he handed the physician a five-dollar bill and was about to commence operations again, when the man of medicine said: "Take a chair, please, and keep your money. Hand me your subscription book." He has now bought a brace of derringers.

IF anybody still clings to the idea that Detroit is an old fogy town that man is laying up sorrow for his soul. They do business here without any fooling around or clawing off. Yesterday, after dinner, a man walked into a Grand River avenue grocery and said: "Name's Jones—No. 18 Smith street—send up butter—nice and hard—four pounds—charge it." The grocer was posting up his cash book, and without even raising his eyes from the page he replied. "Butter's cash—can't do it." "All right—go t' thunder!" said the customer, as he turned to go. "I will—good-by," replied the grocer, and in another minute the store was as lonely as before.—Free Press.

THERE died recently on Clarke's Island—the only one in Plymouth harbor—Mr. Edward Winslow Watson, known to his neighbors as the "Lord of the Isle." For nearly two centuries his family has been in possession of the island on which he lived and died. He was an odd genius, having no education in the common acceptation of the phrase, but being both a student of poetry and a poet himself in all his habits of thought. He was entirely unconventional, but without taint of coarseness; he kept, throughout youth and manhood, a vigorous, healthful, sweet, and ingenuous nature.

"THOSE CHRISTIAN DOGS."

Horrible Atrocities by the Fiendish Turks in Servia.

[Belgrade Cor. New York Times.]

There are consuls from England and France and Russia at Philippopoli, and yet Bulgarian girls are sold every day in its market-place like cattle, and similar outrages are perpetrated at Khaskoye and Tchirpan in the vilayet of Adrianople. In Tirnova, Rahova, Sofia and Philippopoli twenty-seven unarmed citizens were shot down in the public streets during the week immediately following the declaration of war. On the 12th of July eight merchants of the neighboring village of Koprishtza were executed at Sofia. On the same day, at Tatar-Bazadjik, a town of 18,000 inhabitants, two popes, or Bulgarian priests, were hanged, in their vestments, upon the bridge across the Maritza, and ten peasants at the corners of the streets in the Christian quarter. Not even the mockery of a trial was pretended to in any of these cases, which were the unauthorized but unpunished acts of the Circassian irregulars. On the 11th of July, a female teacher, aged 17, a former pupil of the Protestant Missionary School, was arrested at Panaguritch and brought to trial at Tatar-Bazadjik on the charge of corresponding with the insurgents. She was, of course, condemned, and, after being submitted to every outrage, was crucified on the highway. On the 19th of July, another girl, the beauty of Plevno, was sold in the bazaar of that town for fifteen Turkish pounds. Hordes of Tartars, Bashi-Bazouks and Circassians sweep through the country devastating all around them, and carrying away all the most beautiful boys and girls for the harems of the Turkish dignitaries. Over 100 hitherto prosperous villages are in ashes, and whole provinces, once the source of its greatest revenue to the Government, are now lying waste and desolate. The populations are dying of hunger, and thousands of once wealthy citizens are begging their bread, barefooted, in the streets of Philippopoli. The prisons are crammed with Bulgarians, in such numbers that they die for want of air, and their piteous cries for mercy are heard distinctly during the silence of night.

Everywhere the Turks are preaching the extermination of "those Christian dogs who have forced them to leave their quiet life to fight against the enemies of Allah." Between Ak-Palanka and the Servian frontier not one village has been left standing. At Posavina, on the Save, every Christian district has been abandoned by its population, which has fled for protection to the Servian camps. On the battle-fields where the Turks have been successful all the wounded have been mutilated, and by a refinement of cruelty have been left to die in agony, with their eyes dug out, their lips, noses and ears cut away. Not only do the irregulars, but the Nizams and the Redifs, participate in these atrocities, and weeping women tell you how their innocent babes have been tossed into the air by these ruffians, to be impaled upon the points of their yataghans. Through the whole valley of the Nisharva, in the vicinity of Nisha, not a priest or Christian preacher has been spared to perform religious service at the funerals of the dead.

Nor are these and similar atrocities confined to the provinces in the neighborhood of the theater of war. It is the same thing along the Black sea coast. At Nevrokop eighty young men were seized on the 20th of July and sold as slaves in the adjoining villages. The whole population of Burgas was disarmed, even of its scythes and reaping-hooks; fifteen Christians were slaughtered in cold blood, and ten villages of the district burned to the ground. In Salonica six of the most wealthy citizens have been imprisoned; in Bitolia four others. The crime charged upon these unfortunates is the sale of Christian books, of which, and especially of maps of the country, the Turks have a holy horror. Every bookstore has been closed in the provinces, and the dissemination of all literature not in Turkish characters has been forbidden under pain of death. I will only add that these instances of Turkish "amenities" have been furnished me by a Christian employe of the Porte, who was a secretary of one of the members of the commission appointed to investigate the outrages committed in Bulgaria; he adds that "no true report will ever be published."

The London Daily News' correspondent, at Prince Milan's headquarters, writes as follows:

Every tongue is charged and every heart is full of well-authenticated tidings of Turkish atrocities committed on the inoffensive peasant folk of the frontier villages in districts where there can be no pretense for military reasons. The men are gone from the villages of the Greuze; the victims are the miserable women and helpless children. Burning, wrecking, butchery, and violation constitute, to all appearances, the enjoined functions of the merciless Bashi-Bazouks and ruffianly Redifs, whom the Turkish commanders, keeping in fixed positions their regular troops, let loose with letters of marque to practice the utmost ingenuity of deviltry.

From the frontier district between Nisch and Alexinatz come now similar tidings to those I telegraphed the other day as having been sent by Alempics from the western frontier about Bellina. No man who is not obstinately determined to be incredulous can question the truth of these statements. Officers and soldiers who came down from the front authenticate them with tales of burnt villages which they have seen, the mangled bodies of children lying in the gutters among the charred debris, headless trunks of Servian soldiers in places where they had been fighting, men in the up-country hospitals with noses slit by knives as they lay helpless from their wounds. In the course of an afternoon's ride, I yesterday found my way into a little village on the slope, about the door of one of the houses in which there was a group of women and children, with here and there an old man—all the able-bodied men are away to the war. On the settle under the projecting eaves there sat a woman, draggled, miserable, and forlorn, with a boy about 12 years old standing by her side; and around them the people had formed a semi-circle, and were looking on with a strange concerned patience of silence. The woman, too, was silent; she sat there in an apathetic revery of despondency, with her eyes on the ground, and one arm round the boy. One of the women whispered something to my companion, a Servian officer, whose face flushed, and whose mouth set sternly at the slow recital. Dismounting, he approached the woman, and, speaking to her, startled her from her abstraction. As he spoke, at first she was asleep seemingly and indifferent; her aspect was that of one with no interest in anything. But, at length, she kindled, and with flashing volubility poured forth the terrible story of her wrongs, which my companion hurriedly and by scraps translated to me.

Delicacy, after all, is a relative term. An Englishwoman, if she could have brought herself at all to tell the shameful story of outrage and indignity which this miserable creature had to recount herself, would have spoken of her degradation and its details with trembling lip and downcast eye. Not surely the less did this Sclave woman quiver with the agony of her involuntary degradation because she told us of it—here before the people—with shrill voice and flashing volubility of utterance. The personal outrages to which she had been subjected cannot be written down in their horrible circumstantiality; but you may realize how the recital thrilled her audience, if you recall the shuddering spasm that vibrated through England when the earliest tidings, happily in one item of atrocity which they comprised not true, reached up of the opening scenes of the Indian mutiny. Her cottage had been burnt before her eyes; of three children she had seen one, her baby, tossed about from soldier to soldier, and then flung into the flames; of the second she knew nothing; the third, the lad who was now with her, had made his escape timeously, and joined her, from out the cover of a wood, after she had been allowed to drag herself away from the scene of deviltry. Her relatives lived, she said, in one of the hamlets of the Golubigge upland, and she had tramped thus far on her way to shelter herself among them. Her husband had left for the army since the earliest days of the war, and she knew nothing of his whereabouts.

OUTRAGES IN BOSNIA.

A telegram from Vienna to the Courrier de France says that massacres have been commited by the Turks in Bosnia. In the villages of Pervan and Timar 300 Christians were drowned after being tortured. At Pavica twelve women were cut to pieces and thrown to the dogs. At Ratklovo sixty children were stoned by the Turks, led by one Fechim Effendi, to avenge a relation of Maj. Stocsvice Bey, killed at Bellina. At Sokolovo 180 young girls taken from the neighboring villages were penned in a field, and after the prettiest had been picked out for the harems of Fechim and Stocsvics, the others were abandoned to the soldiery, and were violated and murdered. At Maidan the Christian population assembled at market were massacred by a fanatical mob led by Hadji Omer Effendi and another functionary named Ibrahim Kurusovics Aga. The victims in this case numbered 3,000. On Friday, July 21, there was another massacre at Pryedor, under similar circumstances.

All sorts of excesses by Bashi-Bazouks are reported from Brod. On the 12th and 13th a band of Bashi-Bazouks, numbering 600, pillaged and burned the village of Gena Mahalli, on the railroad between Adrianople and Philippopolis. In the neighborhood of Ismid Nicomeden there were similar atrocities.

Clearing Land with Dynamite.

Experience at clearing lands, both in removing stumps and boulders with dynamite, in Scotland, has proved successful. The following account is given of a late trial in an Edinburgh paper:

A spadeful of earth was removed from the side of a stump, and a hole driven into the stump with a crowbar. Into this hole a cartridge of dynamite was pressed by means of a wooden ramrod, then a detonating percussion cap, with a Blackford's fuse attached, was squeezed into a small cartridge or primer of dynamite, and inserted into the hole in the trunk in contact with the charge. The hole was filled up with loose earth, about a foot-length of the fuse being left bare. A match was next applied to the fuse, and sufficient time was taken for the powder to reach the percussion cap, to allow the operatives to retire to a safe distance. When the explosion occurred the trunk was literally blown out of the ground, some of the fragments, weighing nearly twenty pounds, being thrown to a distance of over a hundred yards. The destruction of the stump was complete. In breaking up the bowlder stones, the dynamite was simply placed on top of the stone, covered with wet sand, and fixed with the fuse in the ordinary way. The result was the reduction of the bowlders to fragments the size of a walnut. It was effectually proved by the experiments that land can be speedily cleared of formidable obstructions to good cultivation by the use of dynamite, and the committee of the society who watched the operations expressed themselves as highly satisfied with the results.

A Conspiracy That Didn't Work.

An Udderzook conspiracy has been brought to naught in Missouri. In the summer of 1874 a man named Folk insured his life for $10,000 in the New York Mutual Life Insurance Company for the benefit of his wife, the premium being paid by an intimate friend named Mosely. The next winter Folk disappeared. His gun and coat were found on the ice on the river, and Mrs. Folk became convinced that he had been drowned. His body was advertised for, and a man came forward who declared he had recognized Folk in a corpse that was taken out of the river when the ice broke up in the spring. Application was made for the payment of the money, but the suspicion of the agents was aroused and they declined. Mosely was suspected of having arranged the details of the fraud, and he was "shadowed by the detectives." Finally, information of the whereabouts of Folk himself was obtained, and about a week ago he was found in a cabin in Prairie county, Ark. He was brought back to his mourning wife, and the two, with their friend Mosely, are now domesticated in the St. Louis jail, awaiting trial.

SOME GIANTS.

A Couple That the Fashionable Hotels Cannot Accommodate.

[From the Rochester Express.]

There is on exhibition in a store on State street, in this city, perhaps the most remarkable couple in the world—a man and woman who are giants in stature. They are Mr. and Mrs. M. V. Bates, whose home is now in Seville, Medina county, Ohio. They are each 7 feet 11½ inches in height, the husband weighing 478 pounds, while the wife weighs 418 pounds. The common-sized visitor, when placed between them, feels very much as Gulliver must have felt when he fell among the giants.

Mr., or Captain Bates, as he is called, is a finely-proportioned man, of ruddy, healthy-looking complexion, straight and military-looking in his regimentals. His immense stature is not so noticeable as that of his wife, who seems almost awkward somehow on account of her length; she being actually taller for a woman than he is for a man. They are evidently people who, if not so wonderfully tall, would be considered commonplace.

They are intelligent, however, and the lady especially feels the awkwardness of her position as the object of the curiosity and open-mouthed wonder of the multitude. In an interesting conversation with our reporter, she showed openly her dislike of the life she is leading, and her longing to return to her home in Ohio. Their home, by the way, was one built and furnished especially for them. The ceilings are 12½ feet high, and no doorway is less than 8½ feet high. Of course they find the hotel accommodations unsuitable to them wherever they go, as the doorways are so low and the beds so short.

One of the strangest facts about their history is that they were the children of common people. Mrs. Bates' father was only 5 feet 4 inches in height, while her mother was only a common-sized woman. Her brothers and sisters are of no remarkable height. Capt. Bates' father was 6 feet 2 inches in height—a tall man, but a dwarf compared with his son. Bates is now 29 years of age. He is a native of Letcher county, Kentucky. His wife is a Nova Scotian, 27 years of age. They were married in London, England, while traveling in that country on exhibition.

Mortal Enemy to the Grasshopper.

The St. Paul (Minnesota) Pioneer-Press says: "There has heretofore been some talk about a parasite having been found adhering to the grasshopper, which it was fondly hoped would ultimately exterminate that destructive insect. Early in the spring several parties forwarded to this office specimens of the 'hoppers, underneath whose wings could plainly be seen a little bug, which, it was alleged, was surely killing the grasshopper. It is needless to say that this hope was never realized, and that no substantial relief was furnished by any labors of the parasite upon the live 'hopper. Now, however, we have a different story to tell, and there is almost positive evidence to prove that the remedy is at hand in the shape of an egg-eating bug, which is surely and certainly destroying all the eggs laid by the grasshoppers this year, thus insuring Minnesota an exemption from the ravages of this voracious and destructive insect next year. This bug is of a deep red color, about the size of a flea, or rather a louse, resembling the latter somewhat in its shape and movements. Ex-Gov. Stephen Miller has forwarded to President Drake, of the St. Paul and Sioux City road, a box full of earth which originally contained a mass of grasshopper eggs, but which had been transformed by these parasites into a quantity of loose soil, mingled with the romnants of discolored egg-shells, with a multitude of the fat little red bugs prancing around on the surface, apparently in pursuit of something more to eat. As to the utility and complete success of these bugs as destroyers of the grasshopper eggs, there would seem to be no doubt in the minds of those who have given the subject a general examination, as well as of those who have personally inspected their mode of operation and the places where they have already utterly destroyed the eggs laid by the 'hoppers a few weeks ago."

What is Any Man's Affliction to This?

Tuesday evening, shortly after retiring for the night, the matron of the Home went down to the front door and found a little girl stranger calling loudly for help, snugly wrapped and laid upon a bundle that proved to be clothing for the little one. A note was also found, written in a lady's hand, plain and neat. The little one is a nice, healthy-looking girl, apparently about 8 weeks old. The letter read as follows: "I am a poor woman; have been married two years; my husband left me on the 8th day of May in search of work. I have not seen or heard of him in that time. He left me a little money, but it's all gone. I tried to get work, but could not on account of my child; if I keep her we must both starve; I know of no other to see her provided for than the way I have decided on. I can probably get my own living, and if possible, will send you money to pay her keeping, perhaps not enough, but all I can get will be sent to you for her. If my husband comes back I will come and get my child; until then I must let strangers care for her. It breaks my heart to let her go, but I can do no better; I have spent my last penny for things for her; my last 2 cents got her a half pint of milk this morning, and I have not tasted food to-day, nor do I know where I am going to stay to-night. You may think I am an unnatural mother, but put yourself in my place and then you will see differently. My child's name is Nellie May, and I entreat you to love and be kind to my dear innocent babe, as you hope for mercy hereafter yourself."—Scranton (Pa.) Times.

The Law of Horse-Hire.

The Rural Sun has the following: It has been decided that when a horse or carriage is let out for hire for the purpose of performing a particular journey, the party letting warrants the horse or carriage fit and competent for such a journey. If the hirer treats the horse or carriage as any prudent man would do, he is not answerable for any damage that either may receive. But he must use the horse for the purpose for which he hired him. For instance, a horse hired for saddle, must not be used in harness. If the hirer violates this express condition of the contract he is liable for any damage that may occur. If the horse is stolen through the hirer's negligence, such as leaving the stable door open all night, he must answer for it. But if he is robbed of it by highwaymen, when traveling the usual road at usual hours, he cannot be held for damages. As these questions are frequently in dispute, these decisions may be interesting.

Excitement in the Coal Region.

[Pottsville (Pa.) Cor. New York Herald.]

A great deal of excitement was caused here and throughout the coal region this afternoon by the intelligence of the breaking up of the coal combination in New York. It is generally believed here that the effect will be very disastrous, and predictions are made that a number of individual operators will be ruined. The most hopeful operator in the country told the Herald correspondent that he did not apprehend any permanent lowering of prices, but that after the stock on hand is disposed of, prices will again advance; others think a war between the great companies has been inaugurated, and that in the contest the individual operators will be great sufferers. What effect the destruction of the combination will have on the wages of the thousands of poorly-paid miners and laborers cannot now be safely predicted, though it is easy to see that their prospects are not brightened.

WILHOFT'S FEVER AND AGUE TONIC.—This medicine is used by construction companies for the benefit of their employes, when engaged in malarial districts. The highest testimonials have been given by contractors and by the Presidents of some of the leading railroads in the South and West. When men are congregated in large numbers in the neighborhood of swamps and rivers, Wilhoft's Tonic will prove a valuable addition to the stock of medicines, and will amply reward the company in the saving of time, labor and money. We recommend it to all. G. R. FINLAY & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

VEGETINE has never failed to effect a cure, giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease.

AGUE is always caused by malaria. Shallenberger's Pills always cure it. Price $1.00.

MANY who are suffering from the effects of the warm weather and are debilitated, are advised by physicians to take moderate amounts of whisky two or three times during the day. In a little while those who adopt this advice frequently increase the number of "drinks," and in time become confirmed inebriates. A beverage which will not create thirst for intoxicating liquors, and which is intended especially for the benefit of debilitated persons, whether at home or abroad, is Dr. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic. Containing the juices of many medicinal herbs, this preparation does not create an appetite for the intoxicating cup. The nourishing and the life-supporting properties of many valuable natural productions contained in it, and well known to medical men, have a most strengthening influence. A single bottle of the Tonic will demonstrate its valuable qualities. For debility arising from sickness, over exertion, or from any cause whatever, a wine-glassful of Sea Weed Tonic taken after meals will strengthen the stomach and create an appetite for wholesome food. To all who are about leaving their homes, we desire to say that the excellent effects of Dr. Schenck's seasonable remedies, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, are particularly evident when taken by those who are injuriously affected by a change of water and diet. No person should leave home without taking a supply of these safeguards along. For sale by all Druggists.

HONEST OPINION!

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir:—This is to show that my son was taken sick in January, 1861, with Scrofula, which came out in large sores and ulcers on his leg and hip. His leg was swelled more than twice its natural size. He had several doctors of high standing in their profession—two from Boston and three from Charlestown—without getting a bit better. He was obliged to lie wherever he was placed, for he had no use of his limbs whatever. When we had given up all hopes of his living we were told to try VEGETINE, the great blood remedy; and he had taken it but a short time before we could see a great change. The sores run so bad that we had to change the cloths four or five times a day. Still, he was getting better; for he could move his limbs and help himself a little. He was soon able to sit up in bed, and, by constant use of VEGETINE, it has cured him. He has a lame leg, which he will probably have for life; but we all honestly believe if we had used VEGETINE before we had bothered with those doctors, it would have saved the use of his leg, and restored it to natural health. I hope all those troubled with Scrofula will read this testimony of me and my son, who is now well, and able to speak for himself.

CATHERINE MAHONEY,
DANIEL MAHONEY,
13 Trenton street, Charlestown, Mass.

May 10, 1872.

The above plain but honest statement conclusively shows the quick and thorough cleansing effects of the VEGETINE in Scrofula.

VEGETINE is acknowledged by all classes of people to be the best and most reliable blood purifier in the world.

Nearly Blind!

H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir:—In expressing my thanks to you for benefits derived from the use of VEGETINE, and to benefit others, I will state:

When eight or nine years old I was afflicted with Scrofula, which made its appearance in my eyes, face and head, and I was very near blind for two years. All kinds of operations were performed on my eyes, and all to no good result. Finally, the disease principally settled in my body, limbs and feet, and at times in an aggravated way.

Last summer I was, from some cause, weak in my spine and kidneys, and it was at times very hard to retain the urine. Seeing your advertisement in the Commercial, I bought a bottle of VEGETINE, and commenced using according to directions. In two or three days I obtained great relief. After using four or five bottles I noticed it had a wonderful effect on the rough, scaly blotches on my body and legs. I still used VEGETINE, and the humorous sores one after another disappeared until they were all gone, and I attribute the cure of the two diseases to VEGETINE, and nothing else.

If I am ever affected with anything of the kind again, I shall try VEGETINE as the only reliable remedy. Once more accept my thanks, and believe me to be,

Very respectfully,
AUSTIN PARROTT,
No. 25 Gano street, Cincinnati, O.

HEALTH AND HAPPINESS!

FOR SUFFERING MILLIONS!

No external remedy for fifty years has created for itself so wide-spread a popularity in so short a time as Collins' Voltaic Plaster. And deservedly so; for no remedy has been so successful in the cure of Lameness, Soreness, Weakness, Numbness, and Nervous Pains and Aches. A single trial is convincing.

COLLINS' VOLTAIC PLASTER consists of silver and zinc plates, carefully attached together and embedded in a Medicated Porous Plaster. (See cut.) A narrow strip of cloth, which is not to be removed, is placed over the plates. When the plaster is placed upon the affected part, which can be done as quickly and conveniently as with the ordinary porous plaster—that is, by mere pressure of the hand—the natural warmth and moisture of the skin causes the plates to throw out a current of electricity so gentle that it is scarcely possible to feel it otherwise than by the soothing and grateful warmth produced, yet so penetrating as stop almost immediately the most excruciating pain, remove soreness, lameness, and draw inflammation from the lungs, liver, kidneys, spleen, bowels, bladder, heart, and muscles. A single COLLINS' VOLTAIC PLASTER for local pains, lameness, soreness, weakness, numbness and inflammation of the lungs, liver, kidneys, spleen, bowels, bladder, heart, and muscles, is equal to an army of doctors and acres of plants and shrubs. It instantly banishes pain and soreness, gives life and vigor to the weakened and paralyzed muscles and limbs, and is so grateful and soothing that, once used in the above ailments, every other external application, such as salves, ointments, lotions, and liniments, will at once be discarded. Even in paralysis, epilepsy or fits, and nervous muscular affections, this plaster, by rallying the nervous forces, has effected cures when every other known remedy has failed.

Sold by all Druggists. Price 25 cents. Sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents for one, $1.25 for six, or $2.25 for twelve, carefully wrapped and warranted, by WEEKS & POTTER, Proprietors, Boston, Mass.

All Goods Retailed at Wholesale Prices

This is the Only Secret of Our Immense Trade.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take Teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. the importer has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and wholesale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars. Coffees, Spices. Prunes Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these intermediate profits. No middlemen with us. We are having a great run on Prunes. The Finest

PRUNES ONLY 8c A POUND.

They hardly ever sell lower than 12½c. and when you consider that Dried Apples are 12c, we all know a pound of Prunes will go farther and are considered much richer eating.

TEAS REDUCED

"A penny saved is two pence got." Ten cents reduction on teas. The continued dullness in trade last, coupled with the large number of failures in the tea trade, has completely demoralized the market. Teas we used to sell at $1,40, and lately $1,10 per pound. we now sell at $1 per pound. Either the best uncoloring Hyson, Imperial or Gunpowder, the very best qualities, now $1 per pound. The best uncolored Japan now 80c. was 90c, the best Oolong now 35c, was 95c. Other grades as low 25c per pound, up to 50, and 70c per pound.

TILDEN'S RAILROAD RECORD.

A Hayes Republican Refutes the Slanders About it.

Mr. Hickok, writes the following letter from Burlington, under date of Aug. 16th, to his friend, Mr. Peter Butler, of Boston:

I have written this letter simply for the purpose of presenting what I regard as the just views of Gov. Tilden's relations, so far as I know them, with bankrupt railroads. You well know I am a Republican. I have been such since the formation of that party, and intend in November to vote for Hayes and Wheeler.

One of the correspondents of the N. Y. Tribune, of Aug. 11, uses this language of Gov. Tilden: "We must lay bare his true record—call it personal attack if you please—but above and beyond all, let the truth be known, though the heavens and all political parties fall in consequence."

In this spirit the N. Y. Times and other papers attack the railroad record of Gov. Tilden. At a republican meeting held in Burlington, on the 10th inst. E. W. Stoughton, of N. Y., charged Gov. Tilden with dishonorable railroad practices generally during the war. As reported by the Free Press, of the 11th. It said: "Tilden in that time continued the practice of his profession, and they were practices of a very peculiar kind, such as many reputable members of my profession declined to enter on—wrecking railroads." To those who know the two men it seems quite in keeping with the self-conceit and arrogance of Mr. Stoughton that he should as he did during his speech, assume for himself a higher level of character than Gov. Tilden. I cannot fancy to myself Charles O'Conor or Wm. M. Evarts thus pluming themselves. With respect to integrity and a delicate sense of professional honor, Gov. Tilden, in the judgment of the bar in New York, probably ranks as high, if not not higher, than Mr. Stoughton. Neither that bar nor the public has forgotten that while Mr. Tilden, as one of the prosecutors of Tweed, by his masterly analysis of the books of the Broadway bank, secured evidence for his conviction, Mr. Stoughton was found among the defenders of A. Oakey Hall, a coadjutor of Tweed, and stated to the jury that he volunteered that offense on account of his warm friendship for the man. This speech of Mr. Stoughton and his announcement that he should stump it continually during the campaign, have induced me to reconsider my refusal, as expressed to you on the 25th ult., of your earnest request that I should write you my views of Mr. Tilden's railroad practice.

From 1855 to 1858 I resided in New York City, as vice president of a western railroad, and held stock or bonds of three others during the period when they were all of them reformed and reorganized under the advise counsel of Mr. Tilden. Thus I became acquainted with him in such a way as to know pretty thoroughly his personal and professional character, and to get an insite into what Mr. Stoughton calls his peculiar practice of wrecking railroads.

The financial crisis of 1857 is well remembered for its great severity. There was a general suspension of specie payments by the banks, and western railroad corporations, mostly built (or partly built) not for cash, but by sale of stock and bonds at a discount, almost every one of them west of the State of New York, went to protest, and very many of them were in fact, by sale under mortgage, reconstructed upon a reduced capital.

To any railroad corporation in such a condition of insolvency, a vital necessity is to find a man of such legal attainments, sound practical wisdom and integrity of character that the great mass of dissatisfied and discordant securitys holders will unite in accepting his counsels and following his leadership in saving the common property and putting it in sound financial condition.

It was the good fortune of many of these corporations that they secured Mr Tilden's services, and were wise enough to follow his advice. Three prominent ones—corporations in which I was personally interested—were the Chicago and Northwestern, St. Louis, Alton and Terre Haute, and the Chicago and Alton railroads. The first of them now represents a capital of about $55,000,000 the second about $11,000,000, and the Chicago and Alton a capital of about $16,000,000, with its common stock at this date in demand in New York at 104. An immense addition to the value of these corporate properties resulted from their reorganization, probably not less than five fold in either case, and their successful career for the past twelve years is well known to financial men all over the country. The work which Mr. Tilden did for these great corporations was to list them out of the slough of bankruptcy, and place their property, greatly enhanced in value, in possession of their stockholders, and upon a stable basis of prosperity. And for many other corporations, as I am informed, Mr. Tilden did saving work of like kind.

Now if it is charged that he grew rich out of this business, he may well admit the fact and reply with truth that for every $20,000 he has received from the corporations he has added a million in value to their property. The charge that Mr. Tilden and the four other gentlemen who reorganized the Terre Haute and Alton road have stolen $390,000 or more of its stock and bonds fall to the ground before the clear and decisive answer of those gentlemen. This was what was expected of those who knew them. Mr. Tilden's functions in this business were mainly advisory; the active management of the new corporation fell chiefly upon Mr. Charles Butler, who was for many years president of the road and Mr. Robert Bayard, both of New York city; gentlemen whose characters are above suspicion or reproach. Mr. Charles Butler is one of the noblest of men. He would suffer his right hand to be burned to a cinder before he would touch a stolen bond or a stock certificate tainted with fraud.

As to the consolidation of the Galena and Chicago railroad into what is the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, the facts in brief are these: Parties in the interest of the latter road bought a majority of the Galena stock. Prominent among them was Wm. B. Ogden, of New York, for many years president of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad company—this name alone is a sufficient guarantee that there was no fraud or swindle actual, or intended upon anybody. Under the laws of Illinois a consolidation of the two properties was effected, and upon equitable terms. If there were any parties who suffered loss they were the persons who at great expense contested the validity of the consolidation for the purpose of getting an extra price for their own stock. They failed utterly however; the work of consolidation under the guidance of Mr. Tilden had been too thoroughly done to be disturbed.

If there are any other allegations afloat in reference to fraud committed by Mr. Tilden as a railroad attorney you may rest assured that they will not be based upon any evidence that is tangible and such allegation you may safely set down as campaign lies.

J. W. Hickok

John Sherman on Grant.

At the joint discussion at Columbia City, last week, Senator Sherman said in the course of his remarks, that in less than a year Grant would be defied and worshipped as one of the greatest men of the age. Here is what Harper's Weekly thinks of Grant.

The President, after all the revelations at St. Louis, received Gen. Babcock as his private secretary until he was criminally indicted, and it is not known that he has yet dismissed him; he parted with Mr. Belknap with a note of regret; with Mr. Delano with a letter of sympathy; he nominated Mr. Shepherd to be Commissioner of the District of Columbia just after Congress had abolished the government of the District to get rid of him, and Mr. Fisher to a judicial post after the complicity of his office with the safe-burglary conspiracy. But he permits Mr. Bristow to leave the cabinet without a word and immediately turns out the most efficient of his subordinates in the prosecution of public frauds; dismisses without explanation the Postmaster-General, who, by common consent, is the best officer the country has had in that place for many years; and compels the resignation of Mr. Commissioner Pratt, of the internal revenue, because of his approval of tried and thorouhly efficient subordinates. And all this is done on the eve of an election in which the Republican party has approved the policy of these very officers, and has engaged to administer the government in their spirit. The President by his own action places himself under the pointed censure of the party that elected him, and his conduct, therefore, can be honestly assumed to be that of the party. It is with sincere regret that we say it. Instead of loyally co-operating with the general spirit and policy declared at the late Convention, his action apparently shows that he has fallen under those malign influences which have already surely imperiled the Republican party, and which are compelling those who would greatfully remember him to fix their eyes exclusively upon his military career.

What Seward Thought of Gov. Hendricks.

From Mr. Seward's speech at Auburn, Oct. 31 '68

I entertain no ill will toward the Democratic party or its leaders, and have no uncharitable feelings toward that great constituency. On the other hand, I cherish a greateful appreciation of the patriotism, the magnanimity, the heroism of many of my fellow-citizens with whom I have cheerfully labored and cooperated, while they still retain their adhesion to the Democratic party. How could I distrust the loyalty or the virtue of Andrew Johnson, of Gen. Hancock, Gen. McClellan, Senator Buckalew, of Pennsylvania, of Senator Hendricks, of Indiana, or his associate, Mr. Niblack, or of Mr. Cox, of Ohio, to whom personally, more than any other member, is due the passage of the constitutional amendment in Congress abolishing African slavery.

It is not a question of the late war, or what is called by the political conventions "the preservation of its results," in the next campaign. It is a question of bread and butter. Since the Republicans came into power we have been going from bad to worse. There are more men out of employment in the United States to-day than ever there were. Upon the other hand there are more millionaires than ever before.—The policy of the party is, as the historian Allison said of another war party in Europe, to make the rich richer and the poor poorer.

The Hon. Wm. S. Holman, of Indiana in a recent speech in the House truly said: "Every measure of finance and taxation since the close of the war has been against labor and in favor of capital, and that the country is now suffering from a policy dictated by selfish and remorseless cupidity seeking to augment the advantages and power of wealth and taking from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned, and that only through a reversal of this policy and the enactment of laws of finance and taxation equally just to every interest can our prosperity be restored."

The only way to reverse that policy and thus relieve business and help the workingman is to turn the present party out of power.

[From the Louisville Courier-Journal, Aug. 28.]

Mr. Wheeler tells his hearers broadly, plainly without justification, that "not even in the State of Kentucky can you find a man in any position whatever, who was not engaged on the rebel side." This is of itself enough to convict him as totally untrustworthy person. In the late county election Union men were everywhere elected to office. Here in Louisville, a Union man, who commands a negro company in the Union army, beat the oldest and most distinguished of Kentucky names for prosecuting attorney. In the adjoining judicial circuit, Judge Donaven, a pronounced Union leader, was elected Judge. The adjutant general of the State was on Buell's staff. The register of the land office was a Union soldier throughout the war. All over Kentucky Union men are and have been in the highest positions. Yet this candidate for the second place in the republic, pretending to personal honor and truth, asserts without reservation that not a single Union man can or does hold any position whatever.

His statement as to the South at large is equally sweeping. The election of Andrew Johnson over half-a-dozen Confederate opponents in Tennessee, the nomination of Phelps over a Confederate in Missouri, the popularity and influence of such men as Houston, in Alabama, and Hancock in Texas, and Walker in Vergina, these things go for nothing with this brawling brawler, who with a hypocritical sneer and a white chokey, rises in the presence of God, whose name he invokes, to stir the passions of a mob by wanton and wicked lies. He has seen fifty crippled Union soldiers, he says, turned out of office by the Confederate Congress, when he knows that fifty-six Unions soldiers were put in their places. He has "heard Lincoln maligned," when he knows that he cannot put his finger upon a work uttered by a single one of his colleagues in the House to sustain his falsehood. He is horrified to relate that he sits by sixty-one representatives who fought in the Confederate army, as though his party did not fight to bring about, according to its own admissions urgently impressed upon the people it has betrayed, precisely the spectacle of sectional Union it now condemns and deplores.

THE BALD-HEADED TYRANT.

BY MARY E. VANDYNE.

Oh! the quietest home on earth had I,
No thought of trouble, no hint of care;
Like a dream of pleasure the days flew by,
And Peace had folded her pinions there.
But one day there joined in our household band
A bald-headed tyrant from No-man's-land.

Oh! the despot came in the dead of night,
And no one ventured to ask him why;
Like slaves we trembled before his might,
Our hearts stood still when we heard him cry;
For never a soul could his power withstand,
That bald-headed tyrant from No-man's-land.

He ordered us here and he sent us there—
Though never a word could his small lips speak—
With his toothless gums and his vacant stare,
And his helpless limbs so frail and weak,
Till I cried, in a voice of stern command,
"Go up, thou bald head from No-man's-land!"

But his abject slaves they turned on me;
Like the bears in Scripture they'd rend me there,
The while they worshiped with bended knee
This ruthless wretch with the missing hair;
For he rules them all with relentless hand,
This bald-headed tyrant from No-man's-land.

Then I searched for help in every clime,
For peace had fled from my dwelling now,
Till I finally thought of old Father Time,
And low before him I made my bow,
"Wilt thou deliver me out of his hand,
This bald-headed tyrant from No-man's-land?"

Old Time he looked with a puzzled stare,
And a smile came over his features grim,
"I'll take the tyrant under my care;
Watch what my hour-glass does to him.
The veriest humbug that ever was planned
Is this same bald-head from No-man's-land."

Old Time is doing his work full well—
Much less of might does the tyrant wield:
But, ah! with sorrow my heart will swell
And sad tears fall as I see him yield.
Could I stay the touch of the shriveled hand,
I would keep the bald-head from No-man's-land.

For the loss of peace I have ceased to care;
Like other vassals, I've learned, forsooth,
To love the wretch who forgot his hair
And hurried along without a tooth.
And he rules me, too, with his tiny hand,
This bald-headed tyrant from No-man's-land.
—Harper's Magazine for September.

HIS TWO LOVES.

Two, and Montague Garthorn loved them both. It does not seem possible, nevertheless it is true; and, stranger still, they both loved him. He was not worthy of half the good things the fates showered on him with such lavish hands; but who in this world ever get their deserts? It is a thoroughly false theory that virtue brings its own reward; long ago it might, but now it certainly does not, or Opal Garthorn's life would have been happier. As long as Opal could remember she had worshipped her cousin Montague. As a child he was her hero, and as she grew up her chief delight was to be noticed by him. When she "came out," and he seemed to take pleasure in being with her, her joy knew no bounds; and at length when he asked her to be his wife, she could hardly realize that the dream of her life had come to pass, and he felt as if he could not do enough to show his love for the beautiful girl who had promised to marry him.

Montague Garthorn was well off, and, his parents being both dead, he had become a "spoilt child" in all his relations' households, and many a Mistress Garthorn had been anxious to catch this excellent parti for her daughter. Great was the surprise of the Garthorns generally when it was known that he intended making his distant cousin Opal his wife.

Opal's love for him was so unselfish, so womanly (and how much deeper is a woman's love than a man's can possibly be!). When I say she loved him with her whole heart, better than life, my words seem cold and passionless, and cannot convey the meaning of her devotedness.

When he asked her to marry him soon she would not listen to him, but stipulated for another year of freedom, because "he might see some one he liked better," and with whom he would be more happy. Her delight consisted in seeing him happy, so she said, and so she meant, no doubt; but really she felt such confidence in his entire devotion, and judged him so much by herself, that she never for a moment realized the idea of his loving any one but her. Montague Garthorn considered that if he understood one thing thoroughly, that one thing was himself; so he was annoyed at her doubting him even in this loving way, and he resolved to prove that no woman of lures and wiles could influence him when he had the assurance of Opal's love.

Opal was standing at the drawing-room window, gazing into the twilight for her lover, while her mother and father chatted together. At last she hears his footstep on the stairs, and they are together.

"Opal, will you go to the theater to-night? I have promised to meet Archer there."

"Must you go, Montie

"Well, dear, I think must; but won't you come?"

Opal does not want to go, and she does not want him to go without her; but before she has time to make up her mind what answer to give, her mother settles the question by saying she "cannot allow Opal to go, as she is tired with a day's shopping."

Montague remained a few minutes longer, then rose to take his leave. Opal was dull, felt a leaden weight at her heart. What for?—surely not because her lover was going to meet a man at the theater. Nevertheless she could not throw the gloom off, and as she bade him good-by tears rose to her eyes and seemed to tremble in her voice; so much so that even Montie, the most unobservant of men, noticed them, and was more affectionate in manner.

"You are tired, Opal, my child; go to bed, dear."

"It is not that, Montie; but I feel as if I was losing you; as if this was to be our last good-by."

"Nonsense!" and with another kiss he was gone; while Opal gazed on him for the last time—at least saw for the last time the man who loved her as he loved no other woman.

Mr. Garthorn sauntered leisurely along, intending to take a hansom down to the Strand, when he remembered that as he was alone he might call for Archer at his lodgings. Instead of taking a cab, he resolved to go by train to Gower street, where his friend lived. If Opal only knew what would come of that little railway journey no earthly power would have prevented her going with Montie to the theater. He was thinking it was a bother to go to the play, as it was sure to be hot, and it would have been much cooler in the back drawing-room with Opal. Here his thoughts were interrupted and the carriage door was opened, and a young girl pushed in. A girl with magnetic golden hair, that seemed to make a halo round her head, and saucer blue eyes, and a mouth like a Cupid's bow. Nellie Wylde, the second woman who loved Montague Garthorn, met him now for the first time, with her bright baby-face covered with blushes, and with her tiny hands held out to him to help her lift on to the seat a large parcel she had with her.

"It is a new dress I have bought at Westbourne Grove," she told him, "and I am going to sit up to make it to go to a ball."

He was charmed with the simplicity of the child, as he considered her, and condescendingly asked her her age.

"Seventeen, soon," she answered. And then all the color seemed to die out of her cheeks and leave her very pale. He watched her for some time, and then her merry voice broke his reverie by saying:

"I have been ill; this is the first time I have been out. Father would scarcely let me come; but I wanted my dress so much;" and then, without waiting for any remark from Mr. Garthorn, she asked if he had ever been to a ball, and what they were like.

"Yes, child, many. Good-by. This is my station."

"It is mine, too," Nellie answered, "and father said he would meet me and carry my parcel home."

What less could Montague do than assist her to alight and carry her parcel up-stairs? and then, not finding any one waiting for her, he could not do less than offer to carry it home. And in that little walk how his heart went out to this child, who had not an idea beyond the moment's pleasure, who found life so bright, although her father kept a chemist's shop in a back street and let lodgings! Why not leave her as she is, happy, young, heart-whole, and in smooth water? Why force her into stormy weather, when she is now so safe? But already the harm is done, and Montague is fascinated fatally by this child, in whose nature there is no depth, and who could never feel anything, whether of pain or joy, with half the keenness that Opal can.

The beautiful blue eyes look without flinching into his, as she warbles forth an invitation to come and have supper.

"We are not grand; we only have watercresses in the shop-parlor."

He goes in, and Nellie Wylde's father thanks him, and the back parlor is paradise, the watercresses food for the gods, the theater forgotten; and as he looks at and listens to Nellie, Opal, in the cool back drawing-room, has become a thing of the past.

"What ball are you going to, Miss Wylde?"

"At Aunt Mary's; their first floor is empty, and they are going to have a dance. Call me Nellie—every one does; it seems too grown up to call me Miss Wylde."

"That is not a real ball; but if you would like to go to one of the best balls in London, I will take you to Willis' Rooms to-morrow night."

"Oh, father, say 'Yes,'" said Nell, as she threw her arms round his neck.

"I don't know what is right to say," ruminated Mr. Wylde; "only as you have very little pleasure and no mother, perhaps it would not be any harm."

So it was settled that beautiful, bright Nellie was to make her first entry into London society.

Montague at last tore himself away from the enchanted chemist's shop. Now came the time to think—to think of what he had done. Of course, it was too late to go to the theater; in fact, everything seemed too late, now that the door of Mr. Wylde's house was shut. What had he done? Promised to take Nellie to a ball, and he was engaged to go to a dinner-party with Opal! What should he do? Go home, and make the best of his dilemma. Next morning, Montague knew something must be done; so he got his writing materials, and intended to write to Nellie to tell her he could not take her to the ball; but directly he began, the vision of those blue eyes filled with tears, and that smiling mouth pouting, was too much for him, so he changed his mind, and wrote briefly to Opal "that unforeseen circumstances prevented him going out to dinner with her to-morrow. Opal is so good-natured, she won't mind." He thought little of her breaking heart, though he thought so much of tearful blue eyes.

Nellie and Mr. Garthorn went to the ball and enjoyed it. Nellie looked lovely in her fresh white muslin dress and Montague's gift of real flowers. When he left her at home, he longed for the moment when he should see her next. On his return, he found a letter from Opal, full of tender regrets at his absence, and assurances of her love. He resolved never to see Nellie again, and to marry Opal as soon as possible. How easy it is to make resolutions at night, and how difficult to carry them out in the broad day!

The following afternoon, Mr. Garthorn called at Opal's, and left his card, for he found her out. Then what more natural than he should see how Nellie was after her dissipation? He found her at home, beautiful, blushing, charming, full of gratitude for the pleasure of the ball, and winning as only those childish women with big blue eyes can be.

Her father was in the shop; so they were alone, and before Montague knew what he was doing, he had avowed his passion to Nellie, and she had confessed that she was "very fond of him and of balls at Willis's rooms."

Opal, driving in the Park, was straining her eyes to see the beloved form of Montague Garthorn among the crowd of men leaning over the railings.

Day after day Mr. Garthorn spent with Opal, and evening after evening with Nellie. Opal was so sweetly kind to him, sang and played for him, declared that something must be wrong, and besought him to have confidence in her and to tell her his trouble. In reply, he kissed her, told her not "to worry, and that she was a foolish girl." And directly his duty visit was over, he rushed to Nellie's house, where she met him with bright eyes, merry repartee, and kitten like caresses. She really was very lovable; and it was no wonder that this man, who so loved being made much of, fancied she was more worthy of such love as he he had to give than the woman who would have died for him.

Things could not last much longer like this. Opal wondered why he did not come of an evening, and asked him to spend the following Monday with her, so she would be alone. He could not refuse, so all day Sunday he spent with Nellie wandering about Kensington Gardens; then to church with Mr. Wylde, and a delightful Bohemian supper in the shop-parlor. Afterward came the good-night; and Montague told Nellie he could not come the following day, because he had to see a cousin of his; and then he went on to say that these happy days must end, as he was going away for a long time, and would only come once more to say good-by. The blue eyes filled with tears; the tiny hands rustled up into the air, and with a wild scream she threw herself upon the stairs, sobbing, "Montie, you can not, shall not leave me!"

"Darling, I must."

"But you say you loved me!"

"God knows how much, my darling; but I must leave you, for I am in honor bound to marry my cousin Opal."

Nellie did not receive this announcement haughtily, with pride, or with despair, but threw herself down at Montague Garthorn's feet, sobbing piteously, "You shall never marry her—the proud lady you show me in the park; but me, your own loving Nellie, who worships you with a devotion she can never feel!"

"I do believe you love me best, my golden wig," he exclaimed, as he caught her in his arms and kissed her, promising to call again soon.

Nellie was immediately comforted, and before he had got to the end of the street she was singing to herself as she cleared the supper-things away.

On Monday, Opal dressed herself in the dress Montague admired, ordered the dishes for dinner he preferred, and made up her mind to try and win him back, remembering the words of one of our greatest writers, that "revived love is the strongest." He came in determined to make the evening pleasant to Opal, even to confess to her his flirtation with Nellie—to tell her that he had rooted it up, and was ready to come back to her more devoted than ever; but Opal looked so strong in her self-possession, so passionless, so unsympathic, that the image of Nellie recurred to him as he saw her last in her attitude of worship at his feet.

"Montie, why are you so strange? Does anything worry you, dear?"

"Nothing."

"But I am sure it does. Have I anything to do with it?"

"No."

"Only remember, Montague, if there is anything in the world I can do for you I will."

"Would you, really, Opal?" and a gleam of hope came into his face, and for the moment he felt inclined to tell her all; and then, if only she had come toward him instead of going to the window, he would have made a clean breast of it, and saved Nellie and himse a sorrowful fortnight.

Opal crossed the room, not eve looking at him, and, with her eyes fixed on the street, she said: "Montague, even if you love another woman better than me I can bear it, and give you up so readily—for your happiness;" and she turned and smiled one of her brightest smiles at him.

"I am but poor company to-night; so good-bye." And before she could call him back he was gone. "How little she cares for me!" he thought, while she was caring for him more than her life.

For a fortnight Mr. Garthorn saw neither girl. He was selfishly unhappy; he was in that state of mind that he did not know what to do next. He wished some one would take his destiny from him, and make him do something. Every day he thought more of Nellie and less of Opal.

The latter wrote him a kind note, hoping he was not ill; should papa come and see him?

Nellie wrote mad letters, beseeching him to come or she would die. She was ill; she was pale; she really was dying. She should never see him more if he did not come.

He sat down to answer these letters, and felt relieved when they were finished.

Opal received hers by the last post, and directly she saw the well-known writing she took it up to her room to read it alone. It was only a short note, and she perceived it was in a school-girl hand. It ran thus:

> "OWN DARLING MONTIE: Your broken-hearted golden wig is pale, ill, languid, and dying. If you don't see her soon it will be too late, and you can only put flowers in her coffin, and bid her a last adieu. Do, do, do, come to your loving NELLIE."

The address was in full on the letter, and in one moment Opal saw it all. How Mr. Garthorn had sent her this letter by mistake; how this letter was from some one to him; and she realized that in in truth he had found some one whom he loved more, and consequently would make him happier. Her resolution was made. Her love was no use if it was selfish.

Next morning she wrote to Montague, asking for a moment's conversation that afternoon. Then she went to Nellie's home. She rather wondered at the appearance of the house, but fancied the lady might only be staying there. Blooming, blue-eyed Nell opened the door, and Opal asked for Nellie.

"Why, I am Nellie. What do you want?"

"I want you to come home with me. Mr. Garthorn will be at our house this afternoon."

"Will he, really? Then he has not given me up, as father said. And I was so unhappy, because he had gone away from me to marry his cousin."

"Never mind about the cousin, Nellie. He loves you, and you only; and now you will see him very soon."

"I must put on a pretty dress to see him in, Miss ——"

"Garthorn."

"Oh, you are his sister. How kind of him to send for me!" and she trotted away to try and smooth her golden hair.

When Opal arrived home with Nellie she hurried her into the drawing-room, and waited herself outside the door until she heard Montague coming up. Then she brought him into the room, saying, "Montie, dear, I have brought your little Nellie to you. You see I have found out your secret, and am so glad to make you happy. Good-bye for the present."

And with a ringing laugh Opal ran up stairs, only to throw herself on her bed in a paroxysm of grief.

In the drawing-room Montague Garthorn was supremely happy with the woman who he deemed loved him best, and they cannot fail to be high and noble. He makes his wife the sole executor of his will. The paper is dated May 27, 1865.

PROF. HUXLEY.

The Great Scientist's Impressions of America.

Prof. Huxley, the distinguished English scientist, now on a visit to this country, recently attended a meeting of the American Scientific Congress at Buffalo, and, being called upom for a speech, responded as follows:

"Since my arrival I have learned a great many things, more, I think, than ever before in an equal space of time in my life. In England we have always taken a lively interest in America; but I think no Englishman who has not had the good fortune to visit America has any real conception of the activity of the population, the enormous distances which separate the great centers; and least of all do Englishmen understand how identical is the great basis of character on both sides of the Atlantic. An Englisman with whom I have been talking since my arrival says: 'I cannot find that I am abroad.' The great features of your country are all such as I am familiar with in parts of England and Scotland. Your beautiful Hudson reminds me of a Scotch lake. The marks of glaciation in your hills remind me of those in Scottish highlands.

"I had heard of the degeneration of your stock from the English type. I have not perceived it. Some years ago one of your most distinguished men of letters, equally loved and admired in England and America, expressed an opinion which touched English feeling somewhat keenly—that there was a difference between your women and ours after reaching a certain age. He said our English women were 'beefy.' That is his word, not mine. Well, I have studied the aspect of the people that I have met here in steamboats and railway carriages, and I meet with just the same faces, the main difference as to the men being in the way of shaving. Though I should be sorry to use the word which Hawthorne did, yet in respect to stature for fine portly women, I think the average here fully as great as on the other side. Some people talk of the injurious influence of climate. I have seen no traces of the 'North American type.' You have among you the virtue which is most notable among savages, that of hopitality. You take us to a bountiful dinner and are not quite satisfied unless we take away with us the plates and spoons. Another feature has impressed itself upon me. I have visited some of your great universities and met men as well known in the old world as in the new. I find certain differences here. The English universities are the product of Government, yours of private munificence. That among us is almost unknown. The general notion of an Englishman when he gets rich, is to found an estate and benefit his family. The general notion of an American when fortunate is to do something for the good of the people and from which benefits shall continue to flow. The latter is the nobler ambition.

"It is popularly said abroad that you have no antiquities in America. If you talk about the trumpery of three or four thousand years of history, it is true. But, in the large sense as referring to times before man made his momentary appearance, America is the place to study the antiquities of the globe. The reality of the enormous amount of material here has far surpassed my anticipation. I have studied the collection gathered by Prof. Marsh at New Haven. There is none like it in Europe, not only in extent of time covered, but by reason of its bearing on the problem of evolution; whereas, before this collection was made evolution was a matter of speculative reasoning; it is now a matter of fact and history as much as the monuments of Egypt. In that collection are the facts of the succession of forms and the history of their evolution. All that now remains to be asked is how, and that is a subordinate question."

Tales of My Grandmother.

Hoogley's boy has been spending his summer vacation with his grandfather and grandmother down East. He got home this week, and a few evenings ago, while sitting on the curbstone adjusting a rag on his sore heel, he was telling Squeaky (one of his chums) what a good time he had. The following is his story: "I've got the old boss grandmother for tellin' stories, and don't you forgit it! She is as much as 200 years old, with a great long crooked chin, and her face kinder looks like pork-scraps, but she's a bully old gal, and can't she tell some awful Injun stories. She says she's got three mattresses stuffed with Injun's hair that my grandfather killed and scalped when he was a young man. All of my grandmother's pillers is stuffed with Injun's hair, too, she says. My grandfather he's got an old flintlock-gun that I guess was made when Noer cum out in the ark. My grandfather used to shoot bears'n tigers'n elefunts'n crockerdiles'n all kinds of birds and everything. My grandfather shot his gun inter a lion or wolf one day, and the wolf growed mad'n run out of the woods'n run inter a naber's house'n swallered three little children. My grandfather he runs'n grabbed the wolf'n skinned him'n saved the children fore they's et up. Piruts used to sail up the river in front of my grandfather's house'n they used to rob folks and murder 'em and git their munny; they used to murder a thousand folks a day sometimes and berry the gold in a cave. My grandmother was all alone one day, an' sum piruts cum and set the house afire, and my grandmother throw'd bilin' water on the piruts, and they left four millions of gold and run off. You ought to see my grandmother and hear her tell things!"

Will of the Late M. C. Kerr.

The will of the late Speaker Kerr devises in substance that all the law-books of which he shall be the owner at the time of his death, and used by him as a law library, shall be held in trust by his wife for the use of his son, Samuel B. Kerr. He leaves all his property, real and personal, in trust with his wife, during her life, and at her death, if her son should survive her, the property will be bequeathed to him. He also provides that his mother and his wife's mother shall be provided for so far as his wife's ability may permit her so to do, and he concludes by most earnestly beseeching his son to cherish always a most sincere love of justice and truth, and to make all his aims in life consistent therewith, and they cannot fail to be high and noble. He makes his wife the sole executor of his will. The paper is dated May 27, 1865.

A REMARKABLE SECT.

The "Fullerite" Community at Petersham, Mass., and What it Believes.

[From the Springfield Republican.]

As queer a people as are often met, and, apparently, as upright and religious withal, are the community situated on the stage-road between Athol and Petersham, and commonly known thereabouts as "Howlandites," or "Fullerites." According to their account, nearly twenty years ago two Worcester women, Sarah J. Harver and her sister, Caroline E. Hawks, had come for a Divine revelation to them, and, in expectation of it, had gone to a camp-meeting, at Groton. Entering the meeting they heard a stranger "talking in tongues," who proved to be the man to meet their wants, in the person of Frederick T. Howland, a Quaker of good social standing, from New Bedford. That day, September 15, 1855, was the origin "in the faith," though not in the temporal, association of the community, these three being the "pioneers," as "Sister" Harvey takes pride in calling herself and associates. Mrs. Harvey's husband died a year or two later, though not in the faith, "these things," as they say, "having been beyond him." Soon after the new belief received the addition of eight persons living in Athol, among them Leonard C. Fuller, the present head of the community, and his wife. In May, 1801, having been "moved by the spirit" to form an association for living together, they settled at Fuller's, in the south end of Pleasant street, in Athol. In August, 1861, they removed to their present farm in Petersham. "Brother" Howland held the position of head of the body till killed by a runaway horse, not quite two years ago. His people considered him a prophet, and say the Lord spoke by him, and that he led them as Moses led the children of Israel.

Their religious belief in many respects resembles that of the Adventists, but differs in the vital point that the reign of Christ, under the expected new dispensation, is to be spiritual, and not personal, as the Adventists hold. They construe the saying of John the Revelator, "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day," to refer to a period of time to begin with the 7,000th year of the world, which is near at hand. The judgment day, they believe, has already begun, and in a short time, at the opening of the new dispensation, the holy dead are to be raised. When a man who has received "common" salvation dies he has no more consciousness till the resurrection, but some, who are "specially" saved, will not die. Miracles will be performed commonly. When the new dispensation begins they are to be of the 144,000 spoken of by John, and are to judge the nations. They do not believe in a hypothetical heaven somewhere in space; the earth is not to be destroyed, but changed; and, finally, the devil is to be bound for 1,000 years. They entirely denounce Spiritualism, saying that it is from the devil, a perfect anti-Christ. "Brother" Howard, they say, lay down to rise with the prophets, and they have written out what they claim to be prophecies made by him months or years before his death as to the manner in which it would occur, which, judged by the event, are certainly striking.

The community live chiefly upon farinaceous food; they drink principally water, sometimes herb tea. No flesh is eaten, because there is to be a restitution of the order of things that prevailed in the Garden of Eden, and nothing that grows in the ground, because the ground is cursed. They live on the apostolic plan of having all property in common. If any of them wish to get married, they have to leave the community. Morning and evening they "wait before the Lord," standing, repeat the Lord's prayer, and read and explain the Bible, "as the spirit gives utterance." Although the district public school is only a stone's throw away, the half-dozen children of the community, whom they have adopted, "as the Lord sent them," are taught at home by "Sister" Harvey. Sometimes the neighbors' children come in also, and they are said to do better there than at the public school. The school gives an occasional exhibition before the family, and a Christmas tree is provided.

No jewelry is worn, and they dress very plainly, though the "world's people" claim that the community wear as expensive "fixins," and show as much pride as they do. The community observe a seventh-day Sabbath, extending from 3 p. m. Friday to the same hour Saturday. The religious exercises begin at 10 o'clock Saturday and continue without intermission till 3. They are of opinion that they need not go to a "synagogue," or "where the minister has to go 'round and wake the people, as he did down to the Advent church in Athol last Sunday." The family seat themselves in the parlor upon three sides of the room, with the occasional visitors on the fourth side; and the exercises consist of exhortations by the various members, according as they are moved by the spirit, with abundant "amens" from the rest. If no one feels called upon to speak, they study the Bible. Often they break out into singing. The house is free to visitors at all times.

Grasshoppers in Colorado.

The hoppers came last week in numbers that were wonderful. At times the swarm was so thick overhead that there was a perceptible difference in the heat and brightness of the sun's rays, and here and there they were so deep as to resemble clouds of smoke. They did not fly far before they came down, and in such numbers as to make travel disagreeable. At evening the fences and trees and sides of houses were literally covered with them. Some of the trunks of the trees were absolutely invisible, so close did the grasshoppers sit together. At sunrise they were again at their work of devastation. The damage to corn and garden truck is incalculable and awful.

MISS COLLINS, the conductor of Boffin's Bower, a Boston charitable institution, says that out of every hundred shop girls in that city, fifty live at home, and the rest in boarding houses. She thinks there are 30,000 girls employed in Boston shops in seventy different occupations.

IF YOU LOVE ME.

BY LEILA CLARK.

If you love me, tell me not;
Let me read it in your thought;
Let me feel it in the way
That you say me yea and nay;

Let me see it in your eye
When you greet or pass me by;
Let me hear it in the tone
Meant for me and me alone.

If you love me, there will be Something only I shall see
Meet or miss, stay or go,
If you love me, I shall know.

Something in your tone will tell,
"Dear, I love you, love you well."
Something in your eyes will shine
Fairer that they look in mine.

In your mien some touch of grace,
Some swift smile upon your face
While you speak not, will betray
What your lips could scarcely say.

In your speech some silver words,
Tuning into sweet accord
All your bluntness will reveal
Unaware, the love you feel.

If you love me, then, I pray,
Tell me not, but, day by day,
Let love silent on me rise,
Like the sun in summer skies.

THEY are taking evidence in a divorce case for cruelty; the husband is under examination; his wife, prostrated with grief, is weeping bitterly, covering her face with her handkerchief. "Now," says the Judge, "are you not ashamed to have thus brutally treated your wife, a tender young woman of 25?" The wife suddenly raises her head, "I beg your pardon," she sobs, "24 only." And she again gives way to her grief.

THE remarks of the Captains of two English vessels were the occasion of gentle smiles at the Custom House the other day. A SOCIAL economist of Austria has prepared a table showing that there is an intimate relation in that country between crime and the plum and grape crops; that when there is a large crop of either of these fruits from which brandy is made, crime is especially prevalent. It's the same in this country, except that all fruits, and especially melons, might be included. The great prevalence of crime in good fruit years is mostly confined to the boys, and it doesn't result from the brandy either.—Free Press.

POETRY-JIM OF JACKASS CANON.

Drunk? As a loon, sir:
Drunk as an owl
This afternoon, sir.
Jack, you beast, howl!
Jack is my dog, sir: a temperance cuss;
He's better than I am; no hog isn't wuss.
Oh, hoo! Oh, hoo! Whiley, boo-hoo!
Yes, sir, I loved her—poor bottle-eyed Sue.
She warn't pretty to look at her;
I'd bursted her nose.
It was the poker I shook at her—
She come up too close.
It mashed up that feature, sir—
Turned it yaller and blue—
But that faithful creature, sir,
Adhered to me true.
Under the hedge there, that's Suse.—
Ragged and barefoot, no bonnet, no shoes
Gin? No, sir; she don't like gin—
Splice her skin.
Rum and gum is her go, sir;
Oh, sir.
How that gal loved me! My optics will fill—
And sticks by me faithful, I gives her her swill.

American Fabrics Abroad.

An American manufacturer, now in England, writes home that "the unquestioned superiority of American cotton fabrics over English warrants the attempts by American weavers to introduce their wares into the English home market. The wholesale jobbers and retailers of Glasgow, Edinburgh, Manchester, Liverpool, London, Belfast and Dublin all expressed to me an opinion favorable to our fabrics, and that they were the best to wear, while none placed them below the standard of the English. Manchester has lost all the colonies on coarse cotton yarns used in domestic weaving with wool. American cotton and the American style of manufacturing command the entire market in these colonies for that article. A Glasgow jobber admitted the fact, and added that we were curtailing his orders for sheetings and shirtings in the Canadas and West Indies." This is Great Britain now, and the facts show that our exports o manufactured cottons have a very strong foreign hold already. They are being introduced into Africa, Asia, and South America, too.

THE ASSASSINS' DOOM.

Five Members of the Molly Maguire Society Sentenced to the Gallows—Thrilling Scenes in the Court-Room—Protestations of Innocence on the Part of the Condemned.

[Pottsville (Pa.) Cor. Philadelphia Times.]

* * * The Court House was crowded to its utmost capacity by persons curious to see how the convicted Molly Maguires would take the sentence of death. A very large part of the assemblage was composed of women. As soon as the Judges appeared on the bench their faces and manner gave evidence of the pain which the performance of the awful duty imposed upon them gave. The three law Judges and two associates all occupied places on the bench. After some routine business had been gone through with, Judge Green announced that the Court, after careful consideration, had concluded to overrule the motion in arrest of judgment and for a new trial in the case of the Commonwealth vs. Thomas Munley, charged with the murder of Thomas Sanger. Judge Pershing announced the same disposition of a like rule in the case of the Commonwealth vs. James Roarty and Hugh McGehan, convicted of the murder of Police Officer Yost, at Tamaqua. The five prisoners were then brought into Court, guarded by a large force of coal and iron police, and, as soon as they had taken their seats and had the handcuffs taken off, Dist. Atty. Kaercher asked the Court for judgment on the verdicts against the five men.

The five doomed Mollies were directed to stand up together before the Court to receive the sentence of the law. The men appeared pale and haggard, but they still seemed masters of enough courage to stand and hear it without quaking. Judge Green, who had presided at the trial of Thomas Munley, first proceeded to pass sentence upon him. The voice of the Judge was shaken by the emotion which the scene and his part in it called forth, and the solemn words he said affected more than one of the women who heard them to tears. In fact, the prisoner addressed seemed to control his feelings better than any one present.

Before pronouncing the dread words of condemnation, the Judge called upon the prisoner to say whether he had anything to show why the sentence of death should not be passed upon him.

The poor fellow then broke down, and amidst tears and heartrending sobs, declared his entire innocence of the crime of which he was convicted, and that his life had been sworn away by perjurers. He asked the Court to fix the day of his execution as soon as possible. The five Judges then rose to their feet, and, amid a silence only broken by sobs, these solemn words were pronounced:

"Thomas Munley, the sentence of the Court is that you, the said Thomas Munley, the prisoner at the bar, be taken hence to the jail of the county from whence you came, and from thence to the place of execution, and that you be there hanged by the neck until you are dead, and may God in His infinite compassion have mercy on your soul."

Judge Pershing now proceeded to pass sentence on Carroll, Roarty, Boyle, and McGehan, first addressing to them well-chosen words of advice, and closing as follows:

"The evidence disclosed the startling fact that in the murder of Benjamin F. Yost you acted as the instruments of an organization, bound by oath to secrecy, which, through its bodymasters, issues its commands to assassinate innocent and unsuspecting citizens, and that these murderous orders are willingly obeyed by its members. Christian civilization is shamed by the existence of such a band of organized assassins. The many atrocious crimes which it has been shown had their origin in your secret councils will cause your society to be regarded with horror for long years to come. I sincerely hope that your awful position to-day will have the effect of breaking up forever this association, and that your punishment will have the effect of teaching your companions in crime that laws, human and divine, cannot always be trampled on and the guilty escape. Let me entreat you to indulge in no vain hopes of avoiding the punishment that awaits you. The law does not inflict its penalties out of revenge, or to satisfy any excitement of public feeling. It punishes to protect. To protect the innocent it punishes the guilty. I impress upon you the duty of employing the few days that yet remain to you on earth in confession and repentance. Do not appear before the bar of God with a lie in your right hand. Dark as is your crime, heavy as it must rest upon your souls, you may yet find forgiveness from the compassionate Savior, who on the cross prayed that his own murderers might be forgiven."

The Judge then called upon each of the prisoners to say anything they had to say why sentence should not be passed on them. Each of the prisoners, in a dogged manner, declared his innocence, and the sentence of death was passed upon each. The doors of the Court House were then placed in charge of officers, and the prisoners, after taking an eager look at the last crowd of faces they will likely ever see, were handcuffed together and taken back to the jail to await the time of their execution. In leaving the court-room Boyle, one of the convicts, called out, with a sad voice, "Good-by, all."

Scenes in Belgrade.

The picturesqueness of the Belgrade streets, of which I had heard so much, is destroyed by their emptiness. There are here now only a few soldiers—the little garrison of the forts and some orderlies and office men—and all the manhood of Belgrade has gone to the front, except the people connected with the civil government, some merchants, many of whom are foreigners, and a few teamsters and people who fulfill the duties of hewers of wood and drawers of water.

Let us sit down outside this cafe at the corner of the "Place," and look around us. The low-browed one-story-high Oriental houses, with the open-front shop under the projecting veranda, fail to hold their ground against the big, several storied, ornamental-fronted houses common in modern Western cities. Belgrade, in its architecture, is Cairo and Paris in about equal proportion. The streets are wide—ground is no object, evidently, here—and they are lined with trees which, when more grown, will afford the grateful shade which is so much needed here in the heat of summer.

As in architecture, so in costume—the East and the West meet in Belgrade. Look at the stately gentleman promenading on the other side of the way; he might be a hadji, with that fine dignified face of the genuine "old Turk" type. He wears a red and yellow ephod-like waistcoat, a scarlet fez, a short braided brown jacket, with a cape to it, and a long voluminous kilt, or rather petticoat, of white flannel, edged with black braid and slashed at the bottom. His legs are cased in woolen greaves, bound with blue Morocco straps; his feet are in slippers.

Lumbering down the center of the street come two stalwart countrymen in short loose brown jackets, baggy knee-breeches, thrust into top boots, red sashes and broad leather belt, with a kind of wallet in front, stuffed full of pistols.—Servian Correspondence London News.

Scotch Farmers Ruined by Mice.

The Scotch farmers, with all their shrewdness, are apparently utterly beaten by the ridiculus mus. So far at least they have been unable to devise any means of ridding themselves of the armies of these insignificant creatures which have quartered themselves on the border farms. About three months ago the attention of the public in general and of local clubs in particular, was called to the depredations caused by these tiny quadrupeds, which, it was suddenly discovered, had increased to such an alarming extent as to have actually destroyed a large expanse of pasturage and to threaten to overrun the country. The land is represented as resembling the ground in the neighborhood of targets for rifle-practice, being literally riddled with holes; the whole of the vegetation is destroyed in certain localities in Teviotdale, not merely the blades of grass being eaten by the mice, but the roots being consumed as well. The consequence has been that the sheep have been robbed of their natural food, and the recent lambing season has been one of the most disastrous ever known, both ewes and lambs being deprived of sustenance and perishing in numbers. The plague is almost identical with that which has so seriously interfered with the progress of sheep farming in New Zealand, only there it is the rabbits that have caused the mischief; and, unless it can be stamped out, it threatens the ruin of many sheep-breeders and wool-growers. One farmer in New Zealand has actually sacrificed 15,000 acres of land by inclosing that area with a solid masonry wall in order to prevent the spread of a colony of rabbits which had taken possession of a portion of his farm. But land is too scarce and valuable in Scotland to permit of such an heroic method of cure. The question for the Scotch farmers is whether they can reduce the number of the mice by encouraging the increase of weasels, hawks, owls and other carnivorous birds and beasts, or whether they must take the law into their own hands and drive out the enemy. The unfortunate part of the business is that the little rodents are of no value, unlike rabbits, whose skins and flesh are of a certain worth, and they are too small to attract sportsmen with their guns. One thing is certain, that the Scotch farmers will not in future encourage the use of the gun at hawks and weasels, but will rather encourage the visits of these mouse-catchers.—London Daily News.

A Loss to Chicago Journalism.

Chicago reporters mourn the departure from that city of a family by the name of Gammel, the several members of which have delighted the journals by furnishing no end of subjects for local notices. Since Christmas Mr. Gammel has fallen off a house, drawn the first prize in a Southern lottery, cut off three fingers with a circular saw, and had a sunstroke. Mrs. Gammel has had a fortune left her in England, her pocket has been twice picked in the street cars, and her quarrel with Mrs. Doolittle about their hens produced one of the most comic cases ever tried before a police court. Her daughter, Miss Sophia Gammel, was once abducted from the Hayes school and not found for four days, when she was discovered at Ripon, Wis., whither she had gone to study for the stage, and a few months later eloped with an Italian count, by whom, in a domestic quarrel, at their castle on the shores of Lake Como, she was stabbed seriously, returning to her parents' home to furnish no less than three editorial articles.

The youngest son, a youth of 13, has also earned the gratitude of the reporters by furnishing the following paragraphs to the papers, as shown by a summary of his brief but brilliant career, published in and compiled from the files of the Chicago Tribune:

July 5—Blew off his thumb.

Aug. 27—Fell off shed and broke four ribs.

Nov. 3—Put torpedo on Van Buren street car-track.

Dec. 17—Fell while skating and broke left leg.

Feb. 26, 1876—Set fire to Mr. Ives' barn.

April 3—Arrested for stealing hens. Case compromised.

April 19—Stole $96 from his father and started for the Black Hills.

April 26—Captured while camping out at Dexter park.

May 6—Arm broken by a base ball bat.

July 4—Blew out eye and burned off his hair while celebrating the centennial with powder in a glass bottle.

A Great River.

The river Amazon is navigable by vessels of large size for a distance of 3,000 miles. Two thousand miles from its mouth its channel has a depth of three fathoms; and for 2,600 miles there occurs no fall to interfere with the smooth passage of shipping. The river has four contributaries, each over 1,000 miles in length, which are united by a network of natural canals, thereby increasing the facility of intercommunication.

This is a great apple year in New Hampshire. Trees altogether neglected, in pastures and along the roadside, are heavily laden with the fruit. The yield will be almost unprecedented in some parts of the State.

THE BLACK HILLS.

A Rose-Colored Report—"No Country on the Foot-stool that Possesses so Many Elements of Wealth."

Capt. C. V. Gardiner, lately arrived in Chicago from the Black Hills, brings in with him some samples of quartz which assay $35,000 to the ton, and silver ore that assays $2,300 to the ton. These specimens, the Chicago Tribune says, came from the Deadwood district, and were assayed in Denver. The Captain went to the Black Hills in March, to find out whether or not there was anything in the Hills. He went across them from north to south, and most of the gulches from east to west, and found that people who went there were utterly inexperienced, expecting to pick up gold by the hatful, and when they found that they had to work for the stuff they left for home, denouncing the Hills as an outrage and a fraud. The Captain says he has worked and traveled over the country as much, if not more, than any other man who has been there, so as to thoroughly acquaint himself with its resources, and has discovered that there is not a country on the foot-stool that possesses so many elements of wealth. This wealth is not, in his judgment, confined to gold, silver, and other metals, but he finds it possesses as fine timber and as large quantities as Wisconsin and Michigan. The Hills are covered with pine and the foot-hills with hard timber. The grasses are the finest he ever saw, and are far superior to those of Kansas or Colorado, and the soil is equal to that of Illinois and Iowa in the valleys and foot-hills to the north. As for water, it is abundant and good, sufficient to drive all the mills in the nation.

The only wants now are government and peace. There is labor enough, and every other element of success is present, and with the addition of the civilization of government, the Hills will become invaluable to the country. At present, the Captain says, everything is in embryo, and it may take some time to elevate the country to the standard which will make it safe for habitation and work. To those who contemplate going there this fall, he recommends that none go unprovided with money, for the country is crowded, and, while there is room for all, it would be better for emigrants to be prepared to care for themselves during the winter.

The Captain thinks the placer mines will run for ten years at least, while the quartz mines have developed more ore in the last four months than was discovered in Colorado in the first five years of its mining existence.

A Pitched Battle Among the Bees.

The bees are very much disposed to rob each other's hives, too. They don't know what fear is and will fight anything. A swarm gets out of honey, or finds that they have not enough to last through the winter, and it organizes itself into a raiding party and sallies out on the war path, ready to attack the first hive it finds. A party of these robbers came and set on one of my Italian hives the other day. A good many of my bees were out gathering honey, and the marauders effected a lodging on my hive and fought their way inside the hive, though the home-guard of the Italians fought with desperation and contested every inch of ground. It was the fiercest fight you ever saw. A regular hand to hand Waterloo. A tempest of short, shrill notes and hoarser hums (the war cries of the combatants) were heard fifty yards. The fight is strictly hand-to-hand. An Italian bee throws himself in front of an American bee to stop his progress. Two or three little Americans throw themselves with blind fury on the gigantic foreigner, and nip him with their sharp, snapping beaks in a thousand places. The object with him seems to be to catch them by the tip of the wing and give them a twist, which breaks or splits it, and deprives him of the power of flying. It is then easy for the Italian to bounce him and finish him up. The robbers have just about fought their way into the honey-cells when the tide of battle begins to change. A great many of the Italians have come in from their honey-hunt, and seeing in a moment how the thing is, pitch in, and, being fresh and vigorous, literally cut their way through the the ranks of the little Americans. Enough of these have come to turn the fortunes of the fight. The defeat never becomes a rout, though. Though thousands of the soldiers are slain, the balance continue the fight until all are dead except a few dozen of them. They still wage the arrogant war, being determined on "honey or death," and they will struggle until actually the last one is slain. Then, without a moment's rest, the Italians plunge into the mass of dead and dying and commence carrying the dead out of the hive. I came to their help, and actually took over two quarts of dead bees out of the hive, and the Italians retired to dress their wounds and discuss the combat, I never saw such a desperate fight in my life. I suppose it was a "ground hog case" with the invading party.—Augusta (Ga.) Constitutionalist.

Hunting Stories.

"I hear they're having great goose-hunting over in New Jersey," said Mr. Magruder, in the boarding-house, last night.

"Are they?" said Maguffin. "I never had much luck duck shooting."

"I suppose not," said Magruder, compassionately; "not much used to firearms, hey? I never read about geese but I think of a day's sport I had down on Shinnecook bay one day last year. The geese were flying very thick, and I took my V gun, and—

"Your V gun!" interrupted Mr. Maguffin: "what is a V gun?"

"You will learn further on in the narration," answered Magruder, continuing his story—"and went down there. One morning we saw coming up from the south what I suppose was the biggest flock of geese that ever flew. They came along in their usual way, flying in a triangle, with the leader on the point toward us. I got a fisherman to hold the V gun, and I took aim and let her go. The charge just cleaned both the wings off the leader, and then spread out like a V, and I am afraid you will scarcely believe me Mr. Maguffin, but it just went down the inside line of birds, and carried away their inner wings as clean as though they had been chopped off with a hatchet. Losing their balance from having only one wing apiece, they were thrown violently together by the continued flapping of the outside wings. Every bird was killed by the shock of the collision, and they fell to the earth in a line that measured 461 feet. There were just 809 birds; 402 pairs, and the old head goose that was the leader."

"Your speaking of long-necked creatures," said Maguffin, calmly, "reminds me of my giraffe hunt in South Africa. Great sport, giraffe hunting. We had one hunter that was such a fast runner that he would often get clear ahead of the party and catch a giraffe all by himself. Then he'd take a couple of turns on the giraffe's neck around a tree, and hold him until we come up. One day I was out alone, and I came across two tremendous giraffes together, away from the woods. I sneaked up behind them, grabbed them by their heads, and tied 'em together by their necks and there I had 'em!"

"Perhaps you'll kindly tell us," said Mr. Magruder, "how you got hold of their heads?"

"What! You don't mean to tell me, Mr. Magruder, that you don't know how they hunt giraffes? Why, you ignorant loon, giraffe hunters always wear stilts!"—Max Adeler.

Town Lots on Their Travels.

The large island near the Northern Pacific docks, which for years has defied the winds to move it materially, was driven across the bay last Tuesday afternoon, and now reposes in the neighborhood of the others, a short distance below Mr. Hughes' mill. It was dislodged, not so much by the wind—as a very moderate one was blowing at the time—as by the almost unparalleled high stage of water that for the past few weeks has prevailed at the head of the lake, and consequently in the bay. It was lifted out of its place, as it were, and then the action of the current and a very moderate wind sufficed to drive it across the bay.

Incredible as it may seem to those who have never seen the floating islands, this last one embraces something near two acres; it is covered with a heavy growth of tamarack, cedar, etc., some of the trees being 8 or 10 inches in diameter, and from 25 to 30 feet in height, and, as will be seen by consulting one of the city maps, it was laid out into city lots!

Query: To whom do the lots on that island now belong? The same one that owned them heretofore, or the man on Minnesota point, who owns the lots to which they are now joined and attached?—Duluth (Minn.) Tribune.

The Grave of Speaker Kerr.

Mr. Kerr owned a beautiful lot in the Northern Cemetery in the city, wherein is buried his second son, Charlie, who died in 1858, aged 2 years; his law partner, James A. Ghormley, who died of consumption in 1862, and a little adopted daughter that Mr. Kerr took to raise. The lot is separated from the last resting place of Gov. Ashbel P. Willard by a narrow walk through the grounds, and it is rather singular that these two great and honored sons of Indiana should take their final sleep so near each other. Mr. Kerr always expressed a wish to be buried here, and designated the spot where he desired his grave. While Mr. Kerr was a member of no church, it is known that he was partial to the Presbyterian faith, his estimable wife being an earnest and devoted member of that church.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

HOLGATE'S PRESERVING COMPOUND dispenses with sugar, heat or air-tight cans in preserving fruit, vegetables, meat, eggs, etc. A large exhibit at the Centennial Exposition, preserved four years ago, looks as fresh as if gathered yesterday. The most eminent chemists certify to its value and healthfulness. A box, which will preserve 32 gallons, can be had by sending $1 to Geo. Holgate & Co., I, No. 23 Agricultural Hall, Centennial Exposition, Philadelphia.

CHAPPED hands, face, pimples, ringworm, saltrheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and rough skin made soft and smooth, by using Juniper Tar Soap. Be careful to get only that made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, as there are many imitations made with common tar, all of which are worthless.

EDWARD BAYER, ESQ., Horton, Kings county, N. S., writes that an astonishing cure has been effected on his daughter by the use of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. The whole spine became diseased, she lost the use of her limbs, and her back was rounded up like a bow, in consequence of taking cold after having been inoculated for the kine pock. She is now well.

WE pledge our reputation on the assertion that any educated physician, after a careful examination of the recipe, will say that Parsons' Purgative Pills possess more merit than any other pill now offered for sale.

THE remarkable cures effected by Vegetine have induced many physicians and apothecaries, whom we know, to prescribe and use it in their own families.

General Kilpatrick's letter shows that Governor Hayes, the spotless, incorruptible statesman who is the candidate of the Republican party, can be approached in a familiar way with corrupt propositions.

Hon. Joseph Pulitzer formerly a republican, de.iverd a great speech to the Germans at Indianapolis on last Saturnight. The torch-light procession was one of the largest and grandest ever seen in that city.

E. D. Morgan, of New York, the republican candidate of that state is said to be worth $15,000,000. According to the loeic they apply to Tilden, Morgan must be a great scoundrel and thief to have accumulated such vast wealth

The Atlanta Constitution says: The statement of the proprietors of the Southern Hotel, St. Louis, that during the Convention not a single article was lost in or stolen from their house, is significant of what the Democrats will do if placed in the public offices at Washington.

The St. Louis Times is wicked enough to remark that when Rutherford B. Hayes arose in Congress, and in a subdued tone submitted the petition of the Cincinnati post office clerks for more pay, everybody knew that there was in him the smothered fire of a civil service reformer.

Boss Shepherd, of Washington, enjoyed a visit with Hayes at Columbus recently. It was a beast of confidence, a renewal of affection and a flow of champagne. The boss Washington thieves "stand solid" with and for Hayes.

Those twin relics of the halcyon days of radicalism. Orth and Colfax, will not mount the stump during the campaign. They have wrapped the mantle of obscurity about their manly forms, and beneath its folds sadly ruminate upon the mutability of political affairs.

All sorts af slanders against Governor Tilden are being invented by his assailants in the Republican press. Nine out of ten of these slanders are too absurb to need contradiction. In the mean time, while this is going on, we are glad to see that the Democratic press refrains from making false and slanderous charges against Gev. Hayes.

Hayes is simply immense on promises He has promised to resume specie payments in January, 1879, and has promised at the same time to break the promise. The one promise is made for the East, the other for the West. And the fools are expected not to see through the trick.

Political affairs look better than ever in New England. The New Hampshire Legislature adjourns after having earned the disgust of decent men and prepared the way for the repudiation of its insincere, office-seeking party at the very next election. Connecticut receives Jewell, and begins to understand what sort of reform Hayes and Chandler mean. Maine sees Blaine run away from investigation by way of an appointment to the Senate; and Massachusetts' Liberals and Independents are doing a great deal of thinking.

The September Election.

As was expected, Arkansas gave about 50,000 Democratic majority last week. Carpet-baggers no longer rule that State, and the consequence is' peace, prosperity, and a large Democratic majority. In reconstruction times, Arkansas furnished more outrages than any other Southern state, but a change has come, the colored man sees his interests and the Radicals have no longer a patent right on the colored vote.

Vermont gave a Republican majority, as was expected in her election last week. The whole vote is largely increased, but the majority is short the usual figures.

The New York Sun says: There are, however, significant facts in each of these elections. In Arkansas the Republicans healed all their divisions and made an earnest effort to cut down the Democratic majority. Nevertheless, it has reached the unprecedented height of 50,000. The bayonet was not used during the contest, no disturbance occured at the polls, and great numbers of negroes voluntarily voted with the Democrats. It is to this last circumstance that the unusually large majority of that party is due. The recent elections in Arkansas and Alabama, in which perfect order prevailed and the Democrats polled a pretty heavy negro vote, foreshadow the result in all the Southern States in November, provided every man, black and white, is allowed to cast his ballot in peace and as he pleases. Accursed be the desperate party that would attempt to prevent this by the intervention of the bayonet!

Although certain to carry the State by an immense majority, the Republicans have been unusually busy in Vermont for six weeks past. On the other hand, the Democrats have done very little. The main object of the Republicans seems to have been to get out the full Hayes vote. They have succeeded; and the result is that their majority is pretty certainly below the average Republican majority at the September elections in the Presidential campaigns since the party was organized. This shows a drift of the tide toward Tilden and reform.

Judge Tousley's Candidacy.

As our readers well know, the New Era has from the first insisted that the best interests of the people demand that a great many of the offices to be filled by the suffrages of the people should be entirely disconnected from the heat of a political campaign and the bickerings and strife which are inseparably connected with a partizan contest. Of this class the judgeship of the judicial district belongs, and in the proper selection and election of the candidate are the readers of this paper directly interested. It needs no lengthy argument on our part to convince all that the position we have taken is the correct one, as we believe that the fair minded men of every shade of political belief is ready to concede as much. While all are ready to admit the necessity of disconnecting this office from those which necessarily partake more or less of partisan character, why are not all ready to act upon their better judgment in the matter and cast their votes for a gentleman who stands high in the legal profession—one who is taking no part in the political strife that is now being waged—and one who has had larger experience in the duties of that office and who has impartially discharged the same.

We, of course, refer to Judge Hiram S. Tousley, of this county, who will be an independent candidate for the people for the Judgship in this judicial district, and who is pre-eminently qualified for the discharge of the duties of the position. While discharging the duties of the position a few years since, it was his lot to sit upon the bench during the trial of some of the most important cases that were ever brought before a judge in this circuit, as then constituted, and his rulings and decisions were characterized by that clear knowledge of law and unswerving purpose to do justice in all cases, that stamped him at once as the "right man in the right place," and which compelled political friend and foe alike to acknowledge the justice of his decisions.—Albion New Era.

We know that Mr. Tousley was looked upon by the people as an able, competent Judge, while he held that position and now a riper experience adds to his then fair reputation. We believe the whole people should rally to his support, and thus divert the position of those political considerations, that will have their influence with the best of men.

Gov. Hayes expressed a sensible view of the financial question, and one in accordance with the position taken by Indiana republicans, when he said in his speech at Marian, July 31st, 1875, that "republicans do not propose to force resumption by a contraction of the currency. They are satisfied to leave to the influences of time and the inherent energies of the country the work that yet remains to be done to place our currency at par.—Kendallville Standard.

Now, harmonize the above with the following from Hayes' letter:

I am not in favor of the repeal of the resumption act unless something is substituted that will more effectually bring about specie payments as soon as the time prescribed in that act —R. B. Hayes.

The Republican party has held the reins of government for 16 years, and has proved unfaithful to every trust and to every duty. This is the condition of things to-day, and yet, instead of meeting issue squarely, the politicians and the organs are seeking to divert public attention by hatching up all manner of absurd lies against the personal character of Samuel J. Jilden.—[Utica Observer, (Dem.)

It is stated that "Blue Jeans" Williams, the Democratic candidate for Governor, upon receiving the nomination at the hands of his party, did not resign his position, nor has he done so yet, but continues to draw his little $20 per day as congressman. His great cry is retrenchment and reform. That is the great cry of all his party play managers But when "retrenchment and reform" hits a Democrat, how it don't strike in. When Hon. G. S. Orth was nominated for Gov. he immediately resigned his office as a foreign minister. This, am'g all consistant, considerate men of whatever party, was thought to be a commendable course. Ah! what emptiness there is in the great cry of "retrenchment and reform" as coming from the big booby blue jeans

The above is from the Angola Republican. In reply we say that Mr. Williams has resigned his position, and done so on the day he ceased to render service as such. Orth did not resign his $12,000 a year in gold, until months after he had quit his post. The above paper first asserts a falsehood and then moralizes upon reform. Using disrespectful terms toward Mr Williams will not help the matter. We have never used any other term toward their candidate other than Gen. or Mr. Harrison, and we do not expect to. Mr. Harrison is a gentleman, we believe Mr. Williams was never guilty of any act toward anyone that prevents him from being ranked in the same category. He is an honest, hard-working old gentlemen, respected at home by thousands of Republicans who know him for his sterling qualities, habits of sobriety and practical experence. We trust our neighbor will make the correction as to his resignation.

Soldiers' Re-union

D. Cox, Milo S. Haskell and Col. Dick Thompson and o.hers. Fireing of sunset gun. Grand Military Ball in the evening. The programme is subject to changes in case of emergencies.

COMMITTEE.

Judge Hoadly, of Cincinnati, lately prominent in the Republican ranks could'nt stand it any longer and made a splendid speech at Shelbyville, the other day, in which he says:

"Now, what is the call upon me, as one who has served with the Republican party through the best days of my manhood? Eight years age the administration of Andrew Johnson came to an end. The people made Grant president They gave him control of both branches of Congress. They delivered into his and their hands a prosperous country. The wheels of industry were in active motion. Our manufactories were in operation, our laborers employed and our seamen were at sea and all were amply rewarded. Every merchant who understands his business takes account of stock at least once a year, but politically we take account of stock in the nation but once in four years. How do we stand now? I was told this morning that this year's crop in Shelby Co. will be the largest, especially as to corn, ever gathered in the county. Is it so?—Voices—yes, it is true. Are you therefore prosperous? Voices—no. Why not? That is easily answered by the advice the party in power has received from their great lerders, from their own wise men. Had Lincoln lived, would he have been flaunting the bloody shirt and teaching hatred in the South? He died at a most unpropitious moment; he died with his heart—his great heart—full of love and kindness for the south Is not that true? Yes.

And Seward, and Chase, and Greeley, and Sumner, and Curtin, and Wells and Blair, and Trumbull, and Julian, and Farnsworth, and Seigel, and Hooker and those who were the first great leaders of the Republican party, where are they? For Tilden and Hendricks—for honesty and reform—for a pure and economical government.

A Western writer says that Hayes wears kid gloves all the time, and that those members of the Fifth Avenue Conference who go for him don bird-tail coats, which look as well on one side as the other; that they sprinkle the public service with rose water and produce a rain storm with a syringe.

Park Godwin, of the Evening Post, an out-and-out Republican, thus writes of the Democratic nominee for President: "I have known Samuel J. Tilden all my life, and I know him to be honest to the core, singularly conscientious in all he does, of great disinterestedness, and, as a statesman, head and shoulders before any man now prominent. He is the most profound.

COMSUMPTION CURED.

AN old physician, retired from active practice having had placed in his hands by and East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering he will send free of charge to all who desire it this receipt with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp naming this paper.

Miss Abbie Potter is quite ill with fever.

Go to Ryan's if you want a good pair of boots.

There will be a Republican rally here tomorrow.

A fine stock of Trusses, warranted, at Davenport's.

A new brand of cigars at Davenport's Call for the "Reliable."

Mr. Boland, our candidate for Recorder is very ill with fever.

The best 5 cent cigars in town, the "Reliable," at Davenport's.

Everybody should go and hear Gov. Blair at Butler next Saturday.

Have we not seen enough brother-in-law business in our courts?

Don't forget to read Julian's great speech on the inside of this paper.

Sammy Pommert is as good a barber as we have in the county. Give him a trial.

Wall paper, just received a large assortment for the fall trade, at Davenport's.

Frank Ryan has an immense stock of boots and shoes which he is selling low for cash.

G. C. Ralston is around again after a serious illness of two weeks, with bilious fever.

Main voted last Monday and shows a Republican loss of 6,000 over the last Presidental election.

Smokers can find just what they want at Davenport's. Ask for the new brand "Reliable."

Voters should remember that they have the assurance of Morton that Hayes' term would be a continuation of Grantism.

The Democrats will raise a pole at Fairfield Center, Saturday evening, Sep. 23d. Several speakers will be in attendance.

S. M. Hench, Esq., of Fort Wayne, will speak at Butler Center next Saturday evening. Let there be a large attendance.

The ladies should call and examine the fine stock of shoes now opened out at Ryan's. He has a large assortment, and can please you.

The new landlord of the Central House is doing an immense business.—No Hare in the butter. "Landlord fill that flowing bowl."

Hayes has a piano worth six hunderd dollars in his house and to escape taxation he swears that he does not own a piano. Is Hayes a perjurer?

A pole will be raised for Tilden & Henkricks this, Thursday evening, at Faylor's Corners, and Mr. Kelley will be present to address the people.

While Simon Ochs was absent from his house last Saturday his friends met and raised a handsome hickory pole in from of his residence.

"My friend, you have a splendid pair of boots there?" "Yes, sir, I bought them at Ryan's, very low for cash, and I know my money has been well invested.

A Democratic caucus will be held at Spencerville, Sept. 30th, at 3 o'clock, P. M., for the nomination of candidates to fill the various office in Concord township.

T. J. Cuppy, Esq., is now the accommodating agent at the Eel River depot, Mr. Shaner having retired. None so obliging and pleasant as our friend Tom.

F. D. Ryan, has just opened out an immense stock of boots for fall and winter wear. He buys with cash and sells very low for cash, and can therefore give you the benefit of a cash trade

PUBLIC SALE.

S. Lauferty will have a public sale of household goods, &c., on Saturday next September 16th, 1876, on Fourth Street, near Auburn House.

A prominent Republican remarked on our streets the other day, that if Rose should be elected to the position of Judge, he would open the Geneva Arbitration case, as his jurisdiction would exten from sea to sea.

Hon, C. A. Fairbanks, of Philadelphia, made an excellent speech to an attentive audience last evening. He will address the people at Taylor's corners to-night, and at Butler Saturday night. He is a splendid speaker.

Geo. Pepples declares he saw a snake the other day at least 30 feet long. It went into a swall on his farm, where it staid several days, and in going out passed over a ploughed field, leaving a mark nearly a foot wide.

Mr. Yesbera is making some of the handsomest suits we have seen this season. He has a fine stock of piece goods and cuts and fits a suit to perfection.—Call at his store north of Aoright's, see his stock and learn his prices.

Lessons in Instrumental Music.

Mrs. W. S. Sanders, of Chicago, will received a limited number of pupils for instructions in instrumental music on the piano or organ. Satisfaction guaranteed. Terms reasonable. Residence at John H. Ehlers.

What a beautiful and graceful thing it would have been if Grant had written a letter of sympathy and condolence to poor Custer's widow. But he was suffering from "neuralgia in the head."

The Democrats raised a fine pole 105 feet high, at Jackman's Corners, last Saturday evening. Although the weather was bad, a large number were in attendance, and Mr. Kelley and others addressed them

If Hayes meant to endorse the resumption act of 1875, why did he not say so plainly and unequivocally as Wheeler does? It is beginning to be clear that weak as the Cincinnati ticket is, its principal weakness is in the head.

Major Badger, of the 22nd regiment U. S. A. has been a guest of the Swineford House for several days. The Major has been on duty on the plains since the war and gives some interesting sketches of life on the frontier.

Col. I. B. McDonald, of Whitley Co., will address the people at Butler next Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock. The Colonel is a good speaker, was a gallent soldier and instead of talking about eth war issues will confine himself to the living issues of the day.

Don't forget the grand rally at Butler next Saturday. Gov. Blair, Michigan's eloquent orator, will be there, and he should be greeted by an immense crowd A train will leave Auburn at 1 o'clock P. M. and return at 8 P. M. We want to see a large crowd from Auburn.

Hon. Fred. O'Donnell, of Iowa, made a very effective speech here last Saturday night. He was fair and gentlemanly to the other side, and abused no one. The audience was large though the weather was terrible and he gave very general satisfaction.

Those contemplating the purchase of of an organ, should not forget that Mr. Yesbera is agent for the celebrated Estey organ, an instrument that has stood the test of years. These instruments are simply unrivaled, and hundreds have been sold throughout the country.

A fine pole one hundred feet high, was raised at Stafford Center in honor of Tilden, Hendricks and Reform. Capt Franks made a capital speech, and things look bright in little Stafford.—Prof. Luke was also present and made a neat address. Keep the ball moving.

Rev. W. L. Sanders, of Chicago, has been appointed Pastor of the Baptist church of this place. Mr. Sanders is a brilliant scholar and a fine lecturer. We see his name in connection with the Lycemn Bureau, where he is announced to deliver his great lecture, "Backbone" and others equally interesting.

To show the meaness of Republicans in some parts of this county, we only have to state that they dug down the Democratic pole erected at Stafford's Corners, last Saturday evening. The respect due to political opponents will hardly be accorded to such specimens as these, by fair minded men.

Orin Clark, the accomplished and brilliant Republican candidate for Representative went to Corunna some two years ago, we are informed, and traded with a hardware merchant there, stating at the time that he would go ten miles anytime to trade with a good Republican, before he would trade with a Democrat. The joke was that the merchant, though formerly a Republican, was then a Democrat. A fine specimen he would be to send into an intelligent body.

Why dont the Republican press say something about Hayes' income tax. They abused Tilden, and made a grand flourish over what they thought was an awful thing, but now since Hayes has been caught in a terribly disgraceful affair, for which he has no explanation, the Rads think it is not so bad after all to make a false return of income. It makes some difference whose ox is gored.

A small cyclone went through the northern part of Stafford township, last Thursday, destroying everything in its course. A large rail was taken up and forced through the roof of Mr. Henry Kaler's house, which went through to the ground floor. It went throught the barn doors of Mr. Hall and took therefrom a new wagon, almost completely demolished it without injuring the building seriously. A roaring sound accompanied it like the noise of a train of cars.

Money To Loan.

C. A. O. McClellan, of Waterloo, Ind., has now completed his arrangements to loan an unlimited amount of money on five years time in sums of ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS and upwards, at nine per cent. interest payable semi-annually, on first mortgage security on improved farms. He will also make investments for parties having money to loan and guarantee security.

Fair at Waterloo.

The indications are now that the fair at Waterloo will be a good one, up to and perhaps better than former efforts. Improvements are steadily going on at the grounds and every preparation is being pushed forward so as to make it pleasant and enjoyable to all Though the times are hard it will not do to ignore this feature of our county. That would not be true economy. Let everyone make preparations to attend and assist in a grand exhibition. Very liberal premiums are offered and it behooves us to keep as many of them at home as possible. Premium lists can be had by calling at Rickel & Tefft's office in the Court House.

If Rose is elected Judge brother-in-law clerk will riot in courts and fee bills. People who have suits in courts should bear this in mind. With one brother-in-law for clerk and another for judge, the costs of court will amount up higher than ever. If Tousley is elected judge, he will reform this business of extortionate fee bill and costs, and brothers-in-law.

How reckless and profuse have been the expenses of the Government under Grantism is shown by the figures of the Hon. David A. Wells. The net ordinary expense of the Federal Government increased from 1870 to 1874 the rate of four per cent per annum compounded. This was from five to nine, years after the war. Is it any wonder that the people have been growing poorer under such an experience?

Mr. Kelley challenged Mr. Baker to meet him in joint discussion and defend the Republican party and its administration. Mr. Baker responds in a long letter that he is not responsible for Gen Grant's administration. He endorses the Cincinnati platform which endorses Grant, and yet he refuses to come before the people and discuss the merits of the same. He proposes, however, to discuss jointly on his record and not the record of the Republican party.

Captain Cutter, a candidate for Sheriff, did attend that affair north of Waterloo, where drunkenness and dancing were indulged in on the Sabbath day.—One who is before the people for a high office desecrates the Sabbath day, and gives his presence and influence to such proceedings. We could well excuse it in thoughtless young people, but from one who asks the confidence of the people, it does look reckless and careless, qualities that hardly make a good Sheriff.

Do the people of this county know that there is a family combination being worked up, worse than Grant's nepotism First, a brother-in-law resigns a judgship to go to Congress in two years, second, a brother-in-law has possession of the Clerk's office, and last, a brother-in-law is the Republican candidate for judge. If there are any more we would suggest that the people of the county petition the Legislature for the creation of new offices.

Bro. Weamer got on his ear last week, and abused Mr Cowan, of Garrett, simply because Mr. Cowan is a Democrat. If Mr. C. was a Republican do you suppose Weamer would have anything but smiles and compliments! Mr. Cowan is a gray-haired man and has been the leading spirit in building a large town in our midst. What has Bro. Weamer done? Mr. Cowan is not a candidate for any office but Weamer has the reputation of throwing dirt always before election.

Why did not Judge Best publicly announce through the Press to the people when he was going to resign? We know of several letters that were written to him, asking when he was going to resign, and he refused to answer. Why? The brother-in-law understood it. He was on the inside track. It would not do to make it public and give the people a chance. They might interfere with the brother-in-law arrangement and put somebody else in. In the words of Don Quexotte, "blessed be the man who invented the brother-in-law.

Mr. Rose is one of the best lawyers as well as one of the best and most exemplary and worthy men in this country.

The above is from the gifted pen of Bro. Weamer. Now, Weam, we most positively deny that Mr. Rose is one of the best lawyers in the country. We don't say "it is a lie" in the language of a blackguard but we deny the allegation Now, for the proof, neighbor.—Show us one important litigation that Mr. Rose has conducted at home, or one important case he has had charge of abroad? Give us a few facts along with your fulsome assertions.

We regret to learn of the sudden death of G. Killinger, Esq., of Angola, last week. Mr. K. was one of the early settlers of that county, and was well known and respected through the county. The Angola Republican says, on the day of his death between two and three o'clock while at work he felt the sudden return of the disorder which had of late troubled him, and called for assistance but was unable to leave the shop. Assistance was at hand shortly but nothing that friends or physicians could do would save him. He died in a short time after, but retained his consciousness until about the last.

The following letter is from the pen of the Republican candidate for Judge in this District:

AUBURN, IND., July 16, 1868.

MRS. HANNAH MULLINEAUX,

Hicksville, Ohio.

At the last session of the Board of Commissioners of DeKalb County, Ind., there was an order made for the payment of twenty-five dollars, to your son Nelson, as a bounty for his having volunteered form this county last fall. I have been informed that he is now dead and also that his father is dead. The order is now made out for your son, but there is no money in the Treasury with which to pay, and there will not be for some time to come. The attorney who secured the claim charges five dollars for his services which will leave but twenty dollars. I have some money that I can spare from my business for some time, and will buy the order of you if you wish to sell it. I will give you twelve dollars for the order. If you wish to sell it thus you may write to me directing how I shall send the money to you, whether by mail or otherwise.

Respectfully, JAMES E. ROSE.

P. S. Address,

JAMES E. ROSE,
Auburn, Ind.

A pretty good shave.

Our Candidate for Prosecutor.

D. D. Moody, Esq., our candidate for Prosecutor, though not one of the best lawyers in the country, as Weamer says of Rose, yet is competent and qualified to fill the position for which he has been nominated. He is a gentleman of most excellent moral character, an admirable quality to bring to this position and has had some considerable experience as a lawyer. He is firm and unflinching in character, yet a pleasant affable gentleman. He has the advantage of his competitor of being a resident of the district during the last eight years, where he has been engaged, not in preparatory studies of law, but in the practice of his profession. The fair minded people of whole district, when they come to examine the abilities and qualities of the two candidates, cannot fail to vote for Mr. Moody.

On account of sickness, Mr. Robertson failed to fill his appointment.—Waterloo Press.

Supposing, Mr. Press, we should say Mr. Robertson was afraid of a poor crowd and did not come, it would be no more unjust of him, than you were of Mr. Voorhees, as to his cause of sickness. But we will not say so, because it would be mean and unfair. We mention this to show you that a man can be a gentleman and an editor at the same time.

The small crowd and general lack of enthusiasm made Voorhees sick, and he excused himself from speaking.—Waterloo Press.

We thought we were to have something fair and half way decent during the campaign, but the above don't look much like it. Mr. Vorhees was sick before he left Logansport and could scarcely walk when he arrived at the depot. He expressed himself as being very much pleased with the number, intelligence and great attention of the crowd. He did not excuse himself from speaking, but spoke for forty minutes, though in extreme pain. With these exceptions the above article is correct.

There were members of Congress who voted to exhonorate Mr. Kerr of the charge of selling an appointment for money, on no other ground than that the shock of a verdict of guilty, in his then weak state of health would kill him. The editor of the COURIER knows this to be true.—Indianian.

We don't know anything of the kind. When such men as Mr. Plaisted, of Maine, an extreme partizan, will explain before he has heard a particle of evidence, that "the charge is a d—d lie" and iterate it afterwards, it is an evidence to us that his health was not considered. In all the expressions we heard from Republican members, not one expressed a doubt as to Mr. Kerr's personal honesty and integrity.

Morton challenges Hendricks to a joint discussion, in hope that he would get a crawd to talk to. Ever since Hendricks spoke to 15,000 people at Shelbyville, his first appearance, Morton feels bad, and comes this dodge, so that he can fling the bloody shirt. Now, if Morton wants a joint discussion, the tall Sycamore of the Wabash, will accommodate him, but we fear since Dan. used John Sherman so roughly, the other day, that Morton will not like to meet a similar fate. If the Republicans want Gov. Hendricks to divide his time let them wheel in Wheeler, their candidate for Vice-President. They are both out for the same office, and a joint debate might enable the people to judge which is the better man. The Sentinel is right when it says, "Bring out your man."

August Flower.

The most miserable beings in the world are those suffering from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint. More than seventy-five per cent of the people in the United States are afflicted with these two diseases and their effect such as sour stomach, sick headache, habitual Costiveness, palpitation of the Heart, heart-burn, water-brash, gnawing and burning pains at the pit of the stomach, yellow skin, coated tongue and disagreeable taste in the mouth, coming up of food after eating, low spirits, &c.—Go to the drug store of F. E. Davenport and get a 75c bottle, or a sample bottle for 10c. Try it. Two doses will relieve you.

GRAND RALLY!

—AT—

BUTLER, IND'A

Saturday, Sept. 16, '76

EX. GOV. BLAIR,

Michigan's favorite son will address the people. Fare from Auburn to Butler and return 25 cents.

Train leaves at 1 o'clock and returns at 8 p. m., Tickets at Williams', Lanning's and Ryan's stores.

"DON'T FORGET IT!"

On Monday evening last, Nancy Clutter shot herself through the heart, with a pistol, producing instant death. The circumstances, as near as we can get them, were as follows: Deceased was at the house of L. S. Goodwin, just west of town, Mr. G. and his wife being down town. While there she found a loaded pistol, which she took in her hands and handled it for some time. While still having hold of the weapon, in some manner it was accidently discharged, the ball taking effect in the breast of Miss Cutter. She walked to the door and fell to the floor, expiring before the neighbors could reach the scene. Deceased, was past middle age, single, residing with her father in the vicinity of Mr. Goodwins house, and has always been regarded as feeble minded.—Waterloo Press.

Meeting of the Central Committee.

A called meeting of the Democratic County Central Committee was held here yesterday, before which Mr. McClure tendered his withdrawal from the canvass. The committee proceeded to select a candidate to fill his place. After several ballots J. C. St. Clair was nominated.

The following preamble and resolution was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, J. A. McClure, Esq., having voluntarily withdrawn from the canvass, as a candidate for Sheriff, solely to bring about harmony in the Democratic party and,

WHEREAS, has made a full statement of the facts relative to certain rumors affecting his good name. Therefore

RESOLVED, That this Committee here by unanimously express our belief that J. A. McClure is innocent of the charges and accusations rumored abroad assailing his character and we hereby, fully exonerate him from the charges and accusations thus circulated, believing him to be an honest man.

Our present member of Congress, Mr. Baker, says: "I believe the time has come when the people demand wise statesmanship, honest and economical administration and the inauguration of policies which shall give relief to labor and revive our prostrate industries."—Also that "the republican and democratic parties of to-day stand pledged to reform in civil services, and in the legislative and executive departments of the government:"

Mr. Baker is the first Republican we have seen in this neck o' the woods who acknowledges the necessity for reform, and expresses his desire to see the "inauguration of policies, which shall give relief to labor and revive our prostrate industries.' When we speak of reform here the Republicans hoot and laugh, but here is one who has been where corruption has raised its wilful head, and he knows of what he speaks. We give him due credit, and now as civil service reform is necessary, as is the revival of our prostrate industries, let us have a change, by all means, for we can never have it under such men as Zach Chandler, who was repudiated by the Republicans of his State.

Old "Blue Jeans" would'nt talk about State affairs because, as he said, he did'nt know anything about them. If the old gentleman would carry out the rule only to talk of what he knows, he would soon lose the organs of speech for want of exercise.—Press.

Will our farmer friends take a note of the above. This is the style of campaigning the Radicals Press propose,—mean attacks and dirty falsehoods.—A man who has been connected almost uninterreptedly with our State Legislation for nearly forty years, a citizen who has been the head of our State Board of Agriculture for years, but because he is a farmer and instead of wearing kid gloves dons a suit of blue jeans, he is put down as naught. And then to put words in his mouth he never said, for there are few who know more about State affairs than "Uncle Jimmy" While Harrison was sitting in his easy chair, surrounded with all the luxuries which a pampered taste could desire Mr. Williams was elected time after time to serve the people in the legislature. He knows a hundred times more about the State of Indiana and her legislation, more about her wants and the wants of the mass of the people than Mr Harrison ever will know. But because he is a farmer and not a lawyer he is sneered at, by the radical press, because forsooth he flings not the bloody shirt like Harrison.

In his late Cleveland speech, Carl Schurz says with emphasis, "the administration has this particular merit, it is so grossly corrupt as to satisfy any mind, even the most stupid, that reform is necessary."

Notice of Administration.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the undersigned has been appointed by the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, of the State of Indiana, administrator of the estate of Lyman Green, deceased, late of said county. Said estate is supposed to be insolvent.

FRANCIS M. GREEN, Adm'r.

September 12, '76.

The Withdrawal of Mr. McClure.

We regret the necessity of a change in our county ticket, as to the office of Sheriff. When nominated Mr. McClure stood well before the people but after that he was illy advised to suppress, a little miserable story about some clover seed, and acted on that advice, knowing at the time he was innocent of the charge. He thought best to keep it down than to boldly fight it out before the people, and though no charge was made by his opponents he submitted the facts to his friends, and yesterday withdrew from the contest.—While we believe Mr. McClure entirely innocent in this matter, we regret he took the course he did to adjust it. Many of his Republican and Democratic friends will testify to his honesty and good reputation, and his kind heart, neighborly qualities.

The Central Committee met yesterday, and selected John C. St. Clair to fill Mr. McClure's place on the ticket.

Commissioners Proceedings.

The County Commissioners met Monday, Sept. 4th, and transacted the following business:

Adjourned to meet October 17th, 1876.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1876.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A TRAIN on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad ran off the track near Harper's Ferry, a few days ago, and rolled down an embankment into the canal. Strange to say, none of the passengers were seriously injured. The only death was that of Joseph G. Shipley, the heroic engineer, who was found in five feet of water wedged in his cab, with both hands grasping the throttle of the locomotive.... John S. Waring & Co., of Yonkers, the heaviest hat manufacturing firm in the United States, have failed, with liabilities amounting to about $400,000, of which $198,000 is due to New York banks. They employed 700 operatives.... The Gun Rock House, at Hingham, Mass., a well-known summer resort, was burned last week. The loss is $150,000.

A FATAL explosion occurred at the Government works at Hell Gate, in New York harbor, a few days ago, by which three men were killed outright and a number of others more or less wounded, some quite seriously.... A Philadelphia dispatch says "the cool weather is having a decided influence on the attendance at the Exposition, and hundreds of excursionists, who were waiting for the end of the heated term, are now visiting the grounds."

THE unveiling of the statue of Lafayette, presented by the French Government as a token of its fervent friendship for the American Republic, occurred in New York, on the 6th inst., with appropriate ceremonies. The statue stands in Union Square, where also are located the statues of Washington and Lincoln.

GOV. HARTRANFT, of Pennsylvania, has issued the death-warrants for the execution of Thomas Murphy, James Carroll, James Boyle, Hugh McGeoghan and James Roorty, the "Molly Maguires" who were recently convicted in Schuylkill county, of murder in the first degree. The execution is to take place Oct. 1.

THE WEST.

ACCORDING to the recent census taken at the Red Cloud Agency, it appears that there are but 5,000 Indians, all told, at that point, the number of growing males being but 1,000. This census will be used as a basis in the issue of rations in the future, and the many bucks who now had rather fight than eat will very likely go with empty stomachs when the winter season approaches.

CHICAGO reports three murders in one day, and it wasn't a good day for killing people either. Mike O'Leary called upon his wife, from whom he had been separated, and invited her to take a stroll. While promenading a public thoroughfare he drew a razor and cut her throat. She is not expected to recover. A negro named Smith, in a disreputable saloon, shot at a colored brother named Perry Hersey. The ball missed the intended victim and perforated an African named Lynn, killing him almost instantly. Matthew Gallaghan, after an absence from his wife of a year, returned and found her cohabiting with a colored gentleman. He armed himself with a pistol and went to the house where they were living. Forcing an entrance he reached the bed-room just in time to see the black Lothario scudding through the window. He walked to the bed and fired a pistol ball into the face of the woman. The bullet entered her mouth and lodged in the back of her neck, inflicting a death wound.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Chicago Tribune, who left Gen. Terry's camp on the 31st of August, reports the columns of Crook and Terry as having separated and moving independently, neither commander having much expectation of meeting or overtaking any considerable body of hostiles. In fact, Sitting Bull seems to have given his pursuers the slip, and the campaign against the Sioux to have completely fizzled for this year. Where the main body of the Indians now is, or where and when they may be expected to be heard from again, is a conundrum which may as well be given up for the present.... A painful and sickening tragedy was recently enacted in Green county, Wis. Mr. Jacob Ten Eyck, an old and highly-respected citizen, left his house in the forenoon, the family supposing that he had gone to one of the neighbors. In crossing one of the fields on his farm, in which was a herd of cattle and a ferocious bull, he was attacked by the latter and killed. The hogs in the field began the sickening work of eating the human body, and when search was made for him in the evening the animals had devoured all of it but a part of his head and one foot.... One man was killed, six injured, and the machine shops very much wrecked in Jeffersonville, Ind., the other day, by the explosion of a boiler in the yard of the Louisville and Indianapolis railroad.

DAVID SEGUR, an old and prominent citizen of Toledo, Ohio, committed suicide the other day, by blowing the top of his head off with a shot-gun. Despondency, caused by financial reverses, led to the fatal act.... At Fairmount, Neb., a few days ago, a farmer named Brewer took a grist to mill, accompanied by his little boy and girl. In drawing his gun from wagon the weapon was discharged, the contents striking both children, killing one and mortally wounding the other.... St. Joseph, Mo., papers record the death, in that place, of Gen. M. Jeff Thompson, of New Orleans, who acquired some reputation by his exploits in Southeast Missouri as a Confederate General during the late war.

FOR a long time merchants throughout the State of Minnesota have been chafing under irregularity in business remittances, and complaints have been showered upon the authorities. Instituting a rigorous search, two clerks in the St. Paul postoffice have been entrapped in the very act of despoiling letters. The culprits are Charles C. Kelly, registry clerk, and John C. Terry, Jr., distributing clerk and superintendent of city carriers. Their arrest has caused a genuine sensation in St. Paul.

THERE were 1,120 deaths in Chicago during the month of August.... The Wabash railway delivered over 2,000,000 bushels of grain at Toledo during the month of August.... The Missouri Pacific railroad was sold at public auction, under the Sheriff's hammer, at St. Louis, last week. The price paid was $3,000,000, Andrew Pierce, Jr., being the successful bidder.

AN awful bank-robbing tragedy was enacted in the town of Northfield, Rice county, Minn., on the 7th inst. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon eight mounted men, armed with navy revolvers, rode into town and dismounted in front of the Bank of Northfield. Five remained outside, and three entered the bank and sprang over the counter. One held a knife at the throat of J. L. Haywood, cashier, ordering him to open the vault. The other two compelled A. E. Bunker, assistant cashier, and Frank Wilcox, clerk, to hold up their hands. Haywood refused to open the vault. The knife was pressed against his throat. Still he refused. Meantime the townspeople were gathering, and the robbers became impatient. Haywood persisting in his refusal, one robber presented a pistol at his right temple and shot him dead. The three then turned to Bunker, ordering him to open the vault. He denied knowing the combination. The robbers made a demonstration toward him, when he ran out the back door, receiving as he ran a pistol-billet through his right shoulder. Wilcox was not attacked. Meanwhile the townspeople in the street had opened fire on the robbers, killing two and wounding one. Five escaped, carrying the wounded one with them, leaving one horse killed and another captured by the citizens. The robbers are described as large, able-bodied men, well mounted. They secured no booty except a handful of nickels, which they threw on the floor.

THE long-talked-of prize-fight between the bruisers, Joe Goss, of England, and Tom Allen, of St. Louis, came off in Boone county, Ky., twelve miles south of Covington, on the 7th inst. The combatants pummeled each other for nearly two hours. The St. Louis bruiser was getting the best of the fight, and, from all accounts would undoubtedly have thrashed the Englishman, but, in an unguarded moment, he administered, in the twenty-first round, what the fancy call a "foul" blow, and Goss was declared the winner of the contest. An immense crowd of roughs, and a few people who claim to be respectable, witnessed the affair.

THE SOUTH.

THE yellow fever is epidemic at Savannah, Ga., and many deaths are reported.

THE New Orleans Times recently printed an article reflecting upon the character of L. J. Souer, a prominent Republican politician and member of the Louisiana Legislature. Souer responded through another journal, denouncing the author of the article as a liar. Henry L. Smith, a reporter for the Times, and the author of the charges against Souer, sought the latter on the street and proceeded to chastise him with a cowhide. Souer drew his pistol and fired several shots at Smith, three of which took effect, inflicting wounds from which it is likely he will not recover. Smith also used his little revolver to some effect, putting three bullets into Souer's anatomy. The latter's wounds, however, are not dangerous.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says that during the week ending Saturday, Sept. 2, the following changes of stations of troops were made: Company A, Fifteenth infantry, from Fort Wingate, N. M., to Fort Craig, N. M.; Company B, Fifteenth infantry, from Fort Craig, N. M., to Fort Garland, Col.; Company D, from Fort Garland to Fort Wingate; headquarters Sixteenth infantry from Newport barracks, Ky., to Mt. Vernon barracks, Ala.; Companies F, G and I, Eleventh infantry, to Cheyenne agency, Dakota; Company H, Eleventh infantry, to Standing Rock agency, Dakota.... Gen. Sheridan telegraphs Gen. Sherman that he has suspended Agent Burke, of Standing Rock, who, it is believed, has been supplying the hostile Indians with beef intended for the military on the frontier.

EX-SECRETARY BRISTOW has renewed the lease of his house in Washington.... The instructions of the Attorney General to United States Marshals, regarding the coming elections, have been issued. They charge marshals that protection must be afforded to all citizens while registering or voting, and from violence or outrage on account of their votes. In cities of more than 20,000 inhabitants, special deputy marshals are to be appointed to carry out these orders, and soldiers or civilians may be summoned as a posse to assist marshals in the performance of their duties, which is not to be impeded by State laws or officers.

THE Secretary of the Treasury has called for the redemption of $10,000,000 of 5-20 bonds of 1865, May and November, upon which the interest will cease on the 6th of December. Three millions are registered, and $7,000,000 coupon-bonds, as follows: Coupon bonds—$500, Nos. 551 to 600, both inclusive; $100, Nos. 851 to 2,500, both inclusive; $500, Nos. 3,351 to 9,700, both inclusive; $1,000, Nos. 14,551 to 26,000, both inclusive; $15 (?), Nos. 201 to 650, both inclusive; $100, Nos. 201 to 650, both inclusive; $500, Nos. 801 to 1,050, both inclusive; $1,000, Nos. 501 to 1,800, both inclusive; $5,000, Nos. 1,101 to 1,550, both inclusive; $10,000, Nos. 1,151 to 2,100, both inclusive.... The official report of the proceedings of the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress is now ready. This report makes eight bulky volumes of the Congressional Record. These, taken in connection with the hundreds of volumes of testimony of the investigating committees and their reports will make the weightiest addition to political libraries completed in any one year since the war.

GENERAL.

A GOVERNMENT commission, composed of officers of the Engineer Corps of the United States army, left Washington for Omaha the other day, to enter upon the work of re-surveying the Union and Central Pacific railroad lines from Omaha to Sacramento. This is in accordance with a joint resolution recently passed by Congress, and is for the purpose of re-measuring the entire line of both roads, it being asserted that the roads are not as long as has been claimed. As Government bonds were issued in construction at the rate of from $14,000 to $48,000 per mile, the question of length becomes important.

POLITICAL.

GOV. JACOB, of West Virginia, has appointed Samuel Price United States Senator, in place of Allen T. Caperton, deceased.

THE Massachusetts Republican State Convention assembled at Worcester on the 5th inst., and was presided over by Senator Boutwell. The following ticket was selected by acclamation: For Governor, Alexander H. Rice, present incumbent; Lieutenant Governor, Horatio G. Knight; Secretary of State, H. B. Pierce; Auditor, Julius L. Clark; State Treasurer, Charles Endicott; Attorney General, Charles R. Train.... Congressman Sam Randall, of Pennsylvania, has been nominated by the Democrats of his district for re-election.

THE Democrats of Massachusetts met in State Convention at Worcester on the 5th inst. Charles Francis Adams was nominated for Governor by acclamation. The remainder of the ticket is constituted as follows: Lieutenant Governor, William R. Plunkett; Secretary of State, Edwin H. Lathrop; Treasurer, Weston Howland; Auditor, John E. Fitzgerald; Attorney General, Richard Olney. Ex-Gov. Gaston heads the electoral ticket.... The Nebraska Democrats have nominated Paren England for Governor.... Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, has been renominated for Congress by the Democrats of his district.... The Connecticut Democratic State Convention, which met at Hartford last week, nominated the following ticket: Governor, Richard D. Hubbard; Lieutenant Governor, Francis B. Loomis, both by acclamation; Secretary of State, Dwight L. Morris; Treasurer, Edwin A. Buck; Comptroller, Charles C. Hubbard; Electors at Large, Charles R. Ingersoll and Gen. William B. Franklin.

FOREIGN.

A BELGRADE dispatch says the Servian army is being rapidly reinforced and reorganized by Russians, who are crossing Roumania and Hungary in large numbers, and that since this influx the Servians have fought better and seem more likely to hold their ground against the Turks. .... A London dispatch says "the hop harvest is progressing everywhere. Estimates based upon trustworthy information give the probable crop as follows: In England, two-thirds of the quantity grown in 1875; Germany, one-quarter; and Belgium one-half.'.... The new 4½ per cent. United States Government funding loan is reported to be popular in London, causing a decline there in consols.

THE town of St. Hyacinthe, a suburb of Montreal, has been almost obliterated by fire. On the 3d inst. a conflagration broke out, and, fanned by a furious wind, spread with such rapidity that in three or four hours six hundred houses were destroyed. The flames ceased only when there was nothing more for them to devour. A great many people are rendered homeless, and there is much suffering in consequence. The loss is estimated at upward of $2,000,000.... A general engagement, probably the heaviest of the war, was fought between the Turks and Servians around Alexinatz on Monday, Sept. 1. The Servians, according to all reports, were defeated with severe loss. A London dispatch of the 4th says: "The Turks, after beating the right wing of the Servians, made a flank movement in the direction of Krusevatz, their object being to reach Deligrade. The entire military position is changed. Tchernayeff is marching with the bulk of his army toward Krusevatz. He has telegraphed to Belgrade for reinforcements, and the Servian Minister of War has ordered Gen. Antitch to march to Krusevatz with 12,000 men.".... There is great depression in the iron trade of England and Scotland, and an unusual number of failures are announced, throwing a great many people out of employment.

A THIRD of the business part of Seaforth, Canada, has been destroyed by fire.... An account of the fighting around Alexinatz on the 1st inst., as given by a London Times correspondent with the Turkish army, indicates that the most severe battle of the war was fought on that day, and that the Servian army under Tchernayeff was badly defeated and disorganized. It appears that the fighting was almost exclusively carried on by the artillery of the opposing forces, and that the Turks, being better supplied with formidable batteries, approached slowly but surely, silencing one after another of the batteries of the besieged, until, thinking further resistance useless, the Servian soldiery, panic-stricken, began a hasty and disorderly retreat toward Deligrad. According to this correspondent the Servian losses were very heavy.

RECENT reports of the inhuman conduct of the Turks in Bulgaria have aroused a strong feeling of resentment among the British people, which is constantly seeking expression through the press and other channels. Gladstone and Bright, in letters to public meetings on the subject, comment strongly upon the course pursued by the English Government, and the Bishop of Manchester declares that England must withdraw her protection from a nation the deeds of whose people have startled and shocked the conscience of the whole civilized world. The Times calls upon Lord Derby to "cease from vain repetitions of the language of tradition, and to come to some agreement with Russia whereby the two powers can press with irresistible authority on the Sultan and his Ministers." .... George Smith, the well known and indefatigable Assyrian explorer, is dead.

THE recent burning of the town of St. Hyacinthe, Canada, is believed to have been the result of a conspiracy, and two men have been arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the diabolical work.... The foreign dispatches tell of a growing apprehension throughout Europe that the refusal of Turkey to agree to an armistice will precipitate the event so long dreaded—the active participation of Russia on the side of Servia, and the outbreak of war between Russia and Turkey.

A BELGRADE dispatch of the 8th inst. says: "The Turks on Monday occupied the left bank of the Morava. Alexinatz is in their power. It is utterly deserted. The Servians at Deligrad are in no condition to take the field. The Turks committed great atrocities during and after the battle on Friday. Hideous stories reach me of rape and murder, of wounded Russians tied to trees and roasted, and girls outraged and flayed alive. The roads are filled with thousands of fugitives. The Government talks of victories, and keeps the public in the dark about the danger which is threatening them. There is now no force between the Turks and Belgrade.".... Fresh disaster has befallen the Egyptian army in Abyssinia. Fifteen hundred Egyptian troops, with their commander, Rahibe Pacha, have been massacred. The Abyssinians afterward proceeded to Massacroa, which they seized. The garrison and Government officers escaped on board some ships which happened to be in port, and arrived safely in Suez. The Egyptian Government is contemplating revenge, and is sending fresh troops to the scene of action.

Anthracite Coal.

The recent mammoth sale of coal in New York resulted in a great reduction in prices. This is good news for consumers and bad news for miners. The prices ranged from $2 to $3.90 per ton, according to quality. The coal operators in Pennsylvania say the prices brought will compel them to suspend operations unless toll and labor can be reduced to a much lower figure than at present, with the chances against them even of great reductions, as the miners will hardly submit to lower prices than are now prevailing. The situation, from their standpoint, seems to have a gloomy outlook for the fall and winter trade.

For three or four years the price of anthracite coal has been regulated and fixed beyond variation by the producers. They have had everything their own way. There is none found outside of Pennsylvania. Six companies own and operate the mines. They fixed the maximum production of each company at 10,000,000 tons a year. A year ago last January the combination which had been effected two years before was rendered complete and permanent, as was supposed; but very soon disaffection began. Bad faith was practiced, bad feeling engendered, and finally the ring has gone to pieces. Whether the break will be permanent or not is an open question. Where monopoly is possible, competition is rarely maintained for any considerable length of time.—Chicago Journal.

A Year's Business.

All the returns for the last fiscal year, says a Washington dispatch, having been received from the Custom Houses, the chief of the bureau has just published a statement showing in detail the quantities and values of articles imported into and exported from the United States during the past year as compared with that immediately preceding. The figures are as follows:

	1875.	1876.
MERCHANDISE.
Exports, domestic, gold value	$499,284,100	$525,582,247
Exports, foreign	14,158,611	14,802,424
Total	$513,442,711	$540,384,671
Imports	533,005,436	460,741,190
Excess of exports over imports		$79,643,481
Excess of imports over exports	19,562,725
SPECIE AND BULLION.
Exports	$ 92,132,142	$ 56,506,302

RAPIDLY DISAPPEARING.—The pine forests of Nevada are rapidly disappearing before the enormous demands made upon them by the mining industries. It is estimated that the mines on the Comstock lode will consume 260,000 cords of wood this year. It is used in the quartz mills and for other purposes.

A HORRIBLE TALE.

Wreck of a Japanese Junk—Story by Two of the Survivors.

[From the San Francisco Alta.]

The British bark Abbey Cowper has arrived in port with two of the survivors of a wrecked Japanese bark. The story of the survivors is a horrible tale of misery.

CAPT. NELSON'S STATEMENT.

Capt. Nelson, of the Abbey Cowper, furnishes the following: On July 3, at 4 p. m., latitude 37 deg. 10 min. north, longitude 167 deg. 35 min. east, light west-northwest winds and heavy swell, sighted a vessel bearing south-southeast, apparently dismasted and with signals flying. Bore down upon her and sent the chief officer with the second lifeboat, who returned with two men and their effects. Found it to be the Japanese junk Ooki Cuman, Tatsurua Sawgura, late master, bound from Hakodadi to Yokohama; had left the former port on the 9th of November, 1875, and had been dismasted, after which it had drifted helplessly about. The master and nine of the crew had died from four to six months ago of scurvy, and the two survivors had salted them down in the hold, the stench from which was horrible. They had thrown the cargo of salt fish overboard. The two survivors, Katsuma (mate) and Toma Kitchi (sailor), were in a most desperate condition from scurvy, the former being perfectly black and entirely helpless; the latter not being so bad, but both very much emaciated, having had nothing but dry rice, what fish they caught, no water but when it rained, and latterly no fire, having used everything available for burning. The junk was a complete wreck, her bottom being covered with sea weed and barnacles.

THE SURVIVORS' STATEMENT.

On the 9th of November we sailed from Hakodadi to go to Comichi, and left the latter on the 12th for Yokohama, with a strong south wind. Hove the junk to for four days. On the 16th the wind changed to the northward, blowing very hard. Wore ship to attempt to get back to Hakodadi. As night came on the wind increased, and in a very heavy squall carried away the mast. Cut the end of the yard and fished the mast; but upon making sail the mast again broke and the yard was washed overboard. A sea striking the rudder carried it away also. The wind still blowing in a succession of gales we were entirely helpless. On the 21st of November, the junk making much water, and likely to founder, we came to the determination of throwing the cargo (salt fish) overboard, which was accordingly done; and from that date to the 20th of December we drifted about, not knowing whither, when our fresh water and fire-wood were entirely gone, and then our misery commenced in reality. As a last resource we broke the sauce-pan up for fire-wood; then managed to keep strength and spirits up till the beginning of January, when, to increase our horrors, sickness made its appearance amongst us in the shape of scurvy. On the 11th of January the first death took place, namely, that of Chogers, a sailor. On the 14th the captain, Sawgura, worn out and dispirited, and whose body was swollen to double its size, expired. On the 23d another sailor, Otto Kitchi, died raving mad, and whose body was perfectly black. On the 28th Bung Kitchi, the cook; Kidorza, Skidgro and Taski, three sailors, died raving mad, and their bodies swollen from drinking salt water. On the 29th of March, Thero Kitchi and and A. Itchi, two sailors, died also, raving mad. On the 20th of May, Matoz Tara died, completing the list of deaths and leaving us two survivors anticipating a similar death. But, fortunately, on the 24th, heavy rain came on, which enabled us to save a small quantity of water as a stand-by, any previous showers having been so light as never to supply our immediate wants. This recruited our strength and enabled us to move about, and on the 4th of June we had the good fortune to catch fifteen fish, which supplied us with food. On the 2d of July we replenished our stock of water, and on the 3d we had the joyful sight of seeing a vessel (the first since our sailing), which bore down upon us and took us off our floating tomb, and which proved to be the English bark Abbey Cowper, and were most kindly treated by Capt. Nelson and the crew, by whose care and attention we were both restored to health.

Curious Scene in an English Court.

Excitement was created in Canterbury, England, by a freak of Capt. Liddell, of the Tenth Hussars. Attending court to testify against a deserter, he did not take off his cap. His attention was directed to this fact by the presiding Justice, whereupon the Captain pointed to his sword, and explained that in accordance with the regulations of the service it was his duty while wearing arms to remain covered. He removed the offending headgear while being sworn, but immediately replaced it in order to testify against the deserter. On the following morning a similar scene took place when Capt. Liddell again attended to watch the proceedings, and sat, as before, covered. He was asked by the presiding magistrate to remove his cap, and courteously reminded that apology was due to the Bench for his persistent refusal to do so on the previous day. Capt. Liddell refused either to apologize or uncover. The Chairman directed him to retire, and Capt. Liddell was informed that the course he had chosen to pursue would be communicated to the Horse Guards. But the next day after this the Captain thought better of it, and on entering the court removed his cap, and, addressing the Bench, said that in the course he had adopted he meant no disrespect.

The Town of Belgrade.

Belgrade is a pleasant, homely little capital, of indifferent morals, but unusual charity. No one is rich, and very, very few so poor as to beg. Living is so cheap that sixpence a day will support a man comfortably. There is no aristocracy, and the Prince dwells very close to his subjects. They speak of him familiarly, as of a friend, elected by themselves to honor. He has a palace, an unpretending building of considerable size, but no court, for there are no courtiers nor officials of rank.

Perhaps the money spent in building and decorating the theater might have been laid out to more advantage in paving the town anew or in lighting it. For its streets, wide enough, are about as comfortable to walk over as a road newly macadamized; and the lamps, very few and far between, are filled with petroleum. There is not a railway in the country, as every one knows. But the Servians are anxious to learn, and they do their best.—Belgrade Letter.

SHOCKING TRAGEDY.

Story of an Extraordinary Affair in Arkansas.

[Kensett (Ark.) Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

The subjoined are the sickening details of one of the strangest and most extraordinary tragedies ever enacted in the history of the world. Before referring to the murder, a few curious facts by way of introduction are necessary. About two and a half miles south of Searcy, the seat of White county, is a wild-looking place known as Gum Spring, the residents of which are known as Cobbites, because an old man named Cobb, who claims to be Christ, rules with an iron hand. His crazy followers claim to identify him by certain marks in the palms of his hands, and he has during the past year made a great many believe in his doctrine, the main point of which is that every one in his community should live in adultery in order that the souls of the women might be purified. The principal rendezvous of the Cobbites is an old log hut, in Gum Spring, which is on the main road leading from Searcy to Little Rock.

During the last few days the attention of passers-by has been attracted by strange noises, and this fact being conveyed to the citizens of Searcy, they determined to investigate the matter. On Tuesday last Mr. C. D. Humphreys, of Searcy, and a Mr. Blake, from El Paso in this county, determined to visit Gum Spring and see what was going on. The strange noises were heard as they reached the locality. On driving past the hut they were accosted by Mr. Dover, who claimed to be one of God's people. Mr. Humphreys proposed that they should turn back and see what was wanted. They did so, and were invited into the hut, Dover asserting that God was in there. Humphreys remarked, as he got out of the buggy, that if God was in there he wanted to see Him. As soon as they stepped from the vehicle Humphreys was seized by four men, and Blake by four women. The latter succeeded in breaking away, but the former was unable to do so. Blake ran about 100 yards, and, on looking back, saw the men cutting his companion to pieces with long knives. He at once started for town, but the buggy was upset and demolished. He then mounted his horse and rode at a breakneck speed, and reported the terrible occurrence to the citizens. A force was at once raised, and proceeded to the rescue. On arriving at the spring a fearful sight met their gaze. The Cobbites had decapitated Humphreys and placed his head on a paling. A boy who was riding by was compelled to get off his horse and bow to the head three times. He was also made to pray, and then told to hurry away or the bowels of the earth would open and swallow him. When the posse arrived, Mr. T. C. Black, the leader, shouted to Dover to come forward. The latter wanted to talk the matter over. He picked up Humphreys' head at intervals, caught it by the hair with both hands, shook it back and forth, and then replaced it on the fence, ordering the crowd, with a menacing gesture, to go away. The Cobbites then commenced to jabber, in their own peculiar way, at a furious rate. Mr. Black did everything in his power to calm them, without avail. Dover and his crowd then started toward Black with no good intent, and his posse fired, killing two men and wounding one. The remainder, four men, four women and two babies were arrested and taken to jail. While in custody they talked about their Jesus, meaning Cobb, asserting that he could turn the gates of hell at will, and would come and rescue them.

There is no doubt that they are all crazy from the combined effects of religion and starvation. Men, women, and children are as gaunt as a pack of famished wolves.

Since the above was written they have all quieted somewhat, and apparently begin to realize their situation. They decline to talk at all, and will not notice an outsider. This extraordinary affair has created unprecedented excitement in the vicinity.

How Electricity Travels.

How long does it take to transmit a message through the Atlantic cable? The New York Journal of Commerce has been investigating this question, and, simple as it looks at first sight, there are many singular and interesting points in the answer. When the electricity is applied to the cable at one end, two-tenths of a second pass before any effect is felt at the other end, and three seconds are consumed before the full force of the current is in action. The first signal is felt in four-tenths of a second, but the following ones go through more rapidly. As many as seventeen words have been sent over the Atlantic cable in one minute; fifteen can usually be sent under pressure, and twelve words have been sent all the way from New York to London in two minutes. A fact not yet explained by the scientists is, that the electricity does not move as rapidly from New York to London as in the opposite direction.

Took a Change of Climate.

McCall, the murderer of Wild Bill, has left the Black Hills. It is stated that, a few days after the mock trial, California Joe—who was not in the Hills at the time of the murder, and who was a warm friend of the murdered man—called McCall from his cabin and inquired significantly whether the air of that region was not rather light for him. McCall responded that he found it so, and thereupon took up his line of march for the States. It is believed that if California Joe had been present at the "trial" McCall would have been hanged.

The Irish Exodus.

The whole number of Irish immigrants from May, 1851, when the enumeration began, to June 30, 1876, was 2,397,995. For the six months of 1875, from Jan. 1 to June 30, the emigration from Ireland amounted to 31,095. For the same period for 1876 it was only 20,604.—New York Tribune.

DISARMING THE SAVAGES.

The War Department and the Indian Question—Anticipated Trouble with the Agency Indians.

[Washington Cor. New York Herald.]

The War Department has resolved upon mustering all the available troops which can be spared from the field at the different agencies and reservations preparatory to a determined course of action looking to the subjection of the Indians to full compliance with the laws of Congress and the regulations of the Indian Department, when the experiment of disarming them, besides taking away their ponies, and subsequent removal of the tribes to the Missouri or Indian Territory, will then be attempted, which can only be done with the presence and assistance of a large force of troops at hand. There is great apprehension felt here that it will be accompanied by positive resistance and an open outbreak. Those who know the Indians and have studied the situation say that there is great likelihood that there will be hard fighting then on the reservations and at the agencies, because the Indians will not submit without great resistance, if at all, to the surrender of their arms and ponies. When the probability of the transfer of the scene of hostilities thus from the Big Horn, Powder River and Rosebud sections to the agencies was discussed with an officer on the staff of a General of the army to-day, he said: "Well, I don't know but it would be a good thing for the United States troops if the field of operations were so changed. It would settle the thing which must sooner or later be decided, that the agency Indians must submit to be deprived of their horses and arms as a guarantee of their future peaceful and harmless condition. The means of their going on the war-path and committing murders and other outrages must be taken from them." This will be done if it takes the whole army, and is now the branch of the Indian case which the War Department has under consideration for solution. People who are interested in the frontier continue to have fears that when the agency Indians are started up, as they will be, they will strike out in a stampede for the open country and fall upon the settlements for revenge and marauding purposes. The opinion is entertained here with much apparent satisfaction, accompanied by a corresponding wish, that the Sioux under Sitting Bull may finally go into the British American possessions to relieve the frontier as well as the army for the time being, and show whether their boasted good will for the British government affects their better nature or will influence them to be less disturbing as an element of population.

How the Snow Falls in August at Rome.

[New York Times Rome Correspondence.]

I went day before yesterday to Santa Maria Maggiore to help keep the festa of the Madonna della Neve, which falls on the 5th of August. It is the most poetical of all the fetes of the year, for what romantic young lady of a devout turn could desire to see a prettier sight than that of a fall of snow in August, and this in the form of the pure white leaves of the jessamine flower, from openings in the ceiling of a beautiful church? The illusion is perfect. Down come the flakes, zigzagging slowly in the long descent, some finding a lodgment upon the bonnets of worshipers of the gentler sex, some smiting the heads of penitents of advanced years, and covering at last the pavement with a thin, soft, fragrant carpet. The legend in which this festa had its origin must be repeated, and it is this: Many hundred years ago, in fact, in the fourth century, a patrician convert to the Christian religion had a vision, in which he was told to build a church, and both the site and the dimensions would be indicated by a fall of snow. The most elevated point of the Esquiline Hill was that pitched upon, and there the church was built, and received the title of Holy Maria of the Snows. Of course, the present is wholly different from the original structure, for it has been several times rebuilt or altered, according to the changing conditions of Rome. It is now known as Maggiore, as it is the major of all the churches dedicated to the Virgin Mary. Here the body of the present Pope is to be laid. Only a few years after the accession of Pius IX. to office, he caused the fore to be made in the floor before the high altar, in the style of that of St. Peter's, with flights of steps leading down; the whole lined with rich marbles, the spoils of ancient Rome.

REFORM.

An Old-Time Republican's Arraignment of Grantism.

The National Canvass from a Liberal Standpoint.

Great Speech of Hon. George W. Julian, at Indianapolis, Aug. 26.

It can not be denied that soon after the last inauguration civil service became a more glaring political mockery than ever before. The enforcement of the rules framed by the Commission was only an occasional event, while their suspension was the order of the day. Gov. Holden, of North Carolina, who was impeached, convicted and rendered incapable of holding any office, was made Postmaster at the capital of that State. Sharpe, a brother-in-law of the President, was appointed Surveyor of the port of New York, just as if no civil service rules had ever been heard of. Cramer, another brother-in-law, who had disgraced our diplomatic service during the previous administration, was appointed by the President, and confirmed by the Senate, as Naval Officer at New Orleans. Brother-in-law Casey, who had taken on board a government vessel the Grant members of the Louisiana Legislature to protect them from arrest and prevent a majority of the body from proceeding to business, because the political interests of the President demanded this lawlessness, and who stood before the country thatched with political corruption, was re-appointed and confirmed as Collector of the port of New Orleans. Even George William Curtis, so long hoping against hope, and so faithfully clinging to the President through thick and thin, was at last obliged to resign his position in disgust, and to declare that the appointments of the President showed "an utter abandonment of both the letter and spirit of civil service regulations." About the same time Peter Cooper wrote a most earnest and friendly letter to the President, begging him to rescue the city and State of New York from the Custom House rogues who had so long disgraced the civil service and defied the people. But the President seemed entirely unconscious that anything was going amiss. At the bidding of Senator Morton he removed Capt. Brouse from the Pension Agency of Indiana, a wounded soldier and a faithful officer, and appointed in his place Gen. Terrell, whose moral unfitness for the place is too well known to be characterized. When Congress abolished the Government of the District of Columbia in order to get rid of Boss Shepherd, who stood revealed as a disgraced public swindler, the President immediately appointed him one of the Commissioners of the new District Government. When the safe-burglary criminals were on trial the machinery of the District Attorney's office was employed to cheat public justice, and the President, pending the trial, made a most remarkable demonstration on the jury by inviting one of the defendants to join a company of distinguished guests in a feast at the White House. Grantism, pure and simple, finds no better illustration than in the case of Orville Grant. He asked his brother to let him know when anything under his control should transpire by which he (Orville) could make some money. The President thought it right to gratify him, and proceeded to designate certain post-traderships which he might control, not because the incumbents of the places were incompetent or unworthy, but that Orville should have the profits, either by levying blackmail upon them as the price of their retention, or by their removal, if they should refuse to be bled. The Department of Justice was disgraced by continuing in office Attorney General Williams a year and a half after it had been proved that he had appropriated the public revenue to the private use of himself and his family; and this same Attorney General was afterward appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The real working of "the best civil service on the planet," and "the purest and best administration this country has ever had," is made beautifully manifest in the conviction of the Secretary of War on his own confession, of making merchandise of the post-traderships under his control, while the President, who had the knowledge of his criminal acts four years ago, accepts his resignation with "regret" and with such surprising promptness as to prevent his legal conviction of high crimes and misdemeanors by the Senate. The President stood by Secretary Delano in his disgraceful performances involving the management of Indian affairs till forced by public opinion to give him up, and then "vindicated" him by his customary farewell letter of approval. By one of those accidents that have now and then checkered his administration, he appointed Bristow as his Secretary of the Treasury; and after the work of hunting down and bringing to justice the whisky thieves had been resolved upon by the new Secretary, and while the brave words, "Let no guilty man escape," were winning the plaudits of the people and finding their way into the party platforms as the watchwords of reform, the President himself was drawing from the Secretary and his subordinates whatever information his high and trusted position could command relative to the prosecution of his friend Babcock, and placing it in the hands of his attorneys, for no other apparent purpose than that of securing his acquittal and defeating the execution of the laws he was sworn to support. According to the sworn testimony of men of high character, he had no sooner discovered that Bristow was the enemy of thieves than he resolved upon his removal; and although his purpose was temporarily delayed, it was not defeated. He seems to have demanded the head of Bluford Wilson for kindred reasons. The decapitation of Yaryan was another sacrifice to men who deserved to be clad in prison stripes. Pratt had to walk the plank because he spoke a friendly word in behalf of Yaryan, and was believed to be an honest man. Dyer was obliged to bite the dust for no reason known to the public, which will naturally infer that his sole offense was his refusal to prostitute his office to the use of the guilty. Henderson was stricken down for no other discoverable reason than that the courageous performance of his official duty threatened to involve the White House, or such idolized friends of the President as Gen. Babcock. If Jewell was not dismissed from the Cabinet because he was the friend of Bristow and his co-worker in reform, then the cause of his dismissal is inscrutable. The appointment of Tyner as Jewell's successor naturally enters into the warp and woof of the same civil service fabric, he being the facile instrument of Senator Morton, the leader of the Indiana delegation to the Cincinnati Convention in opposition to Bristow, and claiming also the glory of having secured the nomination of Gen. Hayes. When the nation was groaning under an enormous burden of debt and taxation, and the representatives of the people voting themselves salaries they had never earned, and doubled the pay of the President, he personally lobbied for the measure in both Houses of Congress, and promptly legalized the theft by his signature. He appointed a famous poker-player a Minister to England, and kept him there until public opinion on both sides of the Atlantic compelled his withdrawal, on account of his disgraceful connection with the Emma Mine fraud. He withdrew the custody of Government funds from the house of Barings, who, I believe, had held it for generations, and intrusted them to Clews and Hatch, who have since become bankrupt, as a reward for their partisan services, and in spite of warnings that this house was untrustworthy. He defended the moiety system, by which the revenues of the country were farmed out to political scullions for the purpose of securing the fortunes of some of his favorites, while Gen. Babcock, who has been justly branded by the press as a sneak-thief in the methods employed by him in securing his acquittal of a high crime, is still holding his position of Chief of Engineers and Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds. But surely I need not extend this itemized arraignment of Grantism any farther. Let me say, however, that by the term Grantism, I mean Republicanism under Grant, and in full co-operation with him. The party unanimously indorsed him four years ago, when all intelligent men knew him and his evil tendencies almost as well as they know them to-day. In all the State Conventions of the party, North and South, East and West, through all these seven years and a half of misrule and profligacy, his administration has been unceasingly indorsed and lauded. Our State Convention of last February declared that "the administration of President Grant commands our fullest confidence and approbation, and that we especially commend him for the example he will leave to his successors, of removing from office those of his own appointment, whenever he has found them to be unfaithful; and of causing those who are proved to be dishonest to be so prosecuted that no guilty man should escape." As if to emphasize this, and make its moral significance perfectly clear, the convention fulsomely eulogized Senator Morton, and I believe unanimously recommended his nomination for the Presidency. The Cincinnati Convention brought down the record still later, and declared that "President Grant deserves the continued and hearty gratitude of the American people for his patriotism and his immense services in war and in peace. And Gen. Hayes a month later says, "the resolutions are in accord with my views." The manifest truth is that the President and his party are inseparable. Their union is unmistakably Siamese. The party clings to him as a dying man clings to life. The Cincinnati indorsement of Grant was after the exposure of the whisky rings and the acceptance of Belknap's resignation; after the trial of Babcock, and the shameful interference in his behalf; after the disgraceful conduct of Robeson and Delano, and the disagreement of the President and Bristow. The party found nothing to condemn in the latter misdeeds of the administration, and remembered nothing amiss in its earlier record. It had no fault to find with the ostracism of Sumner and the appointment of Cramer and Casey and Packard; with upsetting the Government of Louisiana through a drunken and corrupt Federal Judge, and dispersing the Legislature of the State with the bayonet; with backing up Kellogg and Spencer, and putting Billings in the place of Durell; with encouraging the operations of Jayne and Sanford, and allowing Orville Grant to make a living by the traffic in appointments, and with greedily taking the increase of 100 per cent. on the President's salary, and his lobbying for the bill allowing him to do so, while making his administration an asylum for his numerous and unsavory kindred. All this was meekly shouldered by the party at Cincinnati, which crouched like a spaniel at the feet of the master it had obsequiously served for seven years. The melancholy truth is, as so admirably stated by the New York Tribune, that "President Grant has dropped by easy stages to these depths of shame. He has parenthesized in history eight years, which will be marked hereafter as the era of personal government and the period of greed: eight years of such official corruption and dishonesty, such selfishness and shamelessness, such low aims and base purposes, such grasping avarice and eager over-reaching, such speculation in official information, such bribery and such barter and sale of office, and such degradation of all things which the nation has held to be high and holy and worthy an honest pride, that to-day the country hangs its head and holds its nose and waits for this administration to pass." It lies wallowing in the ditch, the spectacle of nations, while Senator Morton, from his serene mount of vision, pronounces it the "best and purest the country has ever had."

GOV. HAYES—WILL HIS NOMINATION WORK MIRACLES?

But now, gentlemen, having shown by irresistible proofs that the Liberal movement of 1872 was justified by facts and called for by the times, and that the Republican party, instead of retracing its steps and recovering its lost estate, has steadily gravitated farther and farther from its primal integrity, it may still be argued that the nomination of Gov. Hayes will cut the ugly thread of history from behind it, and launch it on a new and blessed departure. Believing, as I do, that the age of miracles has passed, I find myself compelled to reject this view. I am acquainted with Gov. Hayes, and believe him to be honest and patriotic, and most gladly and cordially would I support him if any Republican could explain to me how his accidental selection at Cincinnati can make saints out of the distinguished sinners who are the recognized leaders and managers of the party now, as they were four years ago. If you place the hat of an honest man on the head of a rogue, will the roguery instantly depart? Every one has heard the story of Fortunatus. He had a wishing hat, which relieved him of the expense and labor of traveling. By placing this hat on his head and wishing himself at a given place, he straightway found himself there. Who would not join in building a monument to the sorely needed genius who could manufacture a Presidential hat that would enable Gov. Hayes, by a simple wish, to change the nature of Morton, and Cameron, and Butler, and Clayton, and Boss Shepherd, and Babcock, and brother-in-law Casey, and the rest of the unbaptized crew who are taxing their wits and pouring out their money to secure his election, and will darken the air about the Executive Mansion on the 4th of March, if he should succeed? Such a hat, I am free to confess, would make Gov. Hayes a pretty respectable President, and he would be able to take up the question of reform and dispose of it with tolerable success. Unfortunately, no such headgear can be found, while the great leader of the party in Indiana, and the right hand man of the administration, tells us the party has no need of it, and that the men who ask for reform are worse criminals than the thieves they wish to expose and punish. Here is the ugly knot which Liberal Republicans and a good many other Republicans desire to see untied. Can you obtain the command of a piratical craft by simply changing the figure-head of a vessel? You must expel the pirates and put an honest crew in possession. This is the truth in a nutshell, and George William Curtis himself admits it. His cry is "reform within the party," which he is shouting along the lines as he did four years ago, as if utterly unmindful of the fact that under this battle cry our civil service has become as foul and feculent a system of official huckstering and political prostitution as our thoroughly debauched party politics could make it. But he is not blind, like Senator Morton, to the need of reform, and he tells us in Harper's Weekly that the only hope of the party lies in the power to persuade the people that it is not hopelessly corrupt. He frankly confesses that reform is only possible by throwing overboard the Grant leaders and trained corruptionists who have brought the party into disgrace. In all soberness, I ask, is this possible? Have the Republican masses, after their long and patient service under the party yoke, the courage and virtue to take their old leaders by the throat? Will the party chiefs I have named meekly and penitentially take the back seats, while honest and stainless men come to the front? The man who believes all this must have allowed his common sense to pack its baggage. The Grant leaders would reign in any conceivable political hell rather than serve in the heaven of honest government. In the manipulation of caucuses and conventions they have long been masters. They are journeymen and experts in the work of politics as a trade. They have reduced plunder and pelf to a science, and the greed of clutch to a fine art. Nothing can be more certain than that such a reform as would completely dislodge these leaders and put such men as Bristow and Adams in their places, would be, in fact, the creation of a new party. It would have to be preceded by a general disintegration, and it would be quite as absurd to consider it the same party which has ruled the country since Grant came into power as it would have been to treat the Republican party of 1876 as identical with the old Whig party, which had gone down to its dishonored grave. The idea, therefore, of making the Republican party the instrument of self-purification is not only morally, but logically, absurd. A party once thoroughly corrupt has lost the power to reform itself. Devils are not inclined to cast out devils, and could scarcely be trusted with the business if they should offer their services; and it is because I entertain these views and can not escape their force, that I earnestly desire to see the machinery of the Republican party shattered into fragments, and the way thus opened for a re-formation of parties on the living questions of the hour, unembarrassed by the memories of the past.

THE POWER OF ONE MAN—THE CHARACTER AND TRAITS OF GOV. HAYES.

But let me not be misunderstood. I desire to meet the question I am considering in its complete length and breadth. I do not deny the exceptional power of one strong man, thoroughly in earnest, and thoroughly armed with the courage of his opinions. A single, great-hearted, strong-willed character may control a mob or quell a mutiny. With a fertile brain, perfect courage, absolute devotion to duty, and a genius for the work of reform, he may scatter renovating ideas, redeem a State from misrule, and radically change the face of society. The country has seen what one man can do in the stamping out of the Tammany and canal rings of New York. If a man no larger than Gen. Grant can, in a few years, drag down into disgrace a grand and powerful party, a really great man, with rare force of character, passionately wedded to his work, and desperately resolved to submit to no defeat, might so inspire the people with his own spirit of courage and faith that a revolution in the administration of public affairs would be the result. It is folly and nonsense to pretend that Gov. Hayes is such a man. Neither in Congress, nor as Governor of Ohio, nor in his military service, has he given the least evidence of such remarkable traits of character. In 1872, when the ferment of reform was threatening to rend the old parties, and so many Republicans were turning away from Grantism in disgust, Gov. Hayes kept the quiet and even tenor of his ways, uttering no rebuke and giving no sign of discontent with the reigning order of things. During the past four years of maladministration and party corruption no word has escaped his lips to show that he sympathized with the men who have demanded reform. If at any time he has discovered the demoralizing and downward tendencies of the administration, and felt the necessity of bravely withstanding them, he has never told the public of the fact. He has given the country no guarantee, save his letter of acceptance, either by word or deed, that he will manfully wrestle with the political rings that are laboring for his election. The country is without any proof at all that he possesses "the moral courage and sturdy resolution to grapple with abuses which have acquired the strength of established custom, and to this end firmly resist the pressure of his party friends." He has not in any way earned the "fear and hatred of thieves." The Boston Advertiser, one of the leading organs of Republicanism in New England, and now his warm supporter, said of him last year that "he is a man of fair ability, correct in his personal habits, honest, sound in the Republican faith, but without much force or independence." This is the exact truth. Parke Godwin is perfectly right in saying that he was nominated because it was believed "his neutrality of tint would harmonize the most pronounced colors." He was nominated by a convention containing a majority who favored Blaine, notwithstanding his remarkable record as a reformer, and who was only defeated by a blunder of his friends. His total strength in the convention, in the absence of combinations, was only sixty-eight votes. Bristow, the only candidate who had an unmistakable record as a reformer, received only 126 votes out of the 756, while Gov. Hayes was nominated at the instance of a political trader from Pennsylvania, who seldom blunders in his party movements. Gentlemen, I do not utter a conjecture, but express a perfectly evident fact, when I say that, if elected, he will be the instrument of his active and influential friends, and the servant of that mischievous party machinery against which he has never yet made any public protest. That I am right in this I stand ready to prove by the autocrat of the Republican party in Indiana, whose testimony will be accepted as conclusive. "The administration of any President," says our distinguished Senator, "will be in the main what the party which elected him makes it. If he breaks away from his party the chances are that he will be broken down. In a Government of parties like ours, the President must have his friends. The men to whom he owes his election, who have defended him from assaults, to whom he must look for support in the future, will ordinarily control his actions, and he will do nothing offensive to them." This is the naked truth, from the highest Republican authority; and if it does not perfectly apply to Gov. Hayes it can have no application whatever to any man who ever has been or ever will be President. Let me ask you—and I now address myself more especially to my old Republican friends—let me ask you if in your hearts you really believe Gov. Hayes, if elected, will enforce the principles announced in his letter of acceptance? Do you believe he will turn Secretary Chandler adrift, the commander-in-chief of the Republican army in this canvass, because he is now spending his money, levying contributions upon his subordinates, and prostituting the whole power of his office in the interest of a Republican victory? Do you believe he will dismiss Secretary Cameron, who led the way in his nomination at Cincinnati, and whose active partisan service of Gov. Hayes is a gross violation of his declared principles as to the use of the civil service. Will he do so decent and comely a thing as to dismiss James N. Tyner from the Postoffice Department, placed there at the bidding of Senator Morton, for the purpose of securing his official help in this canvass, which he is giving freely? Will he put back in the treasury Bristow, and Bluford Wilson, and Pratt and Yaryan, and thus invite the hostility of Gen. Grant and his powerful body of friends, and incur the wrath of the whole army of whisky thieves? Will he sweep out the legions of placemen who are now infesting the public service, and fill their places with men selected solely on the ground of their fitness, and with no reference whatever to politics? Will he make it perfectly understood that Senators and Representatives shall no longer be consulted in the dispensation of Federal patronage? To every one of these questions the Senator gives the answer, No, and you all understand as well as I do that the orthodox Republicans of Indiana are not the men to differ with him in opinion.

THE SUPPORT OF TILDEN—THE MAN.

And here, at length, I reach my final question involving the propriety and honesty of a vote for Tilden and Hendricks. It must be quite apparent that what I have said has considerably smoothed the way to the answer; for if the Republican party is so hopelessly demoralized that its reform is impossible, its destruction becomes a public duty; and whoever so regards it has a right to lay hold of the only weapon which can now be employed for the purpose with any hope of success. But I do not rest the case upon this point. I propose to deal with the question as an independent topic, and in approaching it I already imagine some of my Republican friends mentally asking the question which has already been propounded to me several times in words: How can an old anti-slavery man, who fought the Democrats so zealously in the early days of Abolitionism, and poured out upon them your denunciations so remorselessly during the war—how can you reconcile it to yourself to support such men as Tilden and Hendricks? Well, gentlemen, I have understood in different ways, and have for years believed it to be a fact, that the war is over. According to my almanac, the last gun was fired about eleven and a half years ago, so that we are now well along in the twelfth year of peace. Senator Morton, in common with a number of his brethren, does not know this. I presume he will go down to his grave in the full belief that the "boys in blue and the boys in gray" are still fighting. At all events he will hug the fond thought to his bosom that the people of the North and the people of the South ought to feel toward each other, now and hereafter, exactly as they did during the bloody conflict. With such men I have no controversy. They are given over to their madness, and it defies all remedies. But I ask all men who love their country and are able to perform the operation of thinking, why the subject of our late war should be dragged into this canvass? It was a bloody and devastating conflict between citizens and States that had lived together in peace under a common flag, and whose union hereafter is their manifest destiny. Why should any patriotic man seek to keep alive its memories? Let them fade away into the receding past, and the old bond of union be renewed and cemented by the rivalries of a common brotherhood for the common weal. Our civil war has taken its place in the past. It has gone before the judgment seat of history, like the Mexican war, the war of 1812, or the war of independence; and there is no more propriety in discussing it in the pending campaign than there would be in [illegible] the antediluvians. There is even less propriety, for we could talk about those ancient times without the least danger of rekindling old animosities. When our civil war was upon us, and the questions which have since been so grandly settled on the side of the Union, hung in perilous dispute, I gave utterance to some strong words which I have no desire to recall. If you can set back the clock of our politics and re-enact the circumstances in which I was placed, I will reiterate them. I tried to breathe into the hearts of the people the spirit of war, and so to influence public opinion as to promote the triumph of our arms and the just settlement of the great issue then on trial. But why should I repeat my old war speeches in this canvass? Why should Senator Morton repeat his? How long are the political waters to be troubled by graceless demagogues who so love the honors and emoluments of office that they are willing to clutch at them at the expense of the nation's peace?

THE SOUTH IN THIS CANVASS.

But will the South be safe under the administration of Tilden? Can the freedmen safely be committed to the guardianship of the old slave masters. I answer this question in the language of the ablest political journal in the United States, and a supporter of Gov. Hayes: "Our own solemn belief is that the less said on this point on the Republican side the better; that the outrage argument serves and can serve the purpose of nobody in this canvass but the Republican knaves, and that the probabilities are that the South will be more peaceful under Tilden than under Hayes, and this for reasons which lie on the surface. Tilden is not a weak or foolish man. He will have no motive for tolerating disorders at the South, nor will his leading followers. On the contrary, they will perceive clearly the importance of tranquility in that region, to the stability of their hold on power in the North, while these disorders will actually constitute nearly the whole political capital of the Republicans—Conklings, Mortons, Chandlers and Cornells, with whose support Hayes is, it seems, to be saddled." The truth of this is patent to every man's unbiased common sense. The great need of the South to-day is deliverance from the horde of thieves and demagogues who have been fastened like leeches upon the welfare of the people, and backed in their misdeeds by the whole power of the administration. The Hamburg massacre and kindred displays of rapine and lawlessness admit of no defense, whatever the provocations may have been; but it is needless to deny that there have been provocations, and that there are two sides to the outrage controversy. Take the case of Alabama. The whole Federal patronage of the State and the use of the United States army were turned over to George E. Spencer, a thoroughly corrupt and unprincipled political adventurer, to enable him to retain his seat in the United States Senate. Thus equipped for his work, he and his friends bought legislators and Federal appointments; sent Marshals and revenue officers, accompanied by regular troops, to run off voters from the counties where the opposition to him was strongest; prostituted the courts by arresting Democratic members of the Legislature in order to prevent a quorum; used the machinery of the Custom House and revenue offices in breaking up the General Assembly and getting up two rival bodies, while the money to pay for these extraordinary performances was obtained by embezzlement from the postoffice at Mobile. In the light of these facts it is not surprising that the State is now overwhelmingly Democratic, while the gratifying fact greets us that order has gradually asserted itself throughout the State as the power of the plunderers has declined. Look at the State of Mississippi. In Vicksburg the whites paid 99 per cent. of the taxes, and the negroes assessed and handled the money. As a consequence the debt of the city, which in 1869 was $13,000, rose in five years to $1,400,000, while the population was only 11,000, and more than half the inhabitants were colored. A ring, composed of carpet-bag adventurers and ignorant black men of the most corrupt character, controlled the executive offices and courts, and grew rich by forgery and fraud. These rings were sustained by the whole power of the Republican administration at Washington. The State of South Carolina supplies us with facts equally startling. I cannot go into the details, but they are known to the country. It is only necessary to say that after the State had been plundered and devastated by the black and white scoundrels who so long controlled her fortunes, and Gov. Chamberlain had succeeded in inaugurating the work of reform, the representatives of the Federal administration demonstrated their friendship for organized rascality and ruffianism by accusing Gov. Chamberlain of leaning toward Democracy, and condemning him for refusing commissions to such political reprobates as Whipple and Moses. Can any man feel surprised that outrages should spring out of such a soil? Can men expect to sow the wind and not reap the whirlwind? No Christian or even civilized man will defend the deeds of lawlessness that disgrace so many States of the South, nor can he defend the political and moral outrages that have been their chief provocation. What is the remedy? Shall we madly seek it in a continuation of Grantism, and the rule of such men as Casey, Packard, Durell, Kellogg, Ames, Whipple and Moses? Can the election of another Republican President bring order and peace and honest government to the sorely tried people of the South, black or white? We have had a Republican President and a Republican Congress for nearly eight years, and yet the chiefs of the party, who represent the South as in a perfectly deplorable condition, tell us that the continuance of the same party in power is absolutely necessary for the welfare of the people, and especially the colored race. President Grant himself tells us that "Mississippi is governed to-day by officials chosen through fraud and violence, such as would scarcely be accredited to savages, much less to civilized and Christian people;" and Senator Morton's Outrage Committee, with Senator Boutwell at its head, declares in its late Congressional report that the State, which last year was in a condition of peace, is now so given over to incurable anarchy, after a ten years' trial of Republican reconstruction, that we may be obliged to remand it to Territorial government! Gentlemen, could there possibly be a stronger argument in favor of a change of administration? Could any fact stand out more palpably on the background of the past than the absolute need of a new and wiser policy, and new and wiser men to administer it? The result of Republican rule, in fact, has been to array the two races of the South in deadly hostility, instead of making them friends and brethren. In the States containing the largest negro element, and under Republican rule, violence and disorder have largely prevailed since the close of the war; while in the conservative and Democratic States, order and peace has been the normal condition of the people. What we now want is a new dispensation, which shall blot out the color line in politics, soften and subdue the antagonisms so long fostered by white demagogues, divide the colored vote between the parties of the South as the white vote is already divided, and thus make the people of the States lately in revolt in deed and in heart one people. All this, of course, must be the work of time; but the agencies can be wisely set to work which will accomplish it, and thus perfectly solve the problem of a restored Union by removing all the causes of strife.

TILDEN AS A REFORMER.

But the question is asked, "Is Gov. Tilden a genuine reformer? Would he prove himself morally trustworthy in the high office to which he aspires?" The Republican leaders answer the question with a very indignant negative. They make the gravest of charges, both against his loyalty and his integrity, and they attempt to sustain them by very remarkable proofs. For example, they introduce the testimony of the New York Times and other journals, which flatly give the lie to their current calumnies by their statements four or five years ago, when Gov. Tilden was making his magnificent fight against Tammany. Do the Republican leaders believe they can convict him of the frightful crimes with which they charge him on the evidence of impeached witnesses? They also attempt to make out their case on the testimony of Democratic newspapers which abused Gov. Tilden before his nomination, when he was likely to be in the way of their favorite candidate, while these same newspapers are now zealously supporting him, and thus practically confessing that they did not speak the truth in the fierce diatribes they had uttered previous to the St. Louis Convention. Gen. Harrison, the other day, in his Danville speech, showed his appreciation of [illegible] Republican authorities that Gov. Tilden is a secessionist. Gen. Harrison makes this charge as he made it four years ago against Horace Greeley; and it is as false now as it was then. It is not only untrue, but I am sorry to believe that Gen. Harrison knows it to be so. There is a difference of opinion among American statesmen now as there was at the beginning of the Government, on the question of State rights and Federal supremacy. Gov. Tilden, I believe, belongs to the Democratic or Jeffersonian school of statesmen, and of course rejects the constitutional theories of Hamilton and the Federalists; but that he is a secessionist in the sense of disloyalty to the national flag, or that he recognizes the right of a State to go out of the Union at its own sweet will, with no power in the nation to hold it in its place, is a pure invention. This is not a matter of opinion but of fact; for when the civil war came, Gov. Tilden was actively on the side of the Union, doing an honorable part by his influence and money in sending men into the field, and exerting himself in holding in check the disloyal element in his own party, when it threatened an organized opposition to the prosecution of the war. He was also the friend and adviser of Lincoln. This is my commentary upon the beautiful mosaic of mingled metaphysics and pettifogging which Gen. Harrison so artfully weaves together in the hope of showing the disloyalty of the Democratic candidate in this campaign. Another charge is that Gov. Tilden was the leading counsel for the Credit Mobilier, and gave his opinion in favor of the legality of the scheme. Gov. Tilden is an eminent lawyer, and has had great experience in the management of railroad cases. It was not strange that the Union Pacific Railroad Company should take his counsel as to its legal right to create a fiscal agency composed of a portion of the members of the company, for the purpose of taking charge of the construction of the road. As a naked legal question I think it is agreed among lawyers that the company had the right. I have not examined the evidence in the case recently, but if Gov. Tilden gave that opinion as a lawyer, I do not see that it convicts him of any high crime. If he advised the company that it had the right, through the machinery called the Credit Mobilier, to rob the treasury of millions, let the charge be squarely made, and let the proof be produced. The curious fact is that Republican politicians should allude to this question at all. With a single exception the representative men and eminent Christian statesmen who auctioned off their consciences to this great corporation were members of the Republican party. They gave no opinion as to the legality of the scheme, but they prostituted their political and official influence to the base greed of gain by personally joining in a gigantic fraud upon the national treasury. Of this fraud Gov. Tilden is not guilty; and it seems to me that if the Republican leaders in this canvass had taken counsel of their prudence they would have studiously avoided any allusion to a transaction with which their party relations are so exceedingly delicate and tender.

How a Bird Flies.

The most prominent fact about a bird is a faculty in which it differs from every other creature except the bat and insects—its power of flying. For this purpose, the bird's arm ends in only one long slender finger, instead of a full hand. To this are attached the quills and small feathers (coverts) on the upper side, which make up the wing. Observe how light all this is: In the first place, the bones are hollow, then the shafts of the feathers are hollow, and, finally, the feathers themselves are made of the most delicate filaments, interlocking and clinging to one another with little grasping hooks of microscopic fineness. Well, how does a bird fly? It seems simple enough to describe, and yet it is a problem that the wisest in such matters have not yet worked out to everybody's satisfaction. This explanation, by the Duke of Argyle, appears to me to be the best: An open wing forms a hollow on its under-side like an inverted saucer; when the wing is forced down the upward pressure of the air caught under this concavity, lifts the bird up, much as you hoist yourself up between the parallel bars in a gymnasium. But he could never in this way get ahead, and the hardest question is still to be answered. Now, the front edge of the wing, formed of the bones and muscles of the fore-arm, is rigid and unyielding, while the hinder margin is merely the soft flexible ends of the feathers; so when the wing is forced down, the air under it, finding this margin yielding the easier would rush out here, and, in so doing, would bend up the ends of the quills, pushing them forward out of the way, which, of course, would tend to shove the bird ahead. This process, quickly repeated, results in the phenomenon of flight.—Ernest Ingersoll, in Scribner for September.

Two Hundred Bushels of Crickets.

In Bull Run valley, Nevada, the crickets have played sad havoc with the growing crops. The ugly pests attacked one wheat field of thirty acres, and in an hour destroyed the whole crop, eating the stalks off close to the ground, and then marched on to other conquests. Millions of crickets that have been killed strew the ground for miles around, while vast numbers found their way into the streams, and have imparted a most disagreeable flavor to the water, rendering it unfit for drinking.

A novel means of cleaning out crickets is the sewing together of three gunny sacks, leaving small holes in the bottom one for the egress of water. This large sack is attached to the end of a sluice-box, placed so that the water will run into it. The people then assemble, armed with bells and boughs, and with a great noise drive the crickets into the stream, which swiftly carries them down through the sluice-box into the bag, and there they are speedily drowned. At Painter's ranch, a few days ago, there was a grand "drive," the result being seventy-five sacks full, or about 225 bushels of crickets.—Sacramento (Cal.) Union.

The Sinews of War.

Upon the ruinously bad terms of 10 per cent. interest, 2 per cent. commission and principal advanced by installments, the Spanish Government has induced, or, rather, semi-coerced, its subject capitalists into promising some $20,000,000 for Cuban war expenses, on security based upon the customs receipts of the island. The loan will become due in ten years, but at the present rate of increasing embarrassment in Spanish finances, it will hardly be met when due.

THE GREAT NAPOLEON.

He captured many thousand guns;
He wrote "The Great" before his name;
And, dying, only left his sons
The recollection of his shame.
Though more than half the world was his,
He died without a rood his own;
And borrowed from his enemies
Six feet of ground to lie upon.
He fought a thousand glorious wars,
And more than half the world was his,
And somewhere now in yonder stars,
Can tell, mayhap, what greatness is!

This was a sad blow, but the great lady whom it annoyed was equal to the emergency. She prevailed on Mme. Carvalho to hide herself behind the organ, and then put a lad with a missal in his hand to stand up in the choir and pretend to sing while the prima donna poured forth her enchanting notes. The chorister boy had an immense success, but they had to send him away next day, so many churches contended to lay hands on him.

All Goods Retailed at Wholesale Prices

This is the Only Secret of Our Immense Trade.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. the impor has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and whol sale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prune Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, yr anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these inter edi+tem profits, No middlemen with us. We are having a great run on Prunes. The Finest

PRUNES ONLY 8c A POUND.

They hardly ever sell lower than 12½c. and when you consider that Dried Apples are 12c, we al know a pound of Prunes will go farther and are considered much richer eating.

TEAS REDUCED

penny saved is two pence got.'' Ten cents reduction on teas. The continued dullness in trad at, coupled with tee large number of failures in the tea trade, has completely demoralized t. Teas we used to sell at $1,40, and lately $1,10 per pound, we now fell at $1 per pound. Eit Hyse n, Imperial or Gunpowder, the very best qualities, now $1 'per pound. The best uncolo now 80c. was 90c, the best Oolong now 35c, was 95c. Other grades as low 25c per pound, up to 60, and 70c per pound.
